On the title page Kurt Vonnegut calls himself "A fourth-generation German-American now living in easy circumstance on Cape Cod (and smoking too much) who, as an American infantry scout hor de compat, as a prisoner of war witnessed the fire bombing of Dresden Germany 'The Florence of the Elbe' a long time ago and survived to tell the tale." He is said to have written "Slaughterhouse Five" to exorcise himself from this Dresden experience, but the film transcription is a bad confession. Other filmmakers, Alain Resnais and Marcel Ophuls come to mind, each have attempted in documentary style to recreate the brutality and the complex moral questions raised by the atrocities of the Second World War. Next to their work, "Slaughterhouse Five" is as simple minded as the Forties propoganda films. The argument can be made that, yes Vonnegut intends his story and structure to be disarmingly simple and the point is we should not dwell in the past. Yet it is hopeful that any exorcism of memories as vivid as those suggested by the fire bombing of Dresden would tell us something of ourselves and not be little more than a cute cosmic conceit.

Archie vs. the IRS.

8:30, Channel 57: Jazz Set

Featuring flutist Bobbi Humphrey and her quintet.

9, Channels 4, 22, 30: "The Thomas Crown Affair".

A splashy, stylish, but altogether dumb Norman Jewison comedy-melodrama about a millionaire who turns swindler and an insurance investigator who poses as his accomplice. Steve McQueen stars, with Faye Dunaway who is intolerable. Some scenes filmed in Boston and extensive use of split-screen technique.

11:30, Channel 3: "Ocean's 11" (1959).

Lewis Milestone directed this tale of a group of former war buddies who team up to execute a multimillion-dollar robbery of Las Vegas gambling casinos.

A not particularly interesting comedy crime caper filled with absolutely miserable performances by Frank Sinatra and his famous group.

Channel 22: "The Crusades" (1935).

An impressive tribute to the great French chemist's pioneering work in the field of medicine, with an Oscar-winning performance by Paul Muni. Marie: Josephine Hutchinson. Annette: Anita Louise. Martel: Donald Woods. (90 min.)

SUNDAY

3:15, Channel 40: "I Married a Witch" (1942).

William F. Buckley grills Frank Mankiewicz on the McGovern phenomena.

9, Channels 5, 8, and 40: "The Out of Towners".

Neil Simon's original script catalogues the horrors of urban life; unfortunately, the barrage is altogether mind-bobbling and, worst of all, isn't very funny. Jack Lemmon and Sandy Dennis are a Manhattan-bound couple whose trip becomes a nightmare. With Sandy Baron, Anne Meara, worth seeing for Meara but worth missing for Dennis.

10, Channels 4, 22, 30: "Night Gallery".

Everyone's favorite (gasp); new season, new time and new format: one segment makes up one half-hour episode. This week has Vincent Price as a sorcerer out to learn the meaning of an ancinet Arabic passage. Grisly happenings result.

MONDAY

8, Channel 57: "The Mind of Man".

What goes on in the human brain? This absorbing BBC report explores scientists' attempts to find out.

Most dramatic are two experiments involving the ancient concept of mind over matter. In New Delhi, a yogi enters an airtight box and then consciously reduces his oxygen intake to one-fourth the amount normally needed to stay alive. In New York, a man accomplishes a similar feat—actually willing his blood pressure down.

Experiments filmed around the world probe the development of the brain in the fetus and infant; how hallucinogens (such as LSD) affect brain cells; brain activity during sleep; how learning and sexual drives cause chemical changes within the brain; and how a surgically severed brain leaves a California woman with a right hand that literally does not know what her left is doing. (2 hrs.)

9, Channels 22, 30: "See No Evil".

Mia Farrow as a blind girl stalked by the killers of her family. A tasteless exercise in fright with gore substituting for suspense.

10, Channels 3, 7: "The Bill Cosby Show".

Anthony Newley and Tim Conway join Bill for a slapstick look at the circus clown.

TUESDAY

8:30, Channel 57: "Video Variations".

Cinematic collages of old and light lend an imaginative touch to this hour of classical music. Eight contemporary artists (including filmmaker Stan VanDerBeek) interpret excerpts from such works as Wagner's "Gotterdammerung." Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony and Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe" ballet. On the sound track: the Boston Symphony Orchestra. A most interesting multi-media program, very much worht seeing on a good color television.

9:30, Channel 27: "Bill Cosby on Prejudice".

A grim satiric monologue by Bill Cosby. On a bare set, Cosby plays a bigot who explains why he hates everyone from women and kids to Poles and Greeks.

11:30, Channels 5, 8, 40: "The Dick Cavett Show".

An all-Olympics show is scheduled, featuring Dan Gable, wrestling gold medalist; sprinter Eddie Hart, disqualified from the 100-meter dash by a scheduling mix-up; and commentator Jim McKay.

WEDNESDAY

8, Channel 57: "A Public Affair Election: 1972".

Presidential politics—a grass-roots view provided by the party chairmen of Bucks County, Pa., a suburban-industrial area split between Senator McGovern and President Nixon. Sander Vanocur is the reporter.

8:30, Channels 5, 8, 40: "Say Goodbye, Maggie Cole".

Susan Hayward stars in an old-fashioned tear-jerker.

Miss Hayward is Maggie Cole, a doctor who is shattered by her husband's death—and who returns to active practice to bury her grief. She finds more: as her affection grows for an engaging teenage patient, she learns the youngster is dying of leukemia.

Channel 57: "Spies".

Fritz Lang's rarely seen "Spies", a silent classic from the director of "M". This 1928 German film unfolds almost like a serial, using bizarre characters, gadgetry and tongue-in-cheek plotting as elements in a battle of wits between superspy Haghi and secret agent 326. The final film in the "Film Odyssey" series.

THURSDAY

Channel 57: "Hollywood Television Theater".

"Day of Absence", a satire about a slice of white society that crumbles when the black work force mysteriously disappears. This adaptation of the 1965 off-Broadway play was first telecast on "PBL" in 1967. With one exception (the reporter), the actors are blacks in white-face, members of the Negro Ensemble Company. Playwright Douglas Turner Ward appears as the mayor.

SRF On 'MUA

(This the first in a series of articles about the programs and services offered by broadcasting stations serving Amherst.)

For UMies, the most important audio communicator during their four-year stay will be WMUA, the student-owned and operated FM station. Located in the engineering building (Marston Hall), WMUA offers an excellent opportunity for University undergraduates to enjoy or participate in broadcasting, with perhaps the best facilities of any student station in New England, and one of the most far-reaching coverage areas. Since its power boost to 1,000 watts at 91.1 FM, WMUA can be heard all over the Pioneer Valley, programming progressive rock, news, public affairs, and UMass sporting events.

Listeners can expect a relatively unstructured flow of music and news from WMUA, with emphasis on involvement between the announcer and the listener. Indicative of such involvement is "ride board" a program heard at 11 a.m., 4 p.m. and 1 a.m. on which listeners can ask for or offer transportation.

WMUA signs-on at 6 a.m. and off at 2 a.m. the next morning. The evenings from 6 to 10 are used primarily for public affairs productions by the station. Both Focus and Cyclebreaker are aired during this time period. On Focus, moderator Ken Mosakowski talks with a western Massachusetts political and social service leader. Cyclebreaker, in its third year of weekly broadcast, is a potpourri of interviews, documentaries, and editorials. Other public affairs programs on WMUA include Campaign '72, of particular interest this fall, the The University Week in Review.

The twelve hours of musical programming on 91.1 FM are as varied as the people producing them. "Generally, we try and let people play what they want," says Laredo, the station's program director. "Once our board engineers have show that they know what radio is all about, we give them a relatively free hand."

Unjama Drum is a tri-weekly production by and for the black community, and is aired three nights weekly on WMUA. This year "The Drum," as staff members nickname the program, will concentrate on political issues revolving around the Springfield black community.

WMUA's student management doesn't like to be compared with WHCN, WHVY, or any of the other commercial rock stations serving the area. "We aren't any of these people, and we're not trying to be," stresses station manager John Zizis. "We think we have our own identity, and people are listening to 'MUA because we aren't an imitation."

WMUA has a built-in advantage over many stations because it is prohibited from airing commercials by its FCC license. Like WFCR and WAMH, two other Amherst FM stations, (each will be treaied in comming articles) WMUA is a "public" station committed to non-profit, educational operation, both for its staff and audience.

News is an important part of the sound on WMUA. From 6 to 9 each morning the station provides brief, primarily national news summaries at the hour and half-hour. Extended fifteen minute broadcasts of news at noon and 3 p.m. cover national stories in detail, and begin to look at the days events in and around UMass.

WMUA's news spectaculars are heard at seven and eleven weeknights. These broadcasts take one-half hour look at world, national and local news, with opportunities for the station's news staff to comment on stories.

The most significant additon to WMUA's fall programming lineup is the beginning of "SRT" productions during the evening half-hour roundups. The "Special Reports Team" is made up of a group of WMUA newsmen who prepare more far reaching and interpretive "soft news" than would be possible in a regular newscast. SRT productions will be stylistically innovative and more lengthy than tradition news. They will usually focus on University events.

Canterbury Tales

The U. Mass. Theatre's original production of Chaucer's Canterbury Tales, which had its world premiere on the University last spring, will be presented for a second time on Sept. 21-23. Canterbury Tales, conceived and directed by Ms. Marya Bednerik and Ms. Janet Craft of the Theatre faculty, will be the U.Mass. entry in this year's American College Theatre Festival in Washington, D.C. Two years ago, the University Theatre's production of The Clouds by Aristophanes was selected to play in the national festival.

Six of Chaucer's most popular tales (Wife of Bath's, Prioress's, Miller's, Pardoner's, Clerk's, and the Merchant's) were selected for their variety of expression and humor. They are explored for their dramatic quality by an ensemble of six performers.

Working with only six people enables the ensemble to display a variety of talents in a great variety of roles. Each performer singularly and with the group is given the opportunity to explore the dramatic nature of Chaucer's poetry through dance, movement, and music. The performers are led to their themes chiefly through improvisational techniques.

During the world premiere production, local reviewers greeted Canterbury Tales very favorably. The U.Mass. production was described variously as being "as colorful as a carousel, as graceful as a minuet, as modern as plexiglass, and as creative as tomorrow's inventions" (Francine Trevens, Springfield Daily News) and as "an interesting evening of mime, dance, and dialogue which captured the 'bawdy' irreverence of Chaucer's tales" (Rusty Blossom, Amherst Record).

The scene designer is Jeff Fiala, technical director is Nick Scott, the costumes are designed by Elizabeth Hopper, and the lighting is designed by Mr. Fiala and John Woods.

Reservations and tickets for Canterbury Tales will be available beginning Monday, Sept. 18 in the Bartlett Auditorium Box Office (tel. 545-2579). Tickets are $1.00 for U.Mass students with I.D. and $1.50 for the general public. All performances will be presented at Bartlett Auditorium at 8:30.

Pantomine Circus

The Lotte Goslar Pantomine Circus will perform two different programs when it visits the UMass Sept. 21-22.

This engagement, part of the Coordinated Dance Residency Project for 1972-73, is sported by grants from the National Endowment for the Arts, Massachusetts Council on Arts and Humanities, and the University's Fine Arts Council.

"One does not hesitate to use the word genius in describing this artist." The "Los Angeles Times" has written. "In a world of her own creation, peopled with blissfully detached, supremely idiotic beings ... she can metamorphose herself into an elf or an elk, a sylph or a sofa; she could undoubtedly braid herself if she desired."

Music

Chamber Music

This Sunday, September 24, at 8 p.m., The Smith College Department of Music will offer the first of this season's Sunday evening recitals in Sage Hall. The recital of vocal and instrumental chamber music will be presented by Lory Wallfisch, harpsichord and piano; Ernst Wallfisch, viola and Viola da Gamba; and Jane Struss, contralto.

The program for the evening will include the cantata "Jubilate Domino" by Dietrich Buxtehude; "Lachrimae," an "ayre" for voice, viol, and harpsichord by John Dowland; "Lachrymae," reflections on Dowland's "ayre" by Benjamin Britten; and Two Songs (Opus 91) and the Sonata in F minor (Opus 120, no. 1), both by Johannes Brahms.

It should be immediately obvious that this program is formed of works which are related to each other in diverse ways. Buxtehude's "Jubilate Domino" is possibly one of his strongest works, and without doubt a most brilliant contribution to the soloistic literature of the Viola daGamba. Brahms' Two Songs are of similar importance to the viola in conjunction with a voice.

Britten named his "Lachrymae" Reflections rather than Variations because the eleven short sections of his work are not derived from the melody of Dowland's "Lachrimae", but based on a theme by Britten which is inspired by the mood of Dowland's song. However, the Dowland tune appears (in quote) in variation No. 6.

The Sonata Op. 120 No. 1 by Brahms closes the program, not only because it is one of the composer's great works, but also because it offers the best possible company for the wonderful Songs, Op. 91.

Marching Band Halftime

This Saturday there will be an exhilerating musical happening during the halftime show of the Maine game. The University Marching Band will be performing hits "a la" Simon and Garfunkle. The show will include: "The Sound of Silence." "59th Street Bridge Song," a trumpet feature, "Faikin' It," "Mrs. Robinson," and a percussion feature; "Scarborough Fair."

A Clockwork Orange (1971)

Stanley Kubrick's blistering answer to B. F. Skinner. An egnimatic picture, beautifully designed and played with sharp, cool precision, but oddly disturbing and disappointing. The time is our immediate future, the place England where government-controlled prosperity has brought on the rise of juvenile thugs. Our hero is a guiless, wicked young man named Alex who rapes and maims his victims to his own rendition of "Singing In The Rain." His charm and the film's have the same immediate appeal. Kubrick takes off with the audience under his thumb and has enough deft devices at hand to hold them till his point is made. The problem is that it's so congenial that the audience almost feels compelled to sneak around the message. Alex, the young hoodlum, is caught and made "social" through a revolutionary rehabilitation process which robs him of his free will. The catch of the picture is so has the audience. The source is Anthony Burgess's novel neatly transcribed to the screen. The music is Beethoven Rossini and Walter Carlos doing a Moaged "Ode tTo Joy." Alex is engagingly played by Malcolm MacDowell. Won New York Film Critics Awards as Best Picture and Director of 1971. Campus Cinemas, Hadley.

The Cool World

This film, directed by Shirley Clarke, is a penetrating look into the urban ghetto and the life of a young black, Duke Custis, who assumes leadership of a street gang. Most of the characters play themselves and create a picture of frustration, anger, and victimization that is rivaled by few other films dealing with the ghetto environment of the last decade. Released nearly five years ago without much fanfare, The Cool World is a film that will leave few unmoved. Southwest Student Center, Hampden Dining Commons, 7 and 9. Monday, September 25.

Bluebeard

Richard Burton is Bluebeard, Joey Heatherton is the wife who survives; Before her Burton kills six. They range from Raquel Welch, found cold in an icebox along with a prostitute who didn't as much as get a wedding ring, through Verna Lisi whose singing of the Twenties Hit Parade abruptly ends with her death. An updating of the Bluebeard legend to the early Twentieth century in an attempt at camp, but it's only silly. Edward Dmytryk directs with full knowledge this trash with only a flash of wit in the Lisi sequence. The film did initiate

St. Jacques as plain-clothesmen from Harlem. Their task is to catch a photographer who is involved with heroin and admired by the local population. More farcial and not quite as good as its mentor. Amherst Cinema, Amherst; Calvin Theater, Northampton.

Everything You Ever Wanted To Know About Sex (But Were Afraid To Ask)
Six questions from David Reuben's maddening best seller are given an intensive comic treatment by Woody Allen. Each of the skits opens with a title card ("What Happens During Ejaculation?") and Allen proceeds with a sharpness that many have felt tasteless. He probably would have been an errand boy during the Inquisition. Each skit seems a satire on a particular film genre: the futuristic fantasy, the Fifties sci–fi film, the Antonioni films, etc. Allen is a maddening funny man and his film is best when he is disarmingly cool about incredibly ridiculous situations. Gene Wilder, amoured by a sheep, lovingly carrying her through a hotel lobby; Lou Jacobi in drag coquettishly dancing in front of a mirror; or Allen himself as one tiny sperm having an identity crisis during the final moments of injaculation. A large supporting cast of cameo performers; John Carradine, Louise Lasser, Burt Reynolds, Tony Bennett, and Lynn Redgrave are prominent. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

Fiddler on the Roof
A mundane version of the longest running musical in Broadway history, The disappointing epic comes away by director Norman Jewison who has employed needless flashy techniques in the transition. The musical becomes bottom-heavy and static when blown up on a Super Panavision screen and blasted out of twelve stereo speakers. The show itself has grace, charm, and a natural warmth that are all but eliminated here. Instead every moment reeks with phony folklines and cornball routines. The excellent Bock-Harnick score has been homogenized in musical interludes embarrassing at best, even Topol, generally considered the best of the stage Tevye's, becomes a glaring caricature of a poor, Russian peasant. An overrated, ill-conceived, charmless musical

The First Men In The Moon (1965)
An often engaging comedy--fantasy adapted from a Jules Verne story about an eccentric scientist who catapults himself and some unwilling assistants onto the moon. In its tongue–in–cheek niavete, the film evokes the memory of "A Trip To The Moon" and the good humor of Melies other early, turn-of-the-century films. The production itself is quite handsome and the acting a cut above the usual B level similair films seemed plagued. At the Merrill Science Center, Amherst College, Friday, September 22, 7 and 9:30.

Foolish Wives (1922)
Erich Von Strohiem wrote, directed, and co-starred in this tragi-farce sex drama. An American wife vacationing in Europe who has an affair with an international swindler posing as nobility. Strohiem gives an extravagant performance as the swindler and his film is one of the few entertaining and satisfying sex comedies of the twenties.
Campus Center Senate Chambers, Monday, September 24, 8.

The Godfather
A straight-forward melodrama alout the rise of a Mafia dynasty. Reverent and sympathetic to the exploits of the bloodletting Corleone family, the violence is seen as a means to incorporate identity. In all its use of old techniques, the film suggests a new realism and understanding of the ruthlessness and scope of the crime empire today. Marlon Brando as the family partriach takes a relatively small part and makes it memorably moving. His supporting cast, Al Pacino, James Cann, Sterling Hayden, are all competent. Directed by Francis Ford Coppolla, from the novel by Mario Puzo; an altogether extraordinary experience. At the Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

The Heart Is A Lonely Hunter (1968)
Carson McCuller's first novel is an erratic, beautifully written often devistating account of loneliness in a Southern town during the depression. The film updates the story, more out of budgetary considerations than any attempt at relevancy, and tames some of its bleakness and the unhappy ending. It hasn't much power now and the pathes are that of similar Hollywood films from the forties. It does contain a beautifully tender performance by Alan Arkin as the deaf mute who acts as the confidante of four lonely people. He won the New York Film Critics Award as Best Actor in 1968.
Sage Hall, Smith College, Saturday, September 23, 7:15 and 9:30.

The Last Laugh (1925)
Probably the most visually fluid of all silent films. It has but one title, the camera and the acting portray the story of a lordly hotel porter who is demoted to a washroom attendent. This humiliating act causes him to lose family, home, friends, and his self-respect. Emil Jannings gives a clear, subtle, and encompasing performance as the porter. The film remains one of the finest instances of successful collaboration; in Germany during the 20's; every technical point is matchless. The camerawork by Karl Freund swept around the action, mullifying the necessity of titles. F. W. Morrau's direction emphasized the internal consciousness of the porter making the film a striking contrast to the frivileus and moralizing Hollywood films of the same period. Campus Center Senate Chambers, Tuesday, September 26, 8.

Clark Gable and Charles Laughton in the original Mutiny On The Bounty (1935) set for next Wednesday night on campus.

Last Of The Red Hot Lovers
The seven year itch multiplied by three; a Jewish husband, bordering on middle age, decides to seduce three comic prototypes in his mother's apartment while his wife is on vacation. The script is by Neil Simon, and falls into his mold of conventional wisecracks; they're funny in the usual Broadway way. Alan Arkin plays the husband, his attempted amoured are Paula Prentiss, Renee Taylor, and Sally Kellerman. Gene Saks directed. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

Let's Scare Jessica To Death
A mentally-deranged wife encounters the supernatural in rural Connecticut-or at least thinks she does-in this interesting, yet ultimately unsatisfying horror film of clashing genres. It can't quite make up its mind whether it's a psychological thriller along the lines Shirley Jackson or straight horror film. It was made on a shoestring by director John Hancock who obviously aimed a bit higher than his means allowed. His cast, mostly assembled from television, features Zohra Lampert as Jessica, and Kevin O'Connor, Barton Heyman, and a beautiful old house where the eerie tale takes place, Hadley Drive-In, Hadley.

The Man
Irving Wallace's best seller about a black man who becomes the President when the roof caves in on the Presidential party in Germany should have best been left to gather dust on some paperback bookshelf. Adapted by Rod Serling, it's filled with remarks like: "The white house isn't near white enough for me tonight," spoken by a reactionary Southern politician; or "How do you resign from the first family?" whined by the President's militant daughter. Lines like these haven't been spoken since Irving Berlin's "Mr. President" closed a decade ago on Broadway. The logic of the film works upon the assumption that when the President is killed when a German palace falls upon him, an advisor explains "You know these German castles." Originally made for television, all the bite and excitement have been tactfully played down as to not offend anyone. Joseph Sargent directs as if he invented the close-up. James Earl Jones is competently harried as the President; he should know better. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

Manhunt (1941)
Watching a big game hunter settling down at the edge of a forest, we suddenly find that he is at Berchtesgarten and has Adolf Hitler centered in the crosshairs. It's just for the fun of a "sporting kill;' he wouldn't really shoot, he says–or perhaps he would, the Gestapo say. A strange sort of thriller and a fine film. With John Carradine and George Sanders members of the Gestapo. Directed by Fritz Lang. Hampden Dining Commons, Sunday, September 24, 7:15.

Marjoe
A cinema documentary by Howard Smith and Sarah Kernochan of the "Village Voice" about a kid brought up from the age of three to be a revivalist preacher, though his true wish is to follow in Mick Jagger's footsteps as a rock superstar. Leon Russell recently introduced him at a West Coast concert and his visits to the talk shows are beginning to make him one of television's most fascinating personalities. His film works sometimes and his story is told with a good deal of sympathetic irony that makes Marjoe seem less a shyster and more a victim of circumstance. Wednesday, Showcase Cinemas.

Mother (1926)
Directed by V.I. Pudovkin. This masterpiece depicting the abortive Russian revolution of 1905 is considered by Paul Rotha to be one of the finest works in cinematic history. With Mother Pudovkin established himself as one of the silent cinima's greatest directors. Not only is he masterful in producing acute emotional excitement, but his sensitive portrayal of the individual characters caught up in the mass wave of revolution creates some of the most humanistically profound moments in all of film. Thompson 104, Sunday, September 24, 7 and 9.

Mutiny On The Bounty (1935)
Adapted from the popular Charles Nordheff, James Newman Hall novel. This sea epic is greatly dependent upon the three masterful lead performances for its legendary success. The incident which acted as the story's genesis was the British Navy's most famous mutiny, the Bounty Affair of 1787. A Tahiti-bound ship is tyranically ruled by the sadistic Captain Bligh, until the crew led by the Bounty's mate, Fletcher Christian, revolt. Charles Laughton gives his most masterful performance as Bligh, and Franchot Tone and Clark Gable are fine as the mutineers. They were all nominated for Oscars, the only time in history that three actors received nominations for the same film. Wednesday - September 27, 7, 10:45 Campus Center Aud.

The New Centurions
The policeman as superstar. Rome had its centurions to guard the frontiers from invading huns, we have the police ours to protect us from...Better acted than it probably deserved but only marginally entertaining. The plot moves in small bursts and doesn't seem to go anywhere, except into the bedroom of the worried wife of a cop where she faithfully awaits her husband return each night. The film could have best been a public service spot. With George C. Scott, our best film actor, and Stacey Keach, who may well become our best new actor. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

Nicholas and Alexandria
A rich, long, respectful, expensive spectacle which may impress you with regal elegance if it doesn't bore you to death first. Franklin Schaffner, who won an Oscar last year for his sweeping direction of Patton comes back in a restrained manner that's as dull as it is controlled. The last of the Czars, Nicholas and Alexandria, live in comfortable ennui far from the storm brewing outside and this is where the film fails. Instead of compelling history, we have, at best, paltry soap opera masquerading for the real thing. Spectacular enough to hold interest yet hardly compelling enough for all the effort involved. Academy of Music, Northampton.

Night of the Hunter (1955)
Directed by Charles Laughton. Stars Robert Mitchum. The only film directed by Laughton makes one wish there were more. Ignored in its initial release, it has become a cult movie primarily by word of mouth. Robert Mitchum is a traveling preacher with "love" tatooed on the kunckles of one hand, "hate" on the other. Pauline Kael: "This Protestant fable is, despite its peculiar overtones of humor, one of the most frightening films ever made."

Slaughterhouse Five
Kurt Vonnegut's novel about one man's redemption from the horror of his wartime experiences has been brought to the screen with a good feeling for Vonnegut's cadences and ironic situations. But its all shamelessly hollow. For more see the review elsewhere in the issue. Wednesday, Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

Superfly
Gordon Parks Jr., the son of the famous photographer and movie director (The Learning Tree and Shaft) has fashioned the slickest, sharpest, and most exciting or inner city thrillers. Ron O'Neal, a fine stage actor soon to be seen in his award-winning performance in the film version of No Place To Be Somebody, is Superfly, a cocaine dealer who begins the pinch and wants out. He and his partner plot a complicated plan for their escape to a Carribean Island. A cooly photographed, compently acted, and intelligently written crowd-pleaser, looks to be one of this season's most successful films.

The Thin Man (1935)
The most memorable "teams" of the Thirties were Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers, Clark Gable and Joan Crawford (in any number of films), Jeanette McDonald and Nelsen Eddy, and, of course, William Powell and Myrna Loy as Nick and Nora Charles. Their series of sophisticated comedy thrillers remain the most sustained and enjoyable of any of the popular duos. MGM still claims to receive letters demanding the team reunite. This, the first and the best, of the five film series. Adapted from Dashiell Hammetts crime novel of the twenties, the "Thin Man" refers to the murderers first victim. Audiences, oddly enough remembered the title for the not-so-thin Powell. It has been said the domestic scenes mark the first time an affectionate, sophisticated, marriage was portrayed on the screen. If the title strikes a distant but responsive chord it could be because Nick and Nora reappeared in the late fifties in a television series of the same title with Peter Lawford and Phyllis Kirk. Campus Center Auditorium, Wednesday, September 27, 9:30.

Willard (1971)
A neurotic young man discovers he can communicate with rats. He then has his rodent friend perform his nasty work in settling a domestic squabble with a boorish uncle. Rather nerveracking and disappointing, hardly a shudder to speak of but a wealth of close-ups of rat's teeth, with Elsa Lancaster and Ernest Borgnine.

Letters To The Editor

Yesterday's Collegian: A Review

To the Editor:
Occasionally the vicissitudes of university existence are such to explode one's consciousness in rushes of joy and cosmic harmony. Today, however, this did not happen.

I refer to the Collegian yesterday (9/21/72). A not unusual edition but a convenient moment to examine. Because it demonstrates so neatly, so precisely the possibilities of false consciousness (in the Marxist sense) that it is inspiration.

The SUG Board affair is most amusing. It is like the CC garage. On the top level all is open, exposed to light, but at the bottom entry is most complicated. What has seduced whom where?

On page 2 good Dean Field complains about scalping, here, unlike anywhere else, meaning selling tickets for less than cost. Apparently to sell one's football tickets is naughty, even punishable. And if one doesn't like football, has no use for her/his tickets, well tough shit, I guess.

Moving on, the editorial page provides two semi-precious gems. Matt Tackeff is quintessential. I know Matt; I might even say I appreciate Matt. In the literal use of words he is most accomplished.

And Bob Sprague has his 111 sophomores. Now Bob worked as asst't Head of Summer Counseling. His wife was a summer counselor. So perhaps his interview of all those apparently satisfied random UMies is a little bit more agreeable than someone else might find.

And the Redman issue. Obscured in origins (a student senate bill last May, not a Whitmore excitement), misunderstood in intent, it has enthused a flock of letters. My own solution is to interest a beer company in subsidizing the team in exchange for advertising: UMass Lowenbraus.

The new library must have psychic consequences for us. It would be curious if the Health services have been sought for an increase in male impotence.

A closing suggestion: a large cup of orange juice can be had for 25¢ at Whitmore as opposed to 50¢ in the Hatch.

Have a good day.

Scalping

To the Editor:
The DAILY COLLEGIAN of Sept. 21 contained an article about the student practice of 'scalping' their student tickets to football games. According to the article, the practice is condemned by Dean Field as similar to shoplifting or robbing the other students. He is in fact quoted as saying, "whatever amount of money that is derived from the sale of those tickets is in effect, denied the athletic program." Indeed, the problem is more complicated than that. Each student is required to pay an athletic fee for $30/year in return for which he receives option tickets which in effect entitle him to go to the football games or to lose out on his money.

Of course there are those of us among the student body with a spirit of entrepreneurship and a desire to recoup our losses to the university. There are the people to whom Dean Field refers as scalpers. The notice printed on the tickets that resale is prohibited amounts in fact to nothing more than a YELLOW DOG CONTRACT. The university loves it when you don't claim your tickets. That way they can keep your money and sell your tickets too. The Dean's closing words in the COLLEGIAN are all too appropriate: "I only hope that the students will cooperate in this manner by conforming to the policy." Maybe a better policy would be no student athletic fee and pay as you go for the football tickets.

Racist Attitudes

To the Editor:
The problem of racism is the worst, the deepest, most complex problem in the country. Every time the white people have to deal with this problem they respond with symbolic appeasement. That's followed by a sophistication of attitudes and not necessarily a reduction of racist attitudes. I do not ignore some significant changes that have occurred in the United States. However, changes are too slow–particularly for a country that is moving faster.

After blacks have been down/inferior for so many generations, and after being "the problem", I am very surprised there is not more killing. There may be time left, but the problem of racism is too massive to allow for individual efforts to be anything but massive in response. A paraphrased American Indian saying is that a man who lives an unnatural life cannot die a natural death. Well, white folks, do we really want it to come to unnatural deaths for everybody.

Take the time. Take the time to create within yourself–search hard. If you can avoid the mythological intimidation of the heavy rap with a black person, seek their perspective. The whites started it all and are perpetuating the problem. If white folks do not give some of their power, soon it is going to be taken. Then this darkest of ages will flare up to an end–if the pain of the white status quo's affect on others is not understood and altered.

As college students, read lyrics of Chicago's song "Dialogue" and as humans read the same group's poem, "When all the Laughter Dies in Sorrow", you can take the time to understand. If you don't then when all the killing is over no one will be left to realize how futile our lives–all of them–were.

Change has got to come. The Student Senate has finally after all these years, created the forum. Now if all the whites concerned with UMass can only have pride they've been part of a healthy change.

Stop screaming over a couple of sore toes. Let's open our eyes.

War Tax Resistance

To the Editor:
I would like to share with my fellow students and all the readers of the Daily Collegian the following letter which I sent to the telephone company this week.

"Once more my wife and I have subtracted the War Tax from our Telephone bill because the war still continues.

"This tragic and costly conflict has lasted so long that I sometimes wonder if the American people who support President Nixon fully realize just how long it has been.

"Our war against Nazi Germany lasted 1,244 days, from December 11, 1941, until May 8, 1945. Since Mr. Nixon took office on January 20, 1969, the Vietnam war has gone on for 1,344 days. This is 100 days more than, as Senator Harold Hughes recently said before Congress, 'it took us in the big war to build an Army from scratch, invade the continents of Africa and Europe, and defeat the greatest aggressive military power that had yet been seen on earth'."

The killing, the tourment, the incredibly costly effort in Southeast Asia has gone on long enough. Please join our family in becoming telephone tax resistors. Write today to WAR TAX RESISTANCE, 339 Lafayette Street, New York, New York, 10012.

Editorial Points

Consider this quote: "Those who have had a chance for four years and could not produce a peace should not be given another chance." Now consider that the man who said this is one Richard Milhouse Nixon, during the 1968 presidential campaign. Doesn't it make you feel like we've been made fools of by this man? Even if you can't stomach George McGovern, does it make sense to return this man to office?

Selling tickets which students are forced to pay for at a price which is less than the student pays is wrong, we are told. This is an issue the Administration really cannot afford to raise. If the SUG Board is on the hot seat now, won't the Athletic Council be next?

For those of you who read the Editorial page, you may have noticed that one of our regular columnists always ends his column with the words Hoa Binh. We won't tell you what it means, but we will say that last year he ended them with the word Shalom and the year before he ended them with the word Peace. Got any ideas now?

Chet Came Back

To the Editor:
The boys once invincible, once young, joined in the town this week where hell once was lifted to an alter, the Holy Mother was raped with guffaws, and things haven't been the same since they became what they are.

Skinny Stanley from Indiana pulled in at nine, about the time of morning he used to drag in eyes bloodshot but pockets bulging with poker green. Stan's a D.A. now in the Posey County heartland-except that he was supposed to be a poet.

Wonder Boy Hopkins was already in the garage silkscreening pitch paint onto yellow slabs. Sid the Kid arrived about 11 from Sausalito and claims he dropped devils at each state line along the speedy pikes. Booby the legendary "Hard-on From Hadley" whoopsied his '62 MG to the front door at 3; and old Kamakazi Mosakowski had a schedule that would kill us all by 7.

The election was only six days away, and it was Jimmy Collins' first try for office. We had come back to the valley mostly to get him in, and like the exacting movement of an antiqued grandfather clock we moved through the days in precision until our hands struck through the air in triumph.

But somehow we were also there to be invincible again, to catch time daydreaming in the Berkshires just for a week, to linger in a field house waving to resounding cheers of future glories since passed. And we must now each listlessly return to what is finally real, not quite sure what is a dream or how one is supposed to be old.

Register Here

To the Editor:
There are a great many good and valid reason why every student 18 or older at this school should register to vote. I am not suggesting that any person necessarily knows how they will vote in November, but it's a certainty that if they are not registered by October 7, they are not going to have a chance to make the decision when the opportunity occurs.

Some students chose to vote by Absentee Ballot in Tuesday's Primary. Twenty students who planned to vote by Absentee Ballot didn't receive them from their towns until Tuesday! Those twenty students didn't vote and couldn't vote.

One reason I am concerned that eligible students register to vote in Amherst is because then they are sure that if they decide to vote they can quickly, easily and definitely cast their vote!

If voters decide to vote by Absentee Ballot they should immediately apply for their ballots. If potential voters prefer to be sure they can vote on November 7 they can register to vote in Amherst at the Town Clerk's Office at the Town Hall every week day. Please be sure that you can vote by registering where it makes sense.

15th John Adams Independent

By STUART GONDELMAN

Following the lead of Cance, Moore and Pierpont in Southwest is the T-5 project in John Adams Tower. T-5, which includes the 2nd through 15th floor in John Adams, is totally student run. It has a democratically elected student government and twelve floor counselors.

One of the precedent-setting ideas of the T-5 project is the separation of the jobs of counselor and floor representative, according to Mike Pipp, representative of the 7th floor.

The student elected floor representatives handle all the project's administrtive work. Besides taking care of the floor's administrative problems, such as keys, mail, room assignments, and the like, he said each floor rep has some specific administrative detail to handle for the whole project (bills, security, housing, etc.). The floor representatives also serve as the project's legislative body.

Since the floor representatives are handling all the administrative chores, the counselors can relate to the student "on a more personal level", said John Szewczyk, 7th floor drug counselor. The counselors have certain job designations he explained. In addition to counseling his own floor, Szewdzyk explained that a counselor is expected to perform a specialized task in one of the following areas: racism, the Draft, community development and human relations, academics, peer sex and drugs. He added that one counselor works as student-staff coordinator: serving a communications link between the T-5 Assembly and the counselors, coordinating counselor activities, and acting as a program and resource person to the Head Counselor.

All the counselors were carefully selected by a screening committee in the dorm. Each has experience within the field he chose, explained Szewczyk. Nigerian-born Olu Makindre, Head Counselor, functions as an overseer and coordinator of programs and counseling. He is there for reference only and has no say in the administration of the floors. Students within T-5 are urged to use the conseling facilities offered to them.

Along with the library, already in use on the fifth floor, the T-5 project has other plans it intends to implement. According to Pipp, plans for the twelfth floor lounge include a school supply store and space for typewriter, adding machine and photocopier services. For leisure time use pool tables, ping pong tables, pinball machines, and a reopening of the snack bar for all students in Southwest are also planned.

CASIAC To Tutor

By GARY TWARDZIK

The College of Arts and Sciences Information and Advising Center (CASIAC) has instituted a tutoring service for students with academic difficulty.

Qualified undergraduates chosen by their departments have been designated "University tutors" and are available at the nominal rate of two dollars an hour to tutor students in any academic area. This service is offered to all University students.

This program is a response to the suggestions of counselors, heads of residence, and faculty members who have dealt with students dropping out for academic reasons, according to Mrs. Cherry Michelman, the director of the CASIAC tutoring service. "These people concur in the belief that many of these students could survive successfully at the University if tutoring aid were provided to them before the situation becomes critical," Mrs. Michelman explained.

Mrs. Michelman feels that the tutoring service will successfully rectify the academic difficulties of most students. "A great many valuable services in the University go unused because students are unaware that they exist," she said. "We don't want this to happen with the tutoring service."

The service is available immediately, and any interested student should telephone Mrs. Michelman at 5-2803.

SW To Have Movable Decor

By JEFFREY LEVIN

An experiment in living conditions is being conducted on the thirteenth floor of T 5 (formerly John Adams Tower and Middle Houses). This project, due for completion about October 15, will be covered in depth by the MDC, with photographs upon its conclusion.

This fall, residents of the thirteenth floor did not move onto a floor typical of a tower in the Southwest, but into partially-completed color-coordinated rooms with wall-to-wall carpeting and unique new furniture. The furniture, much of which has not yet arrived is designed so that students may move any piece, be it a bookcase, desk, cabinet, or mirror, anywhere in the room. According to Frank Tolentino, floor representative, the beds, which have not yet arrived at present, will be self-making and convertible into couch-type seats.

There are numerous facets of the experiment, among which is an apartment suitable for four people, and a system of exchange of equipment whereby students may rent extra items for a minimal fee. Another aspect of the project has the corridors and the lounge slated for refurnishing that will be more applicable to student's needs.

The experiment being conducted is an outgrowth of a concept developed by Raymond Werbe, Director of the Office of Environmental Concerns, in conjunction with Dr. John Hunt, Director of the Southwest Residential College. This concept requires that a student be allowed to change the interior of his room to his liking, hence, he is able to establish a degree of ownership.

According to Mr. Werbe, funds for the research and planning of the project were received from a grant contributed by the Educational Facilities Laboratories (Ford Foundation), and the work is being done by the Herman Miller Research Corporation of Ann Arbor, Michigan.

Asked for their opinions of the almost-completed renovation, floor members responded favorably. As sophomore Dave Levine replied, "It's better than it was."

Seafood is Safe

BOSTON (AP) — Massachusetts officials and seafood dealers and restaurants sought to reassure an anxious public Thursday that seafood is safe to eat.

"Any seafood you can buy in restaurants and stores as of Wednesday is safe to eat," said state Health Commissioner William J. Bicknell.

Clam flats in Massachusetts, New Hampshire, and parts of Maine remained closed to harvesting because of the "red tide" of organisms that had earlier resulted in an embargo on sale of many kinds of shellfish.

Prison Declared Unfit For Man

PARCHMAN, Miss. (LNS) — A federal judge ruled, in the second week of September, that a state prison in Parchman, Mississippi, was "unfit for human habitation under any modern concept of decency" after he found "intolerable patterns of physical mistreatment" of prisoners. The prison, operated as a farm producing cotton, soybeans, livestock pigs, poultry and dairy products, is located in the Delta region of the state and imprisons 1,900 inmates, two-thirds of whom are black.

In his ruling, Chief Judge William C. Keady, of the U.S. District Court for the Northern District of Mississippi, noted the conditions that led him to his decision.

--The entire waste disposal system of the prison has been condemned by state health and pollution agencies. Open sewage provides a breeding ground for rats. Water supplies are contaminated and at most of the work sites are "approximately half enough for inmate personnel."

--Inmates in the maximum security unit are disciplined by placing them in solitary confinement, "naked, without any hygienic materials, and often without adequate food." The only sanitary facilities provided in the 6' by 6' "dark hole" is a 6-inch opening in the middle of the floor that will flush to dispose of human waste.

The state law permits inmates to be confined in the "dark hole" for 24 hours but inmates have frequently been confined for 48 or 72 hours. They are not allowed to wash and the cell isn't cleaned during that period.

--Prison officials continually brutalize inmates. According to the judge they "administer milk of magnesia as a form of punishment, strip inmates of their clothes, turn the fan on inmates while naked and wet, deprive inmates of mattresses, hygienic materials and adequate food." They also handcuff inmates to the fences, and cells for long periods of time, shoot at them and use a cattle prod to keep them moving or standing still.

The judge cites 30 inmates wounded by gunshot, 29 inmates shot at and 52 physically beaten. Trusties, untrained but armed, are selected to guard other prisoners by prison officials through a corruption-riddled process.

No immediate steps have been taken to change the conditions at Parchman. Keady has scheduled a conference for October 16 to establish "specific timetables" for altering the "impermissable" prison practices.

The Dikes of North Viet: Under Deliberate Attack

PARIS (LNS) - A team of observers, many of them technically experts in geology and soil engineering, recently returned from a visit to North Vietnam where they had gone under the auspices of the International Commission of Investigation on War Crimes in Vietnam to study the effects of the intensive American bombing and to determine whether war crimes had been committed.

Their unanimous conclusion was that the American bombing was deliberately aimed at the destruction of human lives, and the means of existence, rather than against military targets in the strict sense.

In this context they found that the bombing of the vital dike system of the DRV has been systematic and is intended to break the dikes and cause the death of millions through drowning and famine – two inevitable results of the flooding if the dikes burst. They reported extensive damage to the dikes of the Red River which have been under heavy air attack since May.

Participating in the Commission – which stayed in North Vietnam from July 29 to August 13 visiting a variety of installations and freely interviewing the inhabitants – were: Swedish lawyer Hans Goran Frank; Ramsay Clark, President Johnson's Attorney General; Sean McBride, from Ireland, President of Amnesty International; Danish deputy Frode Jakobsen; Soviet Doctor Nina Kolesnikova; Gregori Lochkin, the Secretary of the USSR-Vietnam Solidarity Committee; Swedish movie directors Lennart Manmer and Ingela Remare, Daniel Mandelbaum, a French enginner; and Yves Lacoste, French geographer and professor at the College de France.

At a meeting in Paris, September 13, sponsored by the Union of Vietnamese Intellectuals in France, the French members of the Commission reported on its findings.

The Geographer Yves Lacoste pointed out the difference between the all out attack on the dikes now under way and the bombings of the Johnson era.

GM Signs Pact With The Japanese

DETROIT (LNS) - In a move which would seem to contradict the purported goals of Nixon's "New Economic Policy" which aims at enabling the U.S. to better "compete" with Japanese corporations, General Motors recently announced an about-to-be-completed deal with three Japanese companies, Isuzu Motors, Ltd., Kawasaki Heavy Industries Ltd., and C. Itoh and Co. will join with GM in forming GM Allison Japan Ltd. in November. The company will import, manufacture and sell automatic transmissions and gas turbine engines for heavy-duty commercial vehicles in Japan.

"For the time being, sales of these products shall be carried out by importing them from Detroit diesel Allison division of GM," the official General Motors statement read. "It is anticipated that sales volume of these products will be gradually increased and later, production thereof be domestically (Japan) launched."

GM officials say that the new company has set a sales target of $5.5 million by 1977. GM will control 50% of the operation Isazu and Kawasaki 20% and C. Itoh 10%.

This is not the first time that the not-so-competitive competitors have collaborated to each other's advantage. In the summer of 1971 GM bought into Isuzu and a report in the New York Times this past winter speculated that GM is negotiating to take over Toyota's entire U.S. marketing operation.

Allende Facing Santiago Protest

Salvador Allende is facing large protests over inflation and the rising cost of food.

SANTIAGO, Chile (LNS) — Deaths due to political violence have become an almost weekly occurrence in Chile. In the last month seven people have been killed and hundreds wounded. Violent street demonstrations have made it dangerous to go on an errand in downtown Santiago, and after 10 o'clock at night in the rich sections of Santiago, women have been beating empty pots and pans in protest against the government. The racket created by the pans has been heard for miles every night for the past few weeks.

The current crisis dates from the beginning of August when the Popular Unity government of Salvador Allende–a Marxist-oriented government elected two years ago–devalued the national currency and raised the price of most items of popular consumption. Many food items doubled in price. The huge rises were necessary to end the rampant speculation which had developed. Large pay increases had created a high demand for food and other goods which have, however, been in short supply due to right-wing economic sabotage (apart from the copper mines, the right still controls 80% of the industrial production), and economic pressures by the U.S. (blocked credits, refusal to sell parts).

Official prices remained low and so a huge black market developed. People bought what goods there were at low government prices and then resold them at huge profits to people willing to spend large sums to get goods unobtainable through regular channels. The price hikes are aimed at doing away with the speculation, and will be compensated by October wage hikes adjusted to the rate of inflation. Unfortunately the price hikes were not adequately explained beforehand, and have affected poor people more heavily than rich people, increasing discontent against the government. The right-wing took advantage of this.

The nature of the demonstrations and the violence clearly indicates an organized attempt by the right to weaken and perhaps overthrow the government. The idea is to create a situation of anarchy which would either provoke army intervention or the abdication of the government as a result of civil war.

The method used has been the manipulation of political demonstrations. Provacateurs, usually from the fascist para-military group called Patria y Libertad or thugs especially recruited and paid, have been using knives, clubs, and guns to provoke serious violence. The violence has caused states-of-seige to be proclaimed in various provinces of the country, with the army in charge of maintaining public order. So far the right-wing tactics have not been successful, but it isn't clear just when the organized right-wing campaign of violence (the government labels it the "September Plan") will end.

A massive national demonstration in support of the infamous "tiger cages", is said to be packed with new inmates from the mainland. According to Reuters News Agency, at least a couple thousand new prisoners were sent to Con Son during the first two months of the offensive.

"Life" Fast Ended

NEW YORK (LNS) - The six remaining people on a "fast for life" in New York City, which was directed against the war in Indochina, called off their water fast and sipped juice September 16. In a statement announcing the ending of the fast the group–Ted Glick, Val Hendy, Fr. Paul Mayer, Mike McCale, Lianne Moccia and Cookie Ridolfi–said "more than ever we feel a renewed determination and commitment to continue our struggle on through the fall and until true peace and liberation has been brought to the people of Indochina and America."

Although they said they were ending the fast in "hope and faith" in the American people, the fasters added, "We continue to feel that as a whole the level of seriousness of the American people is not commensurate with the serious crisis to which the people of Indochina are being subjected and which led us to begin this action."

The six, all of whom agreed on Friday to break the fast, had only taken water since August 6. Originally, there were fourteen members of the group, but eight were forced to discontinue, mostly for reasons of health. One of the original group was Dave Dellinger who stopped fasting to travel to Hanoi to pick up three POW's just recently released by the North Vietnamese.

During the forty days of the fast, members continued anti-war activities, including picketing and leafletting. On the 39th day they flew to Washington DC and protested at the re-election headquarters of President Nixon. In a statement released that day, they said: "We strongly oppose the re-election of President Nixon who is a symbol of death and famine to the children of Indochina.

IMF To Rebuild World Money

WASHINGTON (AP)-With the United States and Europe deeply divided, the International Monetary Fund begins the long, difficult task next week of building a new world money system to replace the one junked by President Nixon.

Nixon is considering addresing the finance ministers from 124 nations when the IMF session opens Monday in what probably will be its most important meeting since the system was established in 1944.

Few expect the job of shaping the new system to be finished within a year and most say it could be three or four. But many officials fear that it would be dangerous to try to put a new and untried system into effect soon.

The delegates will concentrate on bread-and-butter topics such as jobs and trade, especially if the American delegation has its way.

The job of monetary reform will begin late next week when a newly created committee of 20 officials broadly representing all members of the Fund holds its first meeting. The committee was created by the IMF to tackle the main questions of monetary reform.

The United States and Europe are basically divided on the question of trade-and specifically whether trade talks should be linked with monetary talks. As it stands now, trade will be discussed. but U.S. officials say European nations are resisting simultaneous trade talks.

Nixon ended the monetary system when, on Aug. 15, 1971, he suspended the United States' pledge to convert dollars into gold. This resulted in monetary disruptions that lasted until last December, when a new set of money-exchange rates was agreed upon at the Smithsonian Institution here.

The United States has made it clear that it wants to talk about economic relationships between the United States, Europe and Japan first before the mechanics of how the new system will work is agreed upon. It is worried, for example, that the countries of Western Europe may be backtracking into an inward-looking trade bloc frustrating free trade.

American officials still want the dollar to remain one of the world's strongest currencies, and to be used as reserves as they have in the past. But they say the time has passed when the dollar should be the world's main reserve currency. The American delegation also wants to see a diminishing role for gold in the system, but Europe, and particularly France, does not. Judging from the way things are going, sources said, gold will probably continue to play some sort of monetary role.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

☆—By SYDNEY OMARR—☆

Many Virgo individuals, especially those born between 4 and 6 a.m., are entering a "money cycle". These persons now can add to their possessions, can make gains and feel the cushion of greater financial security. For the next month or so, follow Virgo for the brightest financial deals.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You are on brink of making valuable discovery. Your natural inventive qualities come to forefront. Family will back you. Greater harmony develops on home front. Diplomatic approach succeeds.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Don't mix business and friends. Many persons want to aid but are misinformed. Know this and respond accordingly. Aquarian may be overly enthusiastic. Heed your own counsel. Take time to correct recent mistakes.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Past efforts bear fruit. You are complimented by professional superior. Eschew false modesty. Accept added responsibility. Capricorn person plays key role. Set sights on ultimate goal. You can reach it!

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Good lunar aspect coincides now with knowing what should be done and when to do it. You get rid of emotional weight. You feel more free. Happiness no longer need be a stranger. Accept challenge—and life!

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): New chance is on horizon. You make contact which enables you to display creative ability. Bring forth natural sense of showmanship. Avoid any tendency to be shrinking violet. Be direct, definite.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Follow through on hunch. Teach and learn. Choose unorthodox path. One who owes you something from past could make surprise appearance and payment. Mate/partner is likely to be involved. Be precise.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Social life accelerates. You make meaningful contacts. Horizons are due to expand. Your artistic ability is accented. Sagittarian could play key role. One who shares interests makes interesting offer.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Creative feelings find outlet. Another Scorpio individual plays prominent role. You are subject to changes brought about by demands of children. Be fair, but refuse to be foolish. You will comprehend.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Study Scorpio message. Don't resist change, but also insist on progress. Means don't waste merely for sake of appearing generous. Know when to draw line and do so. Build solid foundation. Check home safety measures.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Make adjustments in domestic area. You gain most through diplomacy. Check diet, intake of sweets. Carry out recent resolutions having to do with health, work, recreation. Taurus, Libra persons are in picture.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Money, personal possessions, value judgments are emphasized. Be patient, perceptive. Rushing into decisions results in loss, disappointment. Taking time to perceive, evaluate leads to gain fulfillment.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Cycle is such that you succeed by being an innovator. Don't wait to be told—be a self-starter. Take initiative. Be original, independent. Personal magnetism now draws members of opposite sex. You'll be busy!

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you were on your own early. You were physically or psychologically separated from parents. You are creative, somewhat of a revolutionary, capable of tearing down in order to rebuild. December should be the most significant month of 1972 for you.

Stickers Preparing For Season Opener

By BILL KING

With the haunting cry of "check sticks", Garber's Gorillas opened up their fall lacrosse campaign. The muscles that were lax throughout the summer and the ominous Budweiser bellies that have appeared, disappear under puddles of sweat as the team runs through drill after drill before the daily intersquad scrimmage.

Head Coach Richard Garber expressed an optimistic attitude over his Gorillas. Since there is no time in the spring for preliminary work, Garber views his fall workout as a chance for the coaches to meet the players, for the players to learn the styles of other players, and to review the all important fundamentals.

Although the graduation toll was costly, hopes are high over the number of returning lettermen and excellent recruited talent. About seventy-five stickers signed up for the fall workouts, all with an equal opportunity to play. Coach Garber feels that all the stickers have a good enthusiastic attitude which is typical of the UMass lacrosse team.

Probably the least experienced segment of the Gorillas, so far as playing time together, is the attack. Returning lettermen include senior Fred Michaels, a left handed threat who played well last season as fourth attack, and sophomore Pete Connolly, an excellent extra man player. Seniors Vin Sabano and Kevin Corrigan, junior Kevin Bush, and sophomores Rich MacManus and Dave Dibble round out the rest of the attackmen.

The new midfield is packed with lettermen led by Co Captains Dwight Blomquist, a senior, and Hirsch Seidman, a junior. Boomer's strong shot and Hirsch's ability to win faceoffs should be beneficial to the UMass drive. Returning to the midfield are Joe DeRisco, Gene Hardiman, Joe Roache, Steve Crimmins, Pat Walker, Bob Gormley and Kevin Sheehan. Larry Knowlton, Dave Berry and Emmitt Powers should add punch coming up from the junior Gorillas.

Defensively the team is strong. Sophomores Bill Blaustein and John MacCarthy and seniors Bill Will and Tom Bock highlight the lettermen accented by Don Thomas and Steve Reardon of the J.V.'s.

In the nets, sophomore Jim Haddad is back along with J.V. cageman Red King.

As far as recruiting is concerned, Coach Garber and his assistants Russ Kidd and Roger Farrah have found some good talent. Goalie John Rutledge, defenceman Rich Lally and middie Jack Moran found UMass from Nassau Community while attackman Frank Garrahan and defenceman Russ Incorvia wandered in from North County Community. The Gorillas also came by some talented freshmen. Jim Curran of Framingham, and Andy Howard of Sudbury, and Fred Malouf of Needham are among the locals while Bob Durland of Syracuse, Chris Olson of Huntington L.I., Andy Chefer of Tilton N.H., and Art Shlossman of Maple Woods N.J. make up the out of staters.

Coach Garber has also taken the wraps off his secret weapon for the coming season. Armed with a blazing (?) shot and his usual flagrant witticisms, Marty Kelley rolled out for the fall practice.

The six week practice is not all work and no play. The Gorillas get to match their sticks with Army on October 15 at the Point and with Rutgers or Dartmouth, October 22 at home. With a good crew of stickmen, ranging from All Americans Blomquist and Siedman, All Division Frosh Blaustein, to the basic beginners, and an excellent attitude, maybe UMass can find the right combination for another successful season.

Trio Quits Team Canada

MOSCOW (AP) - Vic Hadfield, star left winger for the New York Rangers, and two other players withdrew from Team Canada Thursday on the eve of its resumption of the eight-game international hockey series with the Russian national team.

Hadfield, a 50-goal scorer in the National Hockey League last season, departed with Rick Martin, another left winter of the Buffalo Sabres, and Jocelyn Guevremont, a defensemen for the Vancouver Canucks.

The three players reportedly were upset because Head Coach Harry Sinden did not include their names in the lineup for Friday's games.

Sinden said the three told him they wanted to return to begin working out with their NHL teams since they were not likely to play against the Russians.

Alan Eagleson, director of Hockey Canada and executive director of the NHL Players Association, said the trio departed when Sinden couldn't guarantee they would play.

He emphasized that none of the players was cut.

Frazier Says Foreman Next

NEW YORK (AP)-Muhammad Ali wants Joe Frazier's heavyweight title and the big money that would accompany the match, but he has done well without either-winning eight straight fights and earning more than $2 million.

And indications were strong in the aftermath of Ali's victory over Floyd Patterson in Madison Square Garden Wednesday night that Ali will have to do without Frazier and that big purse at least until next year.

Frazier and George Foreman "both are in agreement to a fight," said Harry Markson, president of Madison Square Garden Boxing, Inc. Markson said Thursday the fight, if made, would be held in late November.

A Foreman fight would be only Frazier's third since he beat Ali March 8, 1971, and would provide him with his biggest payday since that fight.

Ali's guarantee for the Patterson fight was $250,000 and boosted his total guarantees, before taxes, for his eight fights since losing to Fraizer to $2.3 million. The gross probably is greater than $2.3 million because in some of the fights he had the options of taking a percentage if it were greater than the guarantee.

Markson said no hard negotiations had begun for a Frazier-Foreman fight, but that they would if the Frazier camp gets a favorable tax ruling.

Both Markson and Bruce Wright, a Frazier backer, think the ruling will be favorable.

Frazier and Ali were hit with jeopardy assessments of $348,000 each for their fight, with the money coming off the top. Frazier's people would like some of that $348,000 returned and also want to be taxed only on the revenue they get from the live gate and New York theater television and not on revenues from out-of-state sources.

As for another Frazier-Ali fight, Markson said there is no way the Garden can bid for it because California sportsman Jack Kent Cooke holds the contract. Cooke wants the fight in his Inglewood Forum. Frazier's manager, Yank Durham, has said the champion won't fight in California.

"However, if Jack Kent Cooke becomes convinced they won't fight in California," Markson said, "we hope it can be held in the Garden."

Maine Here For Season Opener

By EARLE BARROLL

UMass and Maine have the same objective for tomorrow's (1 p.m.) season opener for the Red–er, well whatever they used to be called, at Alumni Stadium:

They want to make the scoreboard function.

Their plight is well documented. Last Saturday against Cornell in a pre-season scrimmage, the UMass total read 0. And while the Black Bears (thank God for a nice, uncontroversial nickname) were able to score 25 points at Boston University last Friday night, they've only scored one touchdown against the (then) Redmen over the past four seasons (1969).

Head coach Dick MacPherson cynically said, "After the Cornell scrimmage we have only one way to go. It's always easy to improve on zero points."

But the coach was quick to admit the importance of that contest. "We're extremely glad that we had the scrimmage. With the amount of sophomores we have it was a must that the team had a game to smooth out the wrinkles.

"With a game under their belts all the sophomores will have to be juniors by one o'clock tomorrow."

The overall picture of the team is one of readiness. "Everybody is healthy and we're ready to go," MacPherson emphasized. "Earl Brown said he had a sore leg, but he'll be ready. Johnny Jones has a sore heel, but he said he'll be ready.

"We're just looking forward right now to 1 p.m. Saturday."

Maine has not beaten UMass since 1965. Last year at Orono the Black Bears succumbed, 13-0, in MacPherson's coaching debut.

What type of team can we expect from them this year. "They play football the way their coach wants," MacPherson noted. "One-hundred percent effort and utilization of all their talent."

"They're an extremely well coached team and play the game with great emotion. Many of the young men on the Maine squad are from Massachusetts and this game will be more of a homecoming for them than in Orono. Our home game advantage is gone, because of all the parents that will be here to see their sons on the Maine team."

Maine employs a "Houston Veer" type offense with the emphasis on motion (options, play action and bootlegs). Because of this the critical zones on defense for UMass will be the outside men.

Wednesday at the Varsity M Club luncheon outside linebacker Tim Edwards (one of these critical men) had the solution though to this problem:

"We have to keep them inside," he said. "If we force them to the middle then crazy (Doug) Winslow will get them."

Red Sox Lose .002 Pts. Ahead

By BOB ESTELLE

Joe Coleman easily won his 18th victory last night as the Detroit Tigers walloped the Boston Red Sox, 10-3.

Manager Eddie Kasco took a chance and started Mike Garman, who had just beer recalled from Louisville, where he had a good season. It just didn't work out. Garman started off the first inning by walking Dick McAuliffe. Bill Freehan singled to right but was forced at second on Gates Brown's grounder to Luis Aparcio at short. But Willie Horton singled home McAuliffe. Norm Cash then hit a double to right to score Brown. That was it for Garman as Eddie Kasco switched to Jack Curtis. Mickey Stanley was then walked to load the bases. But Aurelio Rodriguez singled to left, scoring Horton. Rookie Dwight Evans threw our Cash at home but when Carlton Fisk tried to get Stanley at third, he threw the ball into left field. Stanley scored the fourth run of the inning.

The BoSox got one in the first on a single by Tommy Harper, a double by Carl Yastrzemski, and a single by Reggie Smith.

The Tigers added four more in the third on a single by Al Kaline, a walk to Horton, another double by Cash, a walk to Ed Brinkman, and a single by Coleman.

The Sox got their other two runs in the fourth on a single by Smith, walks to Rico Petrocelli and Fisk, and a ground rule double by Evans.

The other runs scored by Detroit came in the seventh, on back-to-back doubles by Cash and Stanley; and in the ninth, when Kaline doubled into the corner in left and was singled home by Jim Northrup.

Well, Red Sox, keep on trying.

Black Bears Loaded With Desire

By MARTY KELLEY

The football facility at the University of Maine is cut right out of the wilderness. It's rustic, somewhat simple, and engenders its own poetic personality as the surface is nestled neatly within the pines. That tells you something about the naturalness of the Orono situation, which in turn, tells you something about the character of the UMaine football team that if you didn't already know, you'll find out soon enough at the Stadium on Saturday.

Yes, the University of Maine football team is literally cut out of the woods. There isn't one player at Maine who can say he gets his books free. Never in the school's history has the convenience of a scholarship for football slid under the Admissions door. But the Black Bears have something that money can't buy, and that's called integrity.

"They'll come at us", says coach MacPherson. "All they know is how to put on the pads and charge, they're real tough kids and if we are not mentally ready for them, they'll burn us".

Is Mac scared? Hardly.

Now on the other side of the ledger. What about coach Walt Abbot of Maine. Did he think that his squad's 25-7 win in Boston last week was a fluke? A lot of critics around the conference (including this one) were astounded. Boston's generous media gave the Terriers the ink, but interpreters forgot to realize that Maine had something that doesn't show up in the print HEART. That undoubtedly will be the most promising statistic going for the Black Bears this Saturday at the stadium.

"We're not going to alter our game plan at all for UMass", said Maine mentor Abbott. "We're going to play it simple and by the book. We're still young and we're not at the experiment stage yet".

Talk about experiments, Abbott saw one in Boston last week at Nickerson Field against the BU Terriers. It was the unveiling of Larry Naviaux's new "Wingbone" attack which for all intents and purposes, should have stayed in the closet or back at the drawing board.

Abbott explains: "First of all, don't get this Wingbone confused with the Wishbone, they're synonomous. BU fumbled the ball all over the lot and we simply capitalized. I don't think that UMass will have the same ball control problems. I really respect their offense and although they didn't come around that well against Cornell, time is really the variable that we're considering here and they've had a week to get ready for us".

Indeed the Whachamacallit offense has had the time to prepare for the Black Bear defense. After a distraught week such as that of Cornell, the week preceeding the Maine game is so very important for attitude, and according to Gary Mika and Richie Cronin, the Whachamacallits have had a profitable week of practice.

"Before the Cornell game we were exhausted, but we've managed to take it easy this week, get all our work done and now we feel relaxed and ready for Maine".

Now you'd never know that there was Gary Mika talking. A lot of you are saing, 'Who the hell is Gary Mika', Well, two weeks ago the young soph didn't have a job and now he's the starting tight end and hier apparent to John Hulecki. Gary was one of the few bright spots on offense against Cornell as Piel was doing something Saturday that he wasn't doing all last year - spotting the secondary receiver and Mika was it.

With one game under his belt Richie Cronin is beginning to get acclimated to playing defense again. The former fullback captures the difference. "At fullback you were always succeptible to the headlines. But now instead of getting hit you get a chance to hit. You don't get the ink but you get the personal satisfaction of stopping someone. I'm happier now".

Getting hit rather than hitting. Well Richie, congratulations, you've captured the essence of the Maine game. So look out Whachamacallits, somebody's going to be waiting for you at the stadium tomorrow, and you better believe they'll be ready to hit and not get hit.

Julius In News

MILWAUKEE AP - The Milwaukee Bucks said Thursday they are not interested in trading draft rights to American Basketball Association superstar Julius Erving, who has signed with Atlanta of the National Basketball Association.

The NBA Board of Governors ruled Wednesday Milwaukee has draft rights to the 6-foot-7 forward.

"I don't think at this time we could commit ourselves to a trade," said Bucks General Manager Wayne Embry, who expended the Bucks' first round choice in the NBA draft to obtain rights to Erving.

"The question is how could we be compensated for a guy like that," said Mitch Fromstein, a company director.

Embry and Bill Alverson, president of Milwaukee Professional Sports and Services, which owns the Bucks, said the team would match the estimated $1 million contract Erving signed with Atlanta.

Erving still is entangled in a federal court struggle over his jump from the ABA Virginia Squires to the NBA.

That will have to be settled before any NBA action by the Bucks or Hawks is finalized, Alverson said.

Vice-Chancellor Candidate Withdraws

By NATHAN GORENSTEIN

Dr. Alfred Gourdet, one of two candidates for the position of Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs removed himself from consideration Friday.

In a letter to the Search Committee which selected both Gourdet and the acting Vice-Chancellor Robert Gage, Gourdet said during his two-day stay on campus he had been "gathering information on the University climate and have concluded that Dr. Gage is in a better position to successfully function as Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs at this University."

Fred Preston, a member of the Search Committee and on the faculty at the School of Education said that Gourdet had two other job offers, one from the University of Hartford, Preston did not know if Gourdet had accepted any of the other positions.

However, Preston said that Gourdet felt that the circumstances surrounding the choice of a permanent Vice-Chancellor where one of the candidates already held the position, were unfair to both the incumbent and any other candidates.

According to Preston, Gourdet said it was not a matter of his qualifications, but rather the circumstances surrounding the choice.

Margie Lenn, Chairperson of the Search Committee said the Committee would meet Tuesday in closed session to decide what steps to take.

Lenn and committee member Mickey Harris said there were three options open: to recommend Dr. Gage, to initiate another complete search, or to ask the student body for suggestions.

Harris said the committee had seen all the qualified applicants, and had come up with Gage and Gourdet. He said that if the committee decided that "Gage wasn't the best qualified of the two, I'd just as soon keep searching."

Lenn said that if a person was decided upon Tuesday, the decision would go first to Chancellor Bromery. If the committee decides to continue the search, their decision will be made public.

However, Lenn said that, "If students want a candidate they would have to pitch for him between Monday's Collegian and the Tuesday meeting."

Harris said he was very disappointed that Gourdet had withdrawn, adding, "He was far from being a status quo administrator."

In the two days Gourdet had been on campus he had spoken to students in Sylvan, Orchard Hill, and Central. Thursday, the day he withdrew his name, he had been scheduled to meet with the Greeks.

In addition he met with Chancellor Bromery, Vice-Chancellor Thomas Campion, the Operations Council, faculty, and the Area Directors Council.

Lenn said that people she spoke with were impressed by Gourdet's credentials and forthrightness.

Gourdet is presently working for the Department of Health, Education and Welfare (HEW) in New York City as an education specialist with the Equal Education Opportunity program (EEO).

Originally from Haiti, Gourdet received one Ph.D from Cornell University in Anthropology and Romance linguistics and is presently working on his second at New York University, concentrating in Urban Education, Program Planning and Budgeting System.

He has an MA in Spanish Literature and Linguistics from Indiana University and a BA in engineering from a Caracas, Venezuela military academy. He speaks six languages and was a first lieutenant in the Haitian army.

Spokesman Says Budget To Be Cut Regardless

By ROBERT MEDEIROS

BOSTON - A spokesman for Gov. Francis W. Sargent's office says the University can expect "substantially less than the 37 per cent increase requested in their budget."

He added that if the UMass trustees refuse to make the necessary cuts when they reconsider the $98 million budget, the cuts will be made anyway, by people outside of the University.

"Everybody knows the budget is going to be cut, it's only a question of how much and who is to do the cutting," he said.

State Secretary Joseph M. Cronin Educational Affairs

State Secretary Educational Affairs Joseph M. Cronin in a letter to trustee chairman Joseph P. Healey asked the trustees to reconsider the fiscal 1974 budget at their Oct. 4 meeting in Amherst.

The spokesman said in an interview here that it was "Secretary Cronin's idea that the trustees should be making the cuts and not people outside the University."

But, UMass President Robert C. Wood said anyone who "suggests that the trustees take on the job of the budget director of the Commonwealth and make those kind of judgements is being irresponsible."

"The trustees have the responsibility to see that the amount requested in terms of the University is a responsible request and that it represents a good turn of the dollar in terms of higher education," he said.

Sargent's spokesman said the "governor's concern is not explicitly with UMass. It is with the state's total higher education budget."

He said UMass became the first state-funded agency to publicly release its requested budget, and it came at a time when legislators and the public are demanding lower taxes.

The governor, his aide said had no other choice but to make a stand against the requested $26 million increase.

WMPIRG (Rate) Motions Under Advisement

By AVIS YUNI

Representatives of the Western Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (WMPIRG) made two procedural motions at the Thursday morning, September 21st, Department of Public Utilities (DPU) preliminary hearing on the Western Massachusetts Electric Company (WMECO) proposed rate increase. The DPU which took the motions under advisement will make its decision on them next week.

The first motion proposed at the hearing attended by representatives from WMECO and WMPIRG and public citizens, was to dismiss the hearings on the constitutional basis. Steve Ryder, the President of WMPIRG, said that WMPIRG is saying that the hearing violates due process of law since there is no one present at the hearings to intervene on the part of the consumer.

Both the Attorney General and state Consumer Council can represent consumers in legal actions. They can convene with permissive power, which means that they don't have to take part if they don't wish to. At the present time the organizations are spread thin, covering several rate increase requests, said Ryder, and can't cover this one since they don't have the resources. The DPU is the only other department that consumers can turn to for legal action.

In two other cases against Boston Edison Electric Company and the New England Telephone Company consumers are being represented, said Ryder, WMPIRG therefore feels that Western Mass. consumers are not getting equal protection under the law in this case. The Attorney General and Consumers Council agree with WMPIRG's constitutional contention even though they're not intervening.

WMPIRG's second motion made at the hearing was for the DPU to assess the cost of utility companies in paying for their evidence in their court cases. Says Ryder, the utilities pass the cost of their presentations on to their customers in the form of higher prices. Thus, the consumers are paying for the utility presentations.

WMPIRG is saying that the consumer should have the right to pay for adversaries to the utilities. If utilities can charge the consumers for their case, why can't the consumers pay for their own case through the utilities? So, according to Ryder, if the DPU accepts this motion, the DPU will assess the WMECO court presentation costs and charge them an amount of money that would go to the DPU or an independent group to pay for the consumers case.

Ryder stated that WMPIRG anticipates a denial of the two motions by the DPU. If that happens, WMPIRG will file suit against the DPU in the federal and state courts. They will ask for an injunction to stop the hearings until they are made constitutional. WMPIRG will file in both the state and federal courts so if their case is thrown out of one court, they will have recourse in the other.

The State Attorney General's office and Consumer Council with both file an Amicus Brief when and if the case against the DPU goes to court, according to Ryder. This brief says that the third party filing agrees with what is being said, in this case, WMPIRG.

Possibly, if the suit goes through the court wishes, Ryder says an injunction may be given, by the court, to stop the hearings. The Governor would have to call the legislature into an emergency session to restructure the DPU to give adversarial hearing to utilities.

On Thursday evening there was a meeting of WMPIRG members concerning local board elections. Each school funding WMPIRG elects a local board which is set-up and voted on by students and deals with local issues. This board which represents the students on campus appoints three people to the regional board composed of representatives from the schools funding WMPIRG, which makes decisions on money, hiring, etc.

The local board looks into the funding mechanism, advertising, recruitment for projects, faculty, and the administration. There are many issues that are not on a regional or state-wide basis that local boards can deal with. Some of the local issues that UMass' WMPIRG will try to deal with are the passage of an ordinance in Amherst that will require druggists to post their prices and a study of how the property tax is administered in the Amherst area. The board also serves to bring the ideas brought to them by students to the attention of the regional board.

In about two weeks there will be a town meeting type election for the local board positions. At this any interesed student can come, run, vote, and work for WMPIRG work for WMPIRG.

McG Camp Cites Poll Showing 12% Gain

(AP) - George McGovern's camp, citing a private poll Sunday, claimed the Democratic candidate has gained 12 percentage points, reducing President Nixon's lead to 22.

Lawrence O'Brien, McGovern's campaign chairman, predicted "very close election, like 1960 or 1968."

Sen. Robert Dole, of Kansas, Republican national chairman, while agreeing that "the polls will not hold at 34 per cent," said slippage would only reflect the party loyalty of some Democrats and not jeopardize Nixon's chances for a big victory.

McGovern, campaigning in New York, said it appeared the Nixon administration is playing politics with the three U.S. prisoners of war who have been freed in Hanoi, but whose return to the United States is delayed. There have been reports U.S. officials want to meet them in Vietntiane, Laos, rather than let them go straight to the United States accompanied by an antiwar delegation.

"I call on Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird and I call on the President of the United States to let these three men come home just as quickly as possible," McGovern said. He said the Geneva conventions do not require that they be delayed for briefings and questionings.

Laird retorted in a statement that McGovern "knows very well just who it is who has delayed the return...We have had no communication from the Hanoi government about any conditions relating to the release of these men...

The official North Vietnamese news agency said two of the prisoners had cabled Nixon that they thought they should be allowed to come home with the antiwar delegation.

Earlier Laird said North Vietnam is "using the families of these prisoners of war as propaganda tools...in violation of the Geneva Conventions."

Laird spoke on the NBC program "Meet the Press." O'Brien and Dole on ABC's "Issues and Answers."

Dole said McGovern had tried to get the electorate excited about the breakin and alleged bugging of the Democratic National headquarters in Washington : Watergate because he had no other issues-but that McGovern had failed.

O'Brien, however, noting that the House Banking and Currency Committee is investigating, said activity on Capitol Hill would keep the issue alive, even though "the Justice Department and others have done everything possible to slow down."

Dole meanwhile disclosed he has complained of what he called "misleading fund raising procedures involving more than $250,000 in hidden and secret McGovern campaign funds."

He made public a letter to the Office of Federal Elections in the General Accounting Office, saying McGovern supporters have organized more than 350 campaign committees, many apparently dummies whose purpose is "to serve as conduits for large contributors, either to illegally attempt to avoid gift tax payment requirements or to conceal the identification of large contributors."

President Nixon worked at his Camp David retreat Sunday on a series of speeches, political and non-political, he will be making in the next few days.

Mountaineer Lowered To Safety

YOSEMITE, Calif. (AP) - A young mountaineer who broke his leg while scaling the sheer wall of El Capitan was lowered by heavy nylon ropes a record 2,100 feet to safety Sunday.

Neal Olson, 24, of Portland, Ore., reached ground about 2-1/2 hours after a daring rescue operation began and was in fair condition.

He suffered compound fracture and protruding bone injuries and was taken to Lewis Memorial Hospital in Yosemite Valley.

Olson told newsmen gathered at the base of the cliff the accident occurred when "a boulder fell off. It hit my head, my back and my leg."

Pete Thompson, search and rescue director for Yosemite, said the rescue descent was the longest in the park's history.

"He was in good spirits all the way down," said park volunteer Jim Bridwell, 27, who accompanied Olson on the steep trip down. "The only time he complained was when he bumped his leg."

A friend, Wayne Haack, 24, also of Portland, was with Olson when he sustained the injury early Saturday.

The rescue party used heavy nylon rope long enough to reach from the top of the cliff to the bottom of the 3,000-foot rock. The ropes passed through a friction brake system the rescuers had attached to the wall at a 2,100-foot-high ledge where Olson and his companion had spent the night.

Bridwell encountered few difficulties on the way down, occasionally stopping to remove kinks from the rope, or knocking protruding rocks out of his path.

"Just starting, just thinking about it was the worst part," Bridwell said after the descent. "We didn't really know it was going to work."

Brazilian Attacks Government Policy

RIO DE JANEIRO — The ailing but militant leader of the official Opposition party unexpectedly asked for a three-month leave of absence from Congress today, after delivering a sharp protest against prohibition of political discussion.

Deputy Oscar Pedroso Horta's request for leave caused confusion in his Brazilian Democratic Movement as it approached municipal elections scheduled for Nov. 15. The party has been split between militant and more moderate factions.

The housing shortage was felt in Sylvan Area, but the problem has been alleviated at least temporarily.

Housing Shortage Eased

By SHELLEY LAUZON

The shortage of on-campus housing, which plagued both students and the administration earlier this semester, has been eased, according to Bruce Cochran of the Housing Office.

"As of last week, there has been no shortage," he said. "There are 150-200 empty spaces in female dorms and a small number in male dorms."

The lengthy registration period "caused concern among us and students with no place to live," he added. Those students without housing were placed in the Campus Center and Hamlin House.

"A majority of these students," Cochran explained, "are Stockbridge students or engineering majors who have requested to keep Hamlin open as a residence hall for the semester. That request has been granted."

"The top two floors of Hamlin are presently housing students from Hampshire College," he said. "They should be out by Thanksgiving." No students are in the Campus Center hotel, as all have since been placed in dorms.

Cochran attributed the housing problem to the students who reserved rooms but either decided not to return to school or to live somewhere else. Those who changed rooms then failed to inform their old head of residence.

"We rely heavily on the student to inform us where he is going" he said. He also stressed the point that setting a specific date, after which spaces won't be held if reasons for late arrivals aren't explained to the housing office, will ease the situation somewhat.

"We face this problem every year," Cochran said. "In a flexible academic system such as ours, there is hardly a chance of getting a system of knowing exactly how many spaces there are. There are inherent weaknesses in this type of system, but it is better than a regimented system."

The University opeates on an average occupancy rate of nearly 93%, or about 11,500 students living on-campus. A drop-off second semester lowers the first semester figure by 2 or 3 percent.

Cochran believes that next semester will be the same if registration procedures are the same. "There may be modifications in the new registration system, but I doubt if we'll ever go back to the old system. We've come a long way."

Budget Cuts In Offing

to use the press also."

Wood responded in a telephone interview that anyone who thinks they can save the state substantial money by dealing with higher education is mistaken.

He said 8.1 per cent of the state's budget is the total of higher education and 3.7 per cent of the state's budget is the total of UMass.

"No matter what you do with those figures," he said "you're still not dealing with the need for new revenue for the state."

The governor's spokesman added that Secretary Cronin is presently heading a study group that should release a far-reaching report in January on the reorganization of higher education in the state.

"The state is moving toward a better coordinated system at the state level and also a more decentralized system at the local campus level."

According to Wood, the need is not for organizational reform, but for more money and

"The state remains 49th in the nwion in terms of support for higher education and is ninth in the nation

The president said people who talk about organizational reform are sending up a smoke screen on the real need for financial reform.

UMass based its request for a larger budget on the opening of the new campus at Columbia Point, the move into the Basic and Clinical Science Building and steam plant at the UMass Worcester campus and the first graduating class of the medical school.

UMass is planning also for a 7 per cent jump in enrollment at its three campuses: 860 additional students at Amherst, 1,000 at Boston and 40 at Worcester.

Transit Service Gets Grant

By SUSAN HOGAN

Beginning in February 1973 the Student Senate Transit Service will take part in a government funded program which will provide free bus service to the Amherst Community.

This new program will provide transit service from the University to the outlying residential areas. Hopefully this experiment will relieve traffic congestion in the Amherst area. The federal government has donated $475,000 for this one and a half year project and will maintain these funds if the program proves successful.

Along with this money, the University will supply an additional $300,000 for the maintenance of these ten new buses. This new service will not be restricted to students, but will provide free service for all the people living within the community.

The Student Senate Transit Service was formed in 1968 when the Senate decided buses were needed to provide shuttle service for the growing campus. Starting with only two buses, the service ha grown to a total of seven and a budget of $61,000 per year.

They currently employ 45 drivers and along with their campus shuttles, they provide transportation for volunteer organizations such as the Belchertown and Northampton groups. This type of service and the service provided for R.S.O. sponsored field trips costs the University less than if they had to depend on private bus lines.

Presently the Senate Transit Service shuttles run to all areas of the campus including a regular shuttle from all the parking lots to the center of campus.

The Transit Service is under the control of the Student Senate Services Committee and all money is allocated through them. Along with the yearly budget of $61,000, the Senate allocates an additional $1,100 per year for the purchasing of new equipment.

Government Overhaul Due in Manila

MANILA (AP)- President Ferdinand E. Marcos is planning a general reorganization of his government, the presidential palace announced Sunday. He has promised the nation that his martial law decree would mean social reforms to improve conditions for the poor.

Marcos met during the day with his Cabinet for what his press secretary, Francisco Tatad, said was a discussion of local problems. He gave no details but presumably the talks included rises in prices.

The nation appeared calm as it entered its third day under martial law proclaimed by Marcos to head off a Communist insurrection that he said threatened his government.

His decree on Friday was followed by a promise of social reforms designed to give impoverished millions a better deal.

The government reopened communications with the outside world cut Saturday after the martial law decree. But most newspapers and radio stations remained closed.

The presidential spokesman said censorship guidlines for local and foreign newsmen working in the Philippines would be announced Monday.,

He emphasized, however, that news censorship would remain in effect only for the duration of martial law.

Until the government's guidelines are announced, all news stories written by foreign correspondents must be approved by the press office. The clampdown also applies to news photographs.

Shortly after Marcos' proclamation of martial law on Friday, scores of political arrests were reported.

Asked about this, Press Secretary Tatad said the government will be in a position to make an announcement later on this matter.

Marcos has signed an order strengthening police control over private possession of firearms, and press secretary said.

There were reports that prices of food and other essentials had been increased. Marcos told his Cabinet steps were being taken to assure a steady supply of essentials to prevent panic buying. Violaters of price ceilings will be arrested, Tatad said.

Marcos has instructed his economic advisers to confer with business leaders on support for the government's reform program Tatad said. In his speech, the president promised major reports with details to come later

Marcos is expected to reorganized his government by proclamation. He and his Nacionalista party have been in power since 1965. His second four-year term is due to end on Dec. 30, 1973.

In New York, the Philippines; foreign secretary, Carlos P. Romulo, issued a statement saying that "so-called 'mass arrests' carried out under martial law" included only those implicated in subversive movements.

Romulo, who is attending the U.N. general assembly session, said it was not true that only opposition members had been arrested. He reported that members of Marcos' Nacionalista party, such as Congressmen Roque Ablan Jr. and Rafael Aquino, were placed under arrest. Another held is Gov. Lino Bocalan, he said.

Tanaka Goes To Peking

PEKING (AP)-Prime Minister Kakuei Tanaka of Japan follows President Nixon to the Peking summit Monday prepared to give the whole loaf of diplomatic recognition to the People's Republic of China rather than the American President's half a loaf.

Some sources here are saying that within hours of the Japanese leader's arrival he may not only see Chairman Mao Tse-tung but also publicly announce the Japan recognizes Premier Chou En-lai's government.

In doing so, he would cut Japan adrift from the Republic of China on Taiwan, with which it has maintained diplomatic ties for two decades.

Nixon's unwillingness to take so bold a step in his February journey to Peking produced an agreement to disagree, to consult periodically, to maintain the peace in Asia and to refrain from dominating the Pacific. But it fell short of diplomatic recognition.

If Tanaka begins his six-day state visit with the recognition announcement, the remainder of his time here can be devoted to working out the groundwork for an exchange of ambassadors, drafting the rough lines of peace treaty to replace the one with Taipei, and getting agreement on the general principles of a commercial and economic pact.

The 54-year-old Japanese prime minister is scheduled to fly in by special jet directly from Tokyo, exactly seven months after the start of Nixon's trip.

The first of the Chou-Tanaka talks will take place in the Great Hall of the People, the vast edifice in Tienannen Gate of Havenly Peace Square where the Nixon talks were held.

Later, a reception will be followed by a banquet for 500 in the same building.

In contrast to Japanese press and television, the officially controlled newspapers here have been muted in their coverage. The Peking People's Daily did give the announcement of the date top play, in the upper right hand corner. But the story carried the bare bones only, without comment.

Despite the apparent coolness, the party and the government are aware of the significance of the Chinese-Japanese rapprochement with its promise of greater understanding after a century of hostility and distrust.

Syria Reportedly Getting Weapons From Soviets

BIERUT (AP) - Bracing for an Israeli attack, Syria has been receiving unspecified quantities of arms and ground-to-air missiles from the Soviet Union during the past few days, authoritative sources here reported Sunday.

The newspaper An Nahar also said that four Soviet transport planes-Antonov-12 type-unloaded shipments of military equipment in Damascus on Saturday.

The paper did not spell out the types of arms, but confirmed the shipments included ground-to-air rockets.

Last weekend, Israeli fighter-bomber jets raided Syria, killing 200 persons and wounding many more. Syria retaliated by bombing Israeli positions in the occupied Golan Heights and then announced it lost three Mig planes and downed two Israeli Mirage jets.

Subsequently, Syria announced it was expecting an Israeli attack at any moment and ordered its 50,000-man civil defense corps on alert and opened air raid shelters for the first time in two years.

Israel most probably will hit Syria from the air, and more ground-to-air rockets are expected to be shipped to Damascus from the Soviet Union, informants said.

The leadership of the ruling Baathist party in Syria is planning an extraordinary meeting in Damascus to deal with the "explosive situation along the cease-fire line" with Israel, the newspaper Al Anwar reported.

Reports from Damascus said the government was distributing arms to the "people's army." This includes students whose main duty is to guard the country's major installations in wartime.

Syria's attitude was in marked contrast to Egypt, whose leader, Anwar Sadat, evicted 20,000 Soviet military experts in July. Sadat was protesting Moscow's refusal to furnish Egypt long-promised shipments of arms, including MIG23 jets and TU16 strategic bombers.

The Soviet-Egyptian break evidently prompted closer military and economic ties between Moscow and Baghdad and Damascus. Moscow, informants said, was moving to impede a likely reapproachement between Egypt and the Western powers, after reports had said that Cairo was seeking arms from Britain and France. Syria is linked with Egypt and Libya in a Federation of Arab Republics born in August last year.

In Brief ....

31 Die in Fire

RHODES, Greece (AP) — Fire believed set off by a short circuit swept through a restaurant and dance hall packed with tourists Saturday night and police said 31 of them perished in a panicky rush to escape the racing flames.

Sixteen persons suffered burns and injuries, and four were reported in critical condition, police said Sunday.

IMF to Get New Man?

WASHINGTON (AP) — Treasury Secretary George P. Shultz said Sunday the United States wants a "fresh outlook" and a new man to head the International Monetary Fund during the critical time of negotiating a reformed world monetary system.

Shultz told reporters that the Treasury feels that a younger man with a fresh view is needed in the job.

Polls Show Nixon Lead

NEW YORK (AP) — A poll conducted by Daniel Yankelovich Inc. for Time magazine and the New York Times reports President Nixon leading the Democratic presidential contender, Sen. George McGovern of South Dakota, by 39 points-62 to 23 per cent. The poll also said that Democrats polled favored the President by 43 per cent to 40 per cent.

IMF Convenes For Talks

WASHINGTON (AP) - With a dispute over its future leadership still simmering, the 124-nation Internation Monetary Fund gathered Sunday to begin the difficult job of shaping a world money system more in tune with modern economic conditions.

Few of the finance ministers arriving in advance of the IMF annual meeting which begins Monday are optimistic that the task can be done in less than two years because the United States, Western Europe and Japan have too many differences over trade and monetary matters.

The IMF meeting, along with a concurrent session of the World Bank, lasts until Friday. But the real work of reforming the broken-down monetary system will not really begin until after the meeting is over.

In fact, the main accomplishment is expected to be naming of a 20-member group of officials, broadly representing all countries in the IMF, to do the actual negotiating.

Despite the official American view that agreement on the basic principles of monetary reform can be reached in a year, few others are that optimistic.

Agreements by that date would be a major achievement, Pierre-Paul Schweitzer the IMF's managing director, told reporters.

Schweitzer, who has headed the organization since 1963, has himself become an issue at the meeting. The U.S. Treasury opposes his bid for re-election a year from now. Schweitzer, refusing to step down voluntarily in the face of pressure, says he wants to continue in the job.

The dispute may get more heated as the week wears on when major industrial nations make their presentations. Treasury Secretary George P. Shultz is expected to speak Tuesday for the United States.

The issues dividing the major countries over reform of the system are deep, with the basic fight revolving round whether Europe, Japan and Canada are willing to talk about removing trade barriers as part of negotiations on a new monetary system. The United States wants monetary talks and trade talks closely linked and some other countries don't.

Rabbits Used As Live Bombs

PHNOM PENH (AP) - President Lon Nol has warned Cambodians against a Communist plot to kill them with rabbits.

Marshal Lon Nol called on all citizens to arrest any person who offered to buy rabbits at high prices.

He warned, that the motive of the Communists is to use rabbits as live bombs by attaching plastic explosive charges to them and then releasing them near Cambodian army defensive positions.

United Nations To Discuss Terrorism

Unidentified detainees are shown in a room in the Central Police Station in Kampala, Uganda, recently in this photograph by John Dowling of the London Daily Express, who way being held along with oth · western newsmen. Downing returned to London with other correspondents including Associated Press writer Andrew Torchia. (AP)

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP) - The U.N. General Assembly, having adopted a 92-item agenda spotlighting terrorism, was ready to plunge into its longest talkfest ever on Monday, with 125 of its 132 members scheduled to speak in the general debate.

The number of speakers listed broke a record of 112 set in 1969 and showed the growing interest of governments in getting their views on foreign affairs before the world forum.

Most of those scheduled to take part are foreign ministers. Two are prime ministers-Price Souvanna Phouma of Laos and Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam of Mauritus.

Secreatry of State William P. Rogers will be the second speaker in the annual policy debate Monday morning after the traditional opening speech by Brazil, represented this time by Foreign Minister Mario Gibson Barboza.

The general debate will last 2-1/2 weeks. Foreign Ministers Andrei A. Gromyko of the Soviet Union and Maurice Schumann of France will speak Tuesday and British Foreign Secretary Sir Alec Douglas-Home the next day.

Rogers' main theme will be such international terrorism as the Palestinian commando operation that killed 11 Israeli Olympic athletes in Munich Sept. 5. U.S. diplomats said he would propose an international treaty to stop such activities.

Israeli Foreign Minister Abba Eban will deal with the same problem when he speaks to the assembly Thursday afternoon. He declared in a Sunday TV interview that Arab terrorism was "the main obstacle to a negotiated peace in the Middle East." He added, "We'll have a long discussion of this in the United Nations."

The assembly Saturday night approved Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim's proposal, made after the Munich incident, that it discuss "measures to stop international terrorism."

The assembly put the subject on its agenda by a vote of 66-27 with 33 abstentions. Then it beat down a South Yemeni bid to defer the debate to next year by a vote of 57-47 with 22 abstentions.

Waldheim was saved from a humiliating defeat by defections from among the Arab and African groups,

Both groups were against his proposal for fear it would lead to curbs on what they call Arab and African liberation movements.

Jordan voted for his project and four other Arab countries abstained.

Among the 41 African U.N. members, which include some Arab nations, six voted with Waldheim and 13 abstained. Five were unaccountably absent.

The Arabs and Africans together turned in only 24 votes against putting Waldheim's item on the agenda. China, Albania and Cuba joined them.

They were overwhelmed by the United States, Western Europe, the old British commonwealth and other countries concerned about terrorism, including such staunch anticolonialists as India and Yugoslavia.

The Soviet bloc abstained on the first tally. It later voted in favor of deferring the issue to the next session, while some of the original positive votes turned into abstentions.

One diplomat said the proposal for a debate now "only got through because they wanted to save Waldheim."

The agenda, adopted at a Saturday meeting that ran late into the night, includes the question of U.N. membership for Bangladesh; Soviet proposals for a ban on nuclear weapons and a world disarmament conference; the situation in the Middle East, and the annual issues of colonialism and peacekeeping. peace-keeping.

Profit-Margin Change Unlikely

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Price Commission expects to make no changes in its profit-margin rule in the near future, Chairman C. Jackson Grayson Jr. says, without specifying what near future is.

Asked about recent speculation that the commission might change the rule, Grayson said in an interview that "we do not have any direct proposal under active consideration."

The rule, widely criticized by the business community when first adopted, restricts companies to a profit margin based on the best two of the last three fiscal years. The margin is figured as a percentage of sales.

Grayson said the commission is looking into the possible impact the rule may have on profits. He said possible alterations have been discussed.

These include changing the base period on which the permissible margin is figured, using an industry-by-industry rather general approach, and modifying rules on mergers and investitures.

"We're aware of the problems created by the rule, but we don't expect any change in the near future," he said.

He said that fears expressed by businessmen earlier in the year that the profit margin restraints would harm the economic recovery have proved to be unjustified.

"And," he said, "in any of the forward studies we have done, we don't think that rule is seriously going to bite into any part of the recovery."

Grayson said the commission has a study under way to find out if price controls should be changed in any way as the economy moves closer to the point that demand inflation will become a problem. Some economists see that as a possible problem next year.

"We aren't there yet," Grayson said. "Right now, I don't think it's a big danger."

But, he added "we've got to think about rules to consider."

Asked if now isn't the time to make solid plans, he said that "I don't think it's that dangerous...we've still got slack in the economy. It's not a crisis-type situation."

Grayson sidestepped questions on when the controls might end, saying "that's not going to be my decision, and therefore I'm not offering any advice to the public."

But he said he has changed the view he expressed last July when he said he was not very confident of reaching the administration's goal of reducing the rate of inflation to the range of 2 to 3 per cent by the year's end.

"The numbers are looking better than they did then," he said.

North Viets Renew Artillery Assaults

SAIGON (AP) - Enemy forces backed by tanks and heavy artillery renewed their assaults Sunday along the northern coast below Da Nang and created more hazards along the vital Highway 1.

Official sources said the attacks in Quang Tin and Quang Ngai provinces were part of a harassing operation aimed at destroying the Saigon government's credibility in protecting the population it claims it controls.

The fighting has created thousands of new refugees and one massacre was reported.

Refugees from an enemy-occupied district in southern Quang Ngai Province said Viet Cong and North Vietnamese troops killed more than 40 civilians when they apparently refused to denounce the Saigon Government.

The refugees told this story:

Viet Cong and North Vietnamese gathered more than 100 civilians in a building in a hamlet in Mo Duc district last week and interrogated them.

Those who expressed antigovernment feelings were allowed to leave. Between 40 and 50 persons were still inside at the end of the interrogation. The North Vietnamese and Viet Cong then planted explosives in the building and blew it up, killing all inside.

Associated Press correspondent Michael Putzel reported from the front it was impossible to make a visual inspection of the site because the area is still under control of the North Vietnamese and Viet Cong.

Spearheaded by the tanks, hundreds of North Vietnamese troops attacked South Vietnamese infantrymen east of Tien Phuoc district town, 40 miles south of Da Nang.

In southern Quang Ngai Province, 50 to 60 miles to the southeast, enemy troops poured more than 1,000 shells into government positions near the district towns of Duc Pho and Ba To.

Police Search For Accused Child Trader

ASHFORD, Ala. (AP) - Police and sheriff's deputies were keeping a close watch Sunday on a carnival in this southeast Alabama town as they continued the search for a young father accused of trading his infant son for a used car.

Bloodhounds hunting for Eugene Fire, about 23, in Union Springs, were called off Saturday night. Police there said the dogs kept following trails back to the carnival, which was dismantled and moved to Ashford, about 50 miles to the southeast.

Union Springs police spokesman Jimmy Martin said authorities at Ashford had been alerted to be on the lookout for Fire, who escaped into deep woods after his wife was apprehended.

Houston County sheriff's department spokesman Harvey Woodham, in Dothan, Ala., said the carnival would set up at Ashford Sunday afternoon and would probably open Monday. "Two of our investigators will be on the lookout for him," said Woodham.

"We believe he's still with the carnival," said Martin. "We searched last night about nine hours, and the dogs weren't able to get anything."

Martin said sheriff's deputies were still searching for Fire around Union Springs, although police had discontinued the manhunt.

The dogs searched a quarter of a mile from the carnival, he said, "but whatever little trail they hit always took them back to the carnival. And we couldn't search everything at the carnival without a search warrant."

Fire's wife, Jennifer Sharon Sims, alias Jennifer Fire, also about 23, was arrested Saturday as she worked in a sideshow at the carnival outside Union Springs, in east-central Alabama. Police said a telephone tip relayed from a carnival worker led to the woman's arrest.

The couple has been charged in Collier County, Fla., with "selling a child for payment of something of value" under a seldom-used felony statute. They allegedly traded their infant son for a used car in Florida last Wednesday.

Martin said juvenile authorities have assumed custody of two children who accompanied their parents from Immokalee, Fla., to Alabama. One is a girl, about 1-1/2, and a boy, about 2-1/2.

Florida authorities learned of the alleged swap after the child was brought to Naples Community Hospital Wednesday in Collier County, where a hospital spokesman said the child was suffering from malnutrition, dehydration and broken ribs.

The infant was reported in satisfactory condition.

Ice Cream Shop Hit By Jet

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — Police said at least 15 persons were killed Sunday afternoon when a private jet crashed just after takeoff and catapulted in flames into a crowded ice cream parlor.

Lt. Harold Johnson of the Sacramento Police Department gave the casualty figure as newsmen noted the bodies of at least two children wrapped in blankets in a parking lot littered with the plane's debris.

Two children's birthday parties were underway when the jet apparently lost power while taking off from Sacramento's Executive Airport, witnesses said.

The jet was an F86 Sabrejet, a Korean War-vintage American fighter plane which was adapted for private use. The plane had been on exhibit at an air show.

A newsman said he counted four blanket-wrapped bodies at the scene.

Agnew Toughens Vietnam Stand

WASHINGTON (AP) - Vice President Spiro T. Agnew's first week of campaigning for the Nov. 7 election has been displaying a little old, a little new-and an increasingly tough line on the U.S. role in Vietnam.

Though Agnew talked earlier last week about "a new style" that would concentrate on issues, rather than on personalities, a series of speeches to Republican rallies later on were filled with tough rhetoric reminiscent to some extent of his controversial 1970 campaign efforts.

Though not quite the "red meat" he often deliberately fed partisan audiences in the past, it was rarer than the more well-done variety the Vice President had served up earlier in the week.

In Chattanooga, Tenn., Thursday night he accused Democratic nominee George McGovern of "parroting the propaganda" of North Vietnam. The next night, he charged McGovern's criticism of U.S. bombing "hurts the American morale by implying that we are murderers for doing the same thing we have always done through our history, and that is to go to the aid of people who have been victimized by aggression."

At the same time, however, Agnew deleted from his advance text a pair of alliterative phrases in what he said was an effort to get away from the kinds of comments that marked his 1970 rhetoric, such as references to "nattering nabobs of negativism" and to "pusillanimous pussyfooters."

Perhaps more striking was the Vice President's rhetoric on Vietnam, his fervent defense of U.S. actions there mixed in with praise for President Nixon's success in withdrawing most American troops.

In Chattanooga, his strongest words were reserved for McGovern, whom he accused of failing to display for murdered South Vietnamese the same compassion he showed for the North Vietnamese, and for the Hanoi government, which he accused of "one of the most ruthless acts of aggression ever recorded in international history."

In Saturday's speech, delivered while one of the leading Republican war critics, Sen. John Sherman Cooper, sat nearby, Agnew went further, saying "I must rise to the defense of the American policy of bombing military targets in North Vietnam."

He repeated his contention that the principles that led the United States to intervene remained valid and rejected McGovern's contention that the war is immoral and unpopular.

"There is nothing immoral about helping a nation that has been callously and ruthlessly invaded," he said. "And the Vietnam war is no more unpopular than other wars fought by the United States."

Agnew sounded a little like he was campaigning against North Vietnam, contending that the McGovern method is "shame on America," but that his own is "shame on North Vietnam for beginning this slaughter, for invading three neighboring countries, for refusing to adhere to international standards in the treatment of prisoners of war and for perpetuating this senseless war."

Campaign '72

"Must" Legislation Before Congress

WASHINGTON (AP) — House leaders have agreed on a list of "must" legislation which darkens prospects for final adjournment before the November election.

Present plans, or hopes, call for adjournament not later than October 14 to allow House members to get in three weeks of campaigning before the November 7 voting. But it may be difficult to keep members in Washington after mid-October.

The leaders believe their "must" bills can be passed by the House by October 14, but there is no assurance that the Senate will be ready to quit that soon. Its current business docket is even heavier than that of the House.

There already is talk of a post-election session.

Some leading Democrats fear that if Congress adjourned with a lot of the President's program not acted on, he would call them back into special session after the election.

In the meantime, they suspect, he would step up his campaign against the Democratic-controlled Congress and accuse it of putting politics ahead of the nation's business by quitting with work still to be done.

Some of the President's congressional spokesmen claim he has no plans for a special session. But the President himself reportedly has given no such guarantee to the Democratic leadership.

So there is growing sentiment for a pre-election recess and a post-election session to cope with unfinished business before final adjournment, a move aimed at countering accusations that they quit with major business not attended to.

Major business still to be considered by the House includes:

—Two original appropriation bills, one for military construction and one for miscellanous programs including the war on poverty. Three other money bills involving more than $100 billion have cleared the House but have not been acted on by the Senate.

—A multibillion-dollar highway-construction bill, carded for House action this week. It differs substantially from a bill passed by the Senate.

—A housing and urban development measure, also scheduled for a House vote this week. It, too, differs from the Senate-passed version.

—Another increase in the national debt ceiling. It has not yet emerged from the Ways and Means Committee.

Other measures on the House "must" list deal with container-barge service, construction of an Eisenhower Memorial Civic Center in Washington, additional financing for the American Revolution Bicentennial Commission, the Small Business Investment Corporation, and the Gateway recreation area in New York and New Jersey.

HE HIT THE WRONG CAR–Orville Jackson, 32, of Washington holds a ticket he received Wednesday after he bumped President Nixon's limousine while riding his bicycle. The President was not in the five-ton armor-plated Lincoln Continental at the time. Damage was said to be $100 to the $500,000 car; nothing to the $197 10-speed bike. Jackson, shaken up and taken to a hospital, said five policemen appeared to give him the ticket for failure to keep in his iane. (AP)

Red Tide Ruins NE Shellfish Harvest

The "red tide," the infestation of poisonous algae that has invaded the New England coast from Cape Cod to upper Maine, has brought economic devastation of thousands of people who earn their livelihood from the ocean.

The mysterious microorganism, which can be fatally toxic to humans, has struck with a virulence unprecedented there. Its economic effects, many fear, will be felt long after its rust-red waters have receded.

Massachusetts and Maine have closed their coastal flats to the harvesting of almost all varieties of clams and mussels, which are potentially lethal. New Hampshire, which has no commercial beds but packages shellfish from the other two states, is also under an embargo.

This has meant unemployment for thousands of clam diggers and independent small-time harvesters. The loss to the clam diggers of Maine alone, numbering between 3,000 and 4,000, has been put at $1-million a week.

But the public scare touched off by cases of paralytic shellfish poisoning, which has reportedly afflicted 33 persons so far, has hurt all the oceanic industries, including lobstering and fin fishing, where the catch is deemed safe for consumption.

And signs of contamination have turned up in preliminary tests made on scallops off Cape Cod, where the multimillion-dollar harvest is scheduled to begin Oct. 1.

Further, there is evidence indicating that the poison has spread to waterfowl that consume shellfish, which would open another possible avenue of dissemination toward man.

Red tides, composed of many different types of pigmented algae ranging from green to brown, are more often than not harmless. But toxic varieties have periodically been the scourge of coastal waters around the world. They are recorded as far back as 500 B.C. off the coast of China.

The lethal algae that has inundated the New England coast is named Gonyaulax tamarensis. It is motile, with a flagellum, and under a microscope looks like an infesitesimal round mine of World War II.

New England water, cold and with a good tidal flush, are generally inhospitable to red tides. But a "seed' condition is endemic, many biologists believe, and it simply awaits the combination of proper conditions to achieve sufficient concentration for a "bloom."

The conditions are thought to include much sunlight, low salinity, warm water and a sudden upsurge in nutrients. They come after heavy rains, such as those that fell around Labor Day, which result in run-offs from streams and estuaries.

The effects of pollution as a contributing factor are not established. But disturbances of the ocean floor are known to stir up mineral particles that provide the life-giving nutrients.

An extensive dredging project has been undertaken in the channel off Cape Ann, Mass., where the red tide first broke out a week ago Thursday before spreading out along the 250-mile coastline.

The algae primarily concentrate in bivalves like clams because they have a "filter-feeding" system-a continual siphoning of plankon for food-that speeds a build-up of the toxic substance. The toxin, some scientists believe, kills by depriving the organism of oxygen.

Coastline from Cape Cod north was affected. First sighting was at cross.

For edibility, an acceptable level of toxicity is below 80 micrograms per 100 grams of meat, according to Alan Rock of the Massachusetts Department of Public Health. Mr. Rock said that tests on a clam taken in a highly infected area near Gloucester showed over 9,000 micrograms.

Dan Brown To Speak On Psychedelic Usage

This Tuesday evening at 8:00 P.M. in the Student Union Ballroom, Dan Brown will be giving a lecture describing the history of psychedelic usage by the youth culture over the past two years from the view point of the free clinic worker.

Dan Brown has worked for the past four years as a therapist and trainer in drug crisis intervention. He has also made a study of drug treatment methods by a number of crisis clinics around the country in order to find which treatment methods are most effective. Recently, he has trained in LSD psychotherapy under Dr. Stanislav Grof at the Maryland Psychiatric Research Center.

The lecture will present this extensive research into the treatment of crises arising from the use of psychedelic drugs (bad trips, prolonged reactions, flashbacks). The lecture will also present a map of consciousness based on research with psychedelic drugs and a theory on the implications of psychedelic drugs for human growth. An attempt will be made to evaluate realistically the problems and creative elements coming out of the use of psychedelic drugs and to explain some of the more recent trends within the youth culture in light of the problems arising from the psychedelic movement. For example, results of Dan Brown's recent study on barbiturate or "downers" users will explain some interesting connections to the psychedelic movement, the current spread of interest in meditation and spiritual paths and the concurrent problems that arise will be explored as well as some of the implications of these methods for human growth.

This is the first in a series of lectures on crisis growth and the development of consciousness sponsored by Room To Move. It will give a board overview and critical appraisall of some of the methods and youth culture has used as mechanisms of growth: psychedelics' downers" and meditational systems.

Injustice Reeks At Lawton Trail

(Editor's note: Three black men are currently on trial in Riverside, California, for the murder of two white policemen a year ago last spring. The following article concersn that trial but focuses on only one of the defendants, a community organizer named Gary Lawton. The other two men were scooped up separately by the police, do not know Lawton, and have court appointed lawyers (as did Lawton until recently). The defense committee that has grown up around the case has demanded the freedom of all three men but most of their work has centered around Lawton.)

RIVERSIDE, California (LNS) — Gary Lawton, Nehemiah Jackson and Larrie Gardner went on trial for the killing of two policemen September 11 in a case that has this rural conty silently waiting the outcome.

The small urban community (50 miles east of Los Angeles) has not had a cop killed in 28 years until April, 1971, when two white policemen, Leonard Christianson and Paul Tell, were shot down on the outskirts of a black community. The police then went beserk, raiding black homes and interrogating hundreds of blacks.

The two officers had answered an emergency call when they were shot. Witnesses on the scene reported seeing blacks with natural hairdos and white teenagers running away. Lawton is a balding, heavyset, 33-year-old ex-Marine and the other two are blacks in their twenties.

All three have been held 18 months without bail. (In contrast, a policeman from the nearby town of Blyth is on trial in the next court for admittedly killing a Chicano. He is free on $5,000 bail.

The trial was moved from Riverside to Indio, a town of some 20,000 mostlv white residents for "security reasons". But the defense says the move was for racist reasons since only 1% of the farming community is black.

On the opening day of the trial, the defense moved to have a change of venue back to Riverside which has a 25% black population. They also moved for a two-week delay since Lawton's attorneys have only been in the case two months. (Lawton's earlier lawyers were court appointed and begged out of the case at the last minute.) The new lawyers have had to go through 300 hours of police-conducted tape interviews, 1200 pages of preliminary hearing testimony and 600 police reports totalling about 2,000 pages. That just touches the surface.

The defense also asked that the police-conducted polygraph tests be admitted as evidence. Before Lawton was charged with the murders (and later with conspiracy so that more circumstantial and tangential material and conversations could be admitted into evidence), he passed three lie detector tests.

And finally, the defense asked Judge Warren Slaughter to assure that a jury of peers be selected in keeping with the sixth amendment right.

But by the end of the week, the judge had denied all of the pre-trial motions. Slaughter knew that the defense was flying in four experts, former police and army experts from as far away as New York, to testify about the accuracy of the polygraphy tests. For a defense committee that pays five lawyers and legal workers $10 a week plus $135 rental for a house in Indio, the airline tickets alone put them in serious debt. But after they arrived, the judge blithely dismissed the motion. His only flexibility was a vague promise that sometime in the future he might allow the four to testify. In the meantime, they all had to return to their homes.

Saigon Termed Center of Sin

SAN FRANCISCO (LNS)-Saigon is one of the grimmest cities in the world, a sprawling refugee camp. Most of the city's three million inhabitants fled homes in the Vietnamese countryside during the last ten years after U.S. bombing and pacification programs had turned much of the region surrounding Saigon into a barren wasteland unfit for habitation.

What they came to was a city whose economy centered on vice, prostitution, the drug trade, and a huge black market–spinoffs of the massive American presence. The Saigon of the sixties was the brainchild of American university professors like Samuel Huntington of Harvard who theorized that the rapid, forced urbanization of Vietnam would deprive the National Liberation Front of its loyal rural base.

Saigon today is grimmer than ever. The city's biggest gangsters are also its government, its economy is in chaos–and the forced urbanization of Vietnam has in no way created a loyal base for the Saigon government. Indeed, it has fed the flames of urban resistance to the rule of President Nguyen Van Thieu.

As a result, the capital of South Vietnam has become the capital of police repression and the seat of one of history's most brutal dictatorships.

Imperiled by the successes of the PLAF (People's Liberation Armed Forces) offensive, the Thieu government has stripped to its bare essentials in recent months. In June, Thieu assumed absolute dictatorial powers, scrapping the constitution pushed on him several years ago by public-relations minded Americans.

Thieu bases his now total personal dictatorship on a "national emergency" law that never actually passed his own rubber-stamp legislature.

"According to opposition congressmen," reports Thomas Fox, a Dispatch News correspondent in Saigon, "Thieu, pressing for a needed majority to make the bill law, made lucrative offers, including Saigon villas, around the world tickets for two, and more than $12,000 in Vietnamese piasters to any senator who would turn from the opposition to pro-Thieu forces."

When bribery failed to produce the necessary majority, Thieu had three opposition senators arrested. As a result of the missing senators, the opposition didn't have enough votes to defeat the measure and walked out.

The walk-out in turn reduced the number of senators on the floor beneath the number needed for a legal session of the senate. Nonetheless, 26 pro-Thieu senators took a vote in favor of the measure, and Thieu has ruled by decree ever since.

Among his edicts:

--Authorization of a "shoot-to-kill" policy by Saigon police directed at the occupants of any vehicle which fails to stop after the firing of three warning shots. Roving civil and military checkpoints routinely stop vehicles and pedestrians to check for arms, identity cards, and evidence of desertion from the armed forces.

Before the shoot-to-kill policy, most Saigon drivers, fearing any contact with the police, sped up at the sound of a police whistle. Traffic is now stop-and-go everywhere in the city.

--A suspension of the right to a trial for servicemen and civil servants accused of "treason, membership in a Communist organization, surrender to the enemy, rebellion in the armed forces or violation of military or administrative orders when facing the enemy."

Thieu and anyone he authorizes may now pass instant death sentences in such cases.

--A measure to eliminate all local elections in South Vietnam's 10,755 hamlets and ordering the 44 province chiefs, military men appointed by Thieu himself, to name all local officials.

"I must complain that our government has allowed us to enjoy too much democracy too soon," explained Thieu, who was the only candidate in South Vietnam's last presidential election.

--A directive ending all draft deferments to religious people, including Buddhist monks, and members of ethnic minorities traditionally exempt from the draft. Every able-bodied man in South Vietnam is subject to the draft, which means that many households have lost their chief breadwinner.

No. Viet Peace Plan Explained

PARIS (LNS) - The September 11 PRG (Provisional Revolutionary Government of South Vietnam) declaration on the military and political solution for Vietnam was at the center of the discussion at the 149th session of the Paris Conference on September 14. By rejecting it, U.S. Ambassador William Porter "let a chance for peace go by", Ly Van Sau, press representative of the PRG, and Nguyen Minh Vy, DRV (Democratic Republic of Vietnam) negotiator, said after the session.

The September 11 declaration, presented by Chief PRG delegate Madame Nguyen Thi Binh proceeds on the basis of the earlier seven-point peace plan, and reiterates the necessity for both a swift U.S. military withdrawal and the dumping of Thieu.

But it also states even more clearly than in the past that: "A solution to the internal problem of South Vietnam must stem from the actual situation: there exist in South Vietnam two administrations, two armies, and other political forces. It is necessary to achieve national concord; the parties in South Vietnam must unite on the basis of equality, mutual respect and mutual non-elimination; democratic freedoms must be guaranteed to the people."

The PRG insistence on the reality of the "two administrations and two armies" is underscored by the actual military and political relationship of forces.

Throughout South Vietnam, as Madame Binh explained in an interview on September 1, the revolutionary forces have established their own administration, their own government, with their own educational system, transport system, etc.--creating a real situation of "dual power", in which the PRG administrative organs are often far superior in effectiveness to those of the Thieu government, not only in the liberated areas but even in areas technically under the control of the Saigon government.

British Troops Smash No-Go Areas

(Editor's note: The authors are North Americans who are preparing to do a film on the IRA. They spent July and August of this year in Ireland.)

Belfast (LNS) — Belfast is a city where the air always smells like smoke. Smoke from fires, explosions and gunfire, but mainly from industrial pollution. Even on clear, windy days our throats were always slightly parched and sore as if we were breathing traces of CS gas that lingered in the air.

We arrived here just after the British army invaded the legendary Catholic "no-go" areas of Derry and Belfast. Before dawn, on Monday, July 31, 50-ton Centurion tanks equipped with bulldozer blades had smashed through the concrete and metal barricades first erected nearly three years ago.

Thousands of soldiers in full battle uniform, their faces smeared with black camouflage, had moved into the Bogside and Creggan neighborhoods in Derry and Andersontown and Ardoyne in Belfast.

The full-scale British invasion, code-named "Operation Motorman", was the largest military assault launched by the British in Northern Ireland since the current fighting began in 1969.

We made our way past army roadblocks and checkpoints up the Falls Road to the Andersontown housing estate to see what had happened.

We found soldiers, tanks and armored cars everywhere in the streets of the Catholic community. The British had rushed in 4,000 reinforcements prior to the invasion. These additional troops were drawn in part from Britain's NATO contingent in Germany and were released from their assignment only by the special permission of the NATO command after consultation with Nixon. There are now 21,000 British soldiers in Northern Ireland.

The soldiers, some veterans of British colonial wars in Cyprus, Southern Yemen and east Africa, seemed to be coming from distant jungle war. Their mottled green fatigues looked out of place against the grey pavement and red brick homes. We also saw sand-colored Saracen personnel carriers patrolling slowly while soldiers made house-to-house searches and arrests.

These vehicles--the Catholics call them "pigs" had been withdrawn from the deserts of the Middle East by the British with such haste that they had no time to repaint them with more appropriate camouflage. The soldiers and equipment represented the return of British rule, Ireland's ancient enemy, using the methods and wearing the clothes acquired in colonial wars all over the world.

"The army is now in occupation and control throughout Northern Ireland," announced William Whitelaw, the British administrator for the Six Counties, after all the barricades were down. Protestant-Unionist politicians, newspapers and organizations cheered the invasion, although the Protestant Vanguard movement and the Ulster Defense Association insisted that it be just the start of a campaign to liquidate the I.R.A. and "their sympathizers" that, it said, should have been mounted long ago.

British soldiers shot and killed two Catholic boys during the attack on "Free Derry". They searched homes with an uncharacteristic restraint compared to previous raids–publicity has been bad for the troops since "Bloody Sunday" last winter--but they still kicked in doors, interrogated and photographed families, lifted suspects, seized weapons and ammunition and took over local schools, parks and athletic facilities to serve as army posts.

Poverty Rise, No Surprise

WASHINGTON, D.C.(LNS)--"It's probably true that the world's burden of poverty is increasing rather than declining," observed the World Bank in mock surprised in its annual report issed in mid-September.

"Statistics conceal the gravity of the underlying economic and social problems," the report goes on with feeling, "which are typified by severly skewed income distribution, excessive levels of unemployment, high rates of infant mortality, low rates of literacy, serious malnutrition and widespread ill health."

Behind those statistics of averages, the report continues passionately, "lie the grim realities of how life at the lower end of the scale is lived by the poorest among nations and the poorest within nations."

The World Bank should know. Established in 1946, it is a specialized agency of the UN which is supposed to help "underdeveloped" (usually third world) countries spur industry and develop their natural resources. But what it has succeeded in doing is develop those natural resources that would be useful to the technology of the developed countries. What that has meant in most cases is that the industrial country (especially the U.S.) gets richer, small numbers of people in the developing country get rich, and the rest of the people in the developing country get poorer. And at the same time it has made sure that the "underdeveloped" country has the type of government which finds such an arrangement acceptable before offering support.

For example, it was not until 1968 (after the right-wing military coup) that Greece was found to be acceptable for support by the World Bank. The same thing was true in Indonesia. While Sukarno was pursuing an independent policy, Indonesia received no loans. It was only after 1968 when Suharto took over and slaughtered over half a million communists and suspected communists, that Indonesia was deemed to ready for loans.

All of which is not surprising if you look more closely at who makes up the World Bank. Each member nation (there are over 100) chooses a delegate to the Bank's conference which meets once a year in Washington. Each member has 250 votes plus one note for each $100,000 deposited in the bank. Because of this the United States has 30% of the votes and the U.S. and Western Europe together control 65% of the votes. The president of the World Bank is none other than Robert S. McNamara, who went from the Ford Motor Company to being Secretary of Defense (who took the first steps of U.S. involvement in the Vietnam war) to being president of the World Bank.

G.M. Reveals Nippon Pact

DETROIT (LNS) - In a move which would seem to contradict the purported goals of Nixon's "New Economic Policy" which aims at enabling the U.S. to better "compete" with Japanese corporations, General Motors recently announced an about-to-be-completed deal with three Japanese companies. Isuzu Motors, Ltd., Kawasaki Heavy Industries Ltd., and C. Itoh and Co. will join with GM in forming GM Allison Japan Ltd. in November. The company will import manufacture and sell automatic transmissions and gas turbine engines for heavy-duty com- in Japan.

Put Sylvan Together

There are a lot of things that need to be done on this campus, but one that has been crying for attention for a long time is need for a walkway near the Sylvan area. Although there are roads in the area, the simple fact is (and this applies to the whole campus) that students walk in a straight line, not around things.

Across from the Sylvan dorms there is a hill where the construction workers have their shack. It is in pretty poor condition, mainly because students in Sylvan, who have to walk that way to get anywhere on campus except WOPE, constantly use it. Since is is unpaved, it gets worn down easily, with many footprints leaving their impression on the ground, making it even more treacherous to walk on. It's even worse in the winter. A simple paving job would solve the whole problem. The students could walk, the earth wouldn't get messed up, and everybody would be happy.

The Sylvan area pays the highest rent on campus. It seems absurd that after more than a year of existence students there should still be looking for a decent place to walk without risking breaking their necks. Add this to the frustration of a construction project that's had the place virtually upside down for a year and a half, and it becomes a major annoyance. We hope that the area is fixed up quickly, so people in Sylvan can start living a normal existence for a change.

My Car Got Hooked

I am writing this in the heat of my anger so as not to lose the jist of the story which I am about to tell. It's unfortunate that one never realizes an injustice until it directly affects his welfare or his wallet, and I, myself, am guilty of this.

The injustice I am talking about is in the form of a local towing company that profits from the naivety and complacency of UMass students. Just this Saturday night I had an incident with this very towing company.

The story started when a friend called me and told me about a party in Sylvan, an area in which I used to live. A few friends and I decided that we would go to Sylvan and see what was happening. Upon arriving, I found few parking spots, but took my time to look for a place with no apparent "tow zone" signs. I found one along the road from "M" lot to Sylvan, parked there, and went on to Brown, Cashin and McNamara. When I left about four o'clock the next morning, my car was gone.

Of course I was angry to find that my car had been towed from an unmarked tow zone, but my anger increased upon arriving at the towing company the next morning when there, glaring me right in the face, was a big sign saying "NO CHECKS". Luckily, I had cashed a check the day before and had fourteen dollars in my wallet, and even more luckily, a young lady there was able to advance me three more dollars to enable me to get my car out of hock. However, there were two other guys there who were not so fortunate as I, and the gentleman at the desk, with his tremendously "witty" remarks, was being tremedously obstinate about the whole matter. When I asked this gentleman about the possibility of their towing my car from an unmarked zone, he informed me that the police authorized every towing, (which accounts for the ten dollar parking ticket on my windshield) and that the police couldn't be wrong (ha ha).

My reaction to this whole arrangement was that of startling bewilderment that a company, dealing almost exclusively with students, could be so indignant in their attitude towards students. The expectation that every student carries seventeen dollars in his wallet is ridiculous to begin with, but to hassle them about it when they can't produce it is absurd. This was a Sunday and if the student didn't have seventeen dollars in cash, then there was no way for him to cash a check and get it. It seems to me that a student I.D. or a license and registration would be adequate enough proof of the person's identity to allow him or her to pay at a later date.

I'm sure nothing will be done about this injustice unless more people start to protest. If this towing company is unwilling to change, then maybe the university should switch to another. However, by no means should we allow this towing company to continue to function in this manner.

About The Loyalty Oath

By RICHARD HOWLAND

The impact of the "Loyalty Oath Case" (Cole v. Richardson, 92 S. Ct. 1332 (1972) on citizens of both Massachusetts and other states is only beginning to become apparent. As a lawyer, it is first important to emphasize that renewed Constitutional attacks on this particular oath in this particular state must surely be ill-fated. Only the most artful and intricate sort of fashioning is likely to survive lower court summary dismissal even with a sympathetic judiciary (which one should not rely upon). Therefore I urge opponents of the oath to take as an absolute and uncompromisable fact the dubious success of access to the Courts for change so that avenues more likely of success may be explored.

The most obvious alternative (which is also least satisfying to opponents of the oath) is to read the decision of the Supreme Court most closely to determine what it has held to be the meaning of the oath in question. In footnote 3 of its opinion, for instance, the Court appears to conclude that there is "nothing about a continuing criminal responsibility to 'live up' to it" (the oath) once it is subscribed. A possible construction of this observation by the Court is that the oath applies only to that instant of time during which it is being subscribed. The Court also stated:

> "The purpose of the oath is clear on its face. We cannot presume that the Massachusetts legislature intended by its use of such general terms as 'uphold', 'defend', and 'oppose' to impose obligations of specific, positive action on oath takers." (at 1337)

A fair reading of this example of judicial construction is simply that the Supreme Court per Mr. Chief Justice Burger conceives a new meaning of the words "uphold", "defend", and "oppose" heretofore unencountered by adherents of the Anglo-Saxon tongues. The importance of such a construction in legal terms should not be missed. In our system words have legal meaning depending upon the most recent and highest court construction of them-Noah Webster notwithstanding. Since the purpose of the oath which is so abundantly "clear on its face" to the Court (per Mr. Chief Justice Berger), is (by the artifice of that declaration) not revealed to those of us to whom it's not so lucid, we must resort to the constructed text in order to determine the meaning. The result is something like this:

> "I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will vaguely and passively...(a) the several constitutions and that I will vaguely and passively...(b) the governments involved by force, violence or by any illegal or unconstitutional method."

For the missing words at (a) you have to conceive of something supportive and protective that is unspecific, passive and not required. For (b) you must install a concept of "opposition to overthrow" that is not active, required or specific and which does not impinge on notions of advocacy by speech and the like. The reason why no substitutes are offered is that I am unable to discover words adequate to the task.

The only enduring reading of Chief Justice Burger's decision (not the dissent) seems to me that

1) the oath is constitutional;

2) ergo, persons refusing to subscribe to it may be refused employment as a consequence thereof;

3) but, the Supreme Court of the United States has determined that upholding and defending Constitutions as well as opposing violent overthrow of governments are concepts which have no meaning to Americans and are so passive as to carry no obligations whatsoever.

This reading is unavoidable in the context of the cases with which the Court manages to find itself in harmony. It is one with which many opponents of oaths can comfortably agree. I submit that it is an allowable reading to men and women of conscience who are confortable with the notion that the Supreme Court is precise in its determinations, and has carefully prescribed that conduct which we may be assured comports with our philosophical underpinning. Secure in the knowledge that we would not be forced to do that which was prohibited by the Constitution we are justified in looking beyond the mere words of the oath and the meaning we would have given them without enlightened instruction. By the guidance of the Chief Justice some of us may feel more comfortable in subscribing the oath since we may know that it is judicially determined to be meaningless.

Not all persons will be assured by this view. They may seek to address the legislature to repeal the offensive statute or remove its mandatory character or specify vitiating exceptions. They may demand that candidates now standing for election make their postures known. While this course is not much more encouraging than renewed court tests, it is the faster and more secure path given the fact of the Supreme Court's decision. At least the Chief Justice declined to discover that the oath was mandated by the Constitution. He only found it permissable.

Lest there be any doubt, were I to have decided the question, I would not agree with either the reasoning or the result of this Court. Yet I do not sit in that place and perhaps with considerable justification. What's important to keep in mind is that there is mightly little solace to be anticipated from that place and returning there may be the worst of all possible courses. Simple pragmatism suggests that new doors must be opened. Electoral pragmatism suggests that some doors must be closed.

Apportionment: A Traditional Solution

To The Editor:

Reading the comments on Student Government's decision to appropriate 15 seats for Third World students prompts us to add our views. This dilemma particularly affects one of us who belongs to the Third World.

There would be no need for such a special block of SG seats under the present system of representation by residence IF, as one writer suggested, all the Third World students lived together in one house or area. We hope he wasn't suggesting that segregated housing might be the answer to the problem.

There are some who argue that a Third World student, if qualified, can (easily) be elected, no matter where he/she lives. But the difficulty here, assuming it's easy for a Third World person to be elected, lies in the relationship between the representative and his electorate. Every representative has the obligation to speak for the views of those who elected him. Even if he was elected as a student-at-large, this would mean that his power base would be predominantly white, middle-class America. To expect a Third World representative to accept this is to expect him to be a Tom.

On first examination, it seems undemocratic to set aside a specific number of seats for a small segment of a college community. But we ought to consider the similarity of this situation to the one facing the founding fathers of the original United States. These men were concerned that the small states, such as Rhode Island, would have its special interests buried by those of the larger states, such as Virginia. To protect the minority voices, they stipulated that each state, no matter how large, have an equal number of senators, namely two. The setting aside of some seats for Third World students, who have legitimate concerns peculiar to their group, follows this traditional solution to the problem of minority representation.

We would further suggest that this is a small part of the major issue that faces America today: how our country responds to the pressures of the Third World communities both in this country and throughout the world. Ensuring a forum of open discussion is surely one step in the right direction. Without discussion there can be no understanding, and without understanding, there can be no equality.

Lastly, the suggestion that specific interest groups besides the Third World community be appropriated seats should be considered. This would certainly liven up campaigns, insure representation of all views, perhaps even get more people to vote. Then perhaps some meaningful decisions can be made.

Maybe some day we will not have to take such measures to insure minority views. Perhaps some day we indeed will all be equals with an equal chance for success or failure in an open election as in life's other competitions. But that time has not yet come, and until it does, we must continue to use special measures.

Commuter's Loss

To The Editor:

It often appears that a small group of people control the government here at UMass. Thursday night was the commuter assembly meeting. Everyone voiced their opinions and were listened to with respect. The problem was, out of approximately 6,000 commuters only twenty-five people attended to decide how their $15,376 was to be spent. Fortunately the Constitution requires thirty-five people be present to conduct a meeting and thus, no money could be dispersed. We urge all commuters to attend the next meeting or forfeit your money. It is your $15,376. Come and get it!

Shlitz's Gain

To The Editor:

The Schlitz photo contest ad which appeared on page 11 of last Tuesday's paper should be clarified. At the bottom of the ad it states that all photos submitted become property of Joseph Schlitz Brewing Co. It is possible that they pay $100 for what they consider to be the best photo, but use someone else's entry for an ad campaign. Any photographer whose work was used in the manner would have no recourse for financial reimbursement.

Boycott Farah

Dear Campus Editor:

I am writing to ask for your support of a most important cause. More than 3,000 Mexican-Americans are on strike in Texas and New Mexico against the Farah Manufacturing Company, one of the largest pants companies in the country. The Farah workers are fighting for a decent life for themselves and their families.

As coordinator of youth activities in support of the Farah workers, I am writing to all campus newspaper editors asking for publicity and support. Students as a group comprise a large segment of the jeans' consumers and we have a chance to be tremendously effective. I have enclosed a copy of our ad which appeared in the New York Times, some literature and a sample story for your campus newspaper. Because publicity of the boycott is so important to the success of the strike, would you please send us copies of what material you do publish.

Thanks much and Viva La Huelga!

Recognize Discrimination

To The Editor:

In his editorial of Thursday Matt Tackeff made some statements with which I disagree. Mr. Tackeff has made a common error in assuming that the recognition of a minority is the same as discrimination against that minority.

It is true that an individual's political opinions are not determined by his skin color or ethnic background. However, that individual's life-style and the way he is treated by society will have an important effect on his political opinions. As long as racism exists in our society the Third World will be a political interest group.

Due to the makeup of our society the Third World constitutes a minority, if a sizable one, on our campus; and as a result of the procedures for electing representatives to the Student Senate, were not being represented in that body. The Student Senate cannot be truly effective if any important minority is excluded. Therefore, it was a logical step to arrange that the Third World be among those represented in the Student Senate.

Meet For Peace

To The Editor:

It was said at one time that the Vietnam War would not be an issue in the 1972 campaign. We know now that it is, but it goes beyond that. This nation's resources are still being expended to fight a war which we rightfully have no part in. Bombs, rockets, and artillery shells from land and sea continue to rain down on the people of Vietnam at an unprecedented rate. According to the Cornell study 90% of the bombing in South Vietnam is indiscriminate and designed to force the local population into government controlled areas. We know from many sources that the bombing of the dikes in North Vietnam is intentional and designed to weaken the dikes so as to cause flooding during the monsoon season.

It is for these reasons and many more that I invite you to join us in opposing the war. A meeting of the UMass Peace Action Coalition will be held Monday, Sept. 25 at 7:30 in 905-909 Campus Center. I hope to see you there.

Bust In Ann Arbor Is Only $5 Fine

ANN ARBOR, Mich.,-Under the trees on the University of Michigan campus, in the back rows of movie theaters-even, it is said, in the public gallery of the City Council chamber itself-young people are increasingly lighting up marijuana in public these days.

Ask a youth if he is afraid of the police, and the answer is likely to be : "Heck, no. Anyway, it's only a $5 fine."

Since May, shortly after two racial members of the HUMAN Rights party were elected to the City Council, the penalty for marijuana use or sale here has been steadily eroded.

In a series of moves, completed this week, the council more or less declared its independence from state drug laws governing marijuana, and replaced them with a city ordinance providing for the issuance of a $5 ticket to those caught in violation.

According to the National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws, a Washington-based lobby group advocating the legalization of pot, Ann Arbor's ordinance is the most liberal in the nation.

In East Lansing, home of Michigan State University, a similar law has been passed, but it provides for fines of up to $100 on a third offense and permits judges to impose probationary terms on offenders.

The state law that was superseded here provides penalties ranging from a year's imprisonment for possession of marijuana to four years in the penitentiary for its sale.

Ann Arbor's penalty is "sort of like a parking ticket," according to City Attorney Jerold Lax. Mr. Lax says that all a violator must do is mail back the marijuana ticket to City Hall with a check or money order for $5. If the person wishes to plead innocent, he will have to post an appearance bond and stand trial in Municipal Court, but the maximum penalty will remain the same-$5.

In Michigan, cities have the option of passing their own ordinances when they feel they have a special need not recognized by state law.

In Ann Arbor, the police and city prosecuting attorneys have agreed to use the city ordinance rather than the state law, but the ordinance has yet to be tested in court.

It is possible, the city attorney said this week, that a municipal judge might strike down the ordinance on a technicality. The first case is expected to reach court within a few weeks.

The ordinance was greeted with evident pleasure by marijuana smokers and was hailed as the first important victory for the Human Rights party, which sponsored the legislation and passed it with Democratic support over the protest of the council's Republicans.

Police Chief Walter Krasny said in an interview that the trend toward open smoking had not escaped his notice.

But he insisted that while his men would not hesitate to ticket people they saw smoking marijuana, they were not looking too hard for them either. There are more important tasks, he feels, in keeping up with the rising crime rate.

Positions Open At DVP

Applications are now being accepted from Freshmen and Transfer Students for vacancies on the Distinguished Visitors Program Committee. This student run organization serves the University community by sponsoring well-known personalities representing a wide variety of backgrounds in such subjects as politics, literature, religion, medicine, science, and entertainment.

This year D.V.P has already sponsored two very successful speakers, Anthony Burgess, author of Clockwork Orange, and Dr. William Nolen, author of Making of a Surgeon. Our past speakers include Hubert Humphrey, Art Buchwald, Mohammud Ali, Arthur Clark, and Adelle Davis. D.V.P. also sponsors an annual Martin Luther King, Jr., Memorial Program in the spring. Plans are being made to bring Peter Rabbit, Isaac Asimov, Don Lee, and Judith Crist.

If you are a Freshman or Transfer Student and would like to contribute something worthwhile to the University while meeting some fascinating people, apply for D.V.P. To make a good representative body we need members from Third World, foreign students, or any other group who would like some say in who come to UMass. Every applicant will be subject to an interview by D.V.P. members. Applications can be picked up in the R.S.O. office and must be returned there by October 6th.

Now, You Can't Fail At Yale

NEW HAVEN - A Yale undergraduate now can fail a course with a fair measure of impunity.

Beginning this semester at Yale College there will be no record kept of failing grades; professors will be issuing grades of A, B, C or D or nothing at all.

Announcing the change today, the University said it was intended mainly to encourage students to take difficult courses they might otherwise shy away from. A similar system is already in effect at Brown University.

If a Yale undergraduate does not get one of the four passing grades, obviously he has not passed the course. But nothing will appear in the transcript of his college record.

A graduate school or a prospective employer need never know how often a student fumbled on his way through college. Only his professor and the people in his dean's office and other internal Yale departments will know.

"Grading is one of those horrible issues where everyone has a favorite system and everyone has a strong feeling about it," said Dean Horace Taft of Yale College.

"There is no consensus, not even within the ranks of humanists and scientists," he added.

The new Yale plan was itself a compromise reached this year to take the place of the system of four grades in use in the college since 1967; honors, high pass, pass and fail.

Yale's Course of Study Committee on Grading had held high hopes for that four-grade system when it was introduced. It was copied from Yale's graduate schools, where it is still used.

But for undergraduates and their professors the "pass" was too close to "fail" to be regarded as anything better than a D. Therefore it was rarely used, a fact that prompted academics at other insitutions to scoff at what they considered the inflated grades at Yale.

Even failing grades were rarely given. In 1970-71, for example, 1.2 per cent of all undergraduate grades were failing. Some students and faculty members advocated restoring a form of the five-grade system by putting a grade called "high honors" at the head of the list. But this has been tried at other institutions, with an inflationary effect. The grade "honors" then tends to become a B, and new target for derision.

There has been a lot of support among the 4,800 undergraduates at Yale and from some of the faculty, as there has been across the country, for a simple "pass-fail" system.

But graduate schools still want to know more about a student: whether he did well or just scraped by.

The system in operation at Brown University gives the student two grading options. He may accept an S for satisfactory or an N.C. for no credit or may choose to accept a grade of A, B, or C, or no grade. In any event no record is made on his transcript of failing a course. Once he makes the choice he cannot decide to change after mid-semester.

At Princeton a pass-fail system operated side-by-side with traditional grading, and faculty members say they can tell by a student's attitude toward his work which system he expects to be graded by.

At the University of Michigan it has been established that students working under a pass-fail system spend less time and effort on their courses, even if they retained as much as the students working under a traditional grading system.

At Stanford University a system of A, B, C, pass, and no-credit was tried. But "pass' still looked like a D, and "no-credit" was clearly an F. The only measurable difference under the system was that the number of A's given to undergraduates at Stanford increased.

The change at Yale is the 11th grading revision here in this century.

Students were graded from 1902 until 1918 on a 0 to 400 scale, with 200 being the pasing grade. For the next nine years the scale went from 0 to 100, with 60 as passing.

From 1939 until 1943 a letter grading system comprised a minus or plus, A, B, C, D, F and X. The last grade indicated the student not only failed the course, but did so so completely.

The new system, according to Dean Taft, may encourage students to take courses which they consider difficult and to try courses outside their own field.

"The decision not to report failures reaffirms the principle that we want students to experiment," he said.

He added an uncertain word about the new plan that suggests that it may not be in use at Yale forever.

"It does effectively discriminate between the student who just barely got by and the student who did fairly reasonable work," Dean Taft said. "But for that reason the D grade may inhibit experimentation."

TV Scientist To Give Lecture

Earl Ubell, science editor for WCBS-TV, will explore the question "Will Science Destroy Society?" in the opening lecture of the Science and Public Policy lecture series on Wednesday, at 8:00 p.m. in the main lecture hall of the Academic Building at Hampshire College.

For many years science editor of the New York Herald-Tribune, Mr. Ubell has been the recipient of numerous journalism awards including the Albert Lasker award for medical journalism, the Science Writers Award from the American Psychological Foundation, and the Westinghouse award from the American Association for the Advancement of Science. He is a member and former president of the National Association of Science Writers and the Nuclear Energy Writers Association.

Now beginning its second year, the Science and Public Policy series is being coordinated by two Hampshire faculty members with previous experience in the often controversial areas where science and public policy meet. Herbert Bernstein, assistant professor of physics and originator of the series, served as consultant at the Hudson Institute in Croton-on-Hudson, N.Y., while Brian O'Leary, assistant professor of astronomy and science policy assessment, was formerly a scientist-astronaut with NASA.

Among lecturers planning to participate in the series at future dates are: Gerard O'Neill, professor of physics at Princeton University on "The Colonization of Space"; Milton Leitenberg of the Swedish Institute of International Affairs on "Chemical and Biological Warfare" and "Ecocide in Vietnam"; and Brian O'Leary on "McGovern's Science Policy."

The series is sponsored by the School of Natural Science and Mathematics at Hampshire College. The public is invited to attend.

Interested persons should come to the Counseling Center, Room 243 Whitmore, and register with the secretary. The last day for signing up will be Friday, September 29. The first meeting of the group is scheduled for Thursday, October 4. This first session will be held in the Counseling Center, from 7-9 P.M.

Homosexual Gains Rights

HARRISBURG, Pa., Joseph Acanfora 3d, whose led to his suspension as a student teacher, has been certified to teach in this state.

John C. Pittenger, the State Secretary of education, approved Mr. Acanfora'a credentials yesterday. But he said he would not have done so if Mr. Acanfora had ever been convicted of homosexual activities.

As a student at Pennsylvania State University last February, Mr. Acanfora brought suit against the university, seeking equal rights for homosexuals, which he contended the university denied.

SWAP Preparations Underway

By SUSAN HABEEB

Planning stages for the fourteenth annual SWAP Conferences are now getting under way. The conferences are scheduled for Nov. 17-19 with no definite theme as yet. Co-chairpersons are Colleen McGraph and Tom Merrigan.

This year the SWAP Committee hopes to involve every compenent of the University. For the next meeting, invitations will be sent to different areas of the student body. The committee hopes to have members of minority groups on campus including Blacks, Spanish speaking and Foreign students taking part. They would also like to get more Freshmen involved.

Participants eventually will be chosen by application, with no regards to past experience. The committee hopes to reach average students who have constructive criticism and new concepts of reform.

A final tally of participants in the conference will include undergraduate and graduate students, faculty, administration, trustees, legislators and possibly an area selectman.

The Conferences will discuss such aspects of University life as academic reform, living environments, student activities and total University environment.

According to Sheila McRevey, an advisor to the Committee, they are hopeful that prodedures will be improved this year; to bring about a balance between the formats of the last two years.

Ms. McRevey said that in 1970, the SWAP Conferences were so concerned with the form of their proposals that little time was spent on discussions; an important part of the conferences. She went on to say that last year the Committee tried to have more discussions, so that those attending would better understand problems on campus. They are hoping to have some of each this year so that they will have infomative discussions resulting in structural proposals.

The Student Senate is again funding the majority of money to send student members. All other members of the committee pay their full way. Last year the conferences were held at Northfield Inn, in Northfield, Mass. As yet, no location has been chosen for the 1972 conferences.

Concert Group To Lecture

UMass Concert Dance Group will present its annual fall lecture-demonstration in Bowker Auditorium at 8:15 p.m. this Thursday, Friday and Saturday.

Over the past several years, these fall programs have introduced many area residents as well as students to the world of concert dancing by explaining the creative ideas of the choreographers and dancers and then presenting fully costumed concert pieces.

Brand-new works offered this fall include a large group dance choreographed by Marilyn Patton, dance program director, who recently returned from a year of study with the famed dancer Murray Louis. Dan Peterson, associate director, has created a "live improvisation," and Andrea Watkins, a new dance faculty member, will present her comedy "My Reindeer Flies Backwards."

Student choreographers will explain and perform several dances based on tap dance, ballet, jazz, and American Indian dance.

Tickets may be purchased at the Bowker Auditorium Box Office on the night of performance, or at the Women's Physical Education Building. Prices are $1.50 for the general public, 75¢ for students, and 50¢ for UMass students.

Chamber Music Debuts

The UMass Chamber Music Series will open Wednesday evening, Oct. 4, with a concert by the Beaux Arts Trio. This concert will be the first of five offered in the 1972/73 series of chamber ensembles, bringing to citizens of Western Massachusetts such groups as The Julliard String Quartet, Quartetto Italiano, The Fine Arts Quartet and The Cleveland String Quartet.

Members of the Beaux Arts Trio are violinist Isadore Cohen, cellist Bernard Greenhouse, and pianist Menachem Pressler. Each is a highly respected soloist and together they form what is often considered one of the finest trios before the public today. Critical acclaim for the Beaux Arts Trio performances has been high and the trio's international audience has been broadened extensively with the release of performances on Philips Records. The late Charles Munch, former music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, said "they are worthy successors to the last great trio...Thibaud, Casals and Cortot."

The Beaux Arts performance in Bowker Auditorium on the UMass-Amherst campus marks a debut there; and on the program are: Mozart's Trio in C Major, K. 548; Charles Ives' Trio and Beethoven's great "Archduke" Trio.

Reserved tickets are now available at $3 for the general public and $1.50 for full-time UMass undergraduates from the UMass Fine Arts Council, 125 Herter Hall, telephone 545-0202. Series subscriptions to the entire series of five events are also available, at $12 for the general public and $6 for UMass undergraduates.

Here shown happily smiling is the Beaux Arts Trio. They will kick off the UMass Chamber Music Series by playing Mozart's Trio in C Major K. 548; Charles Ives' Trio and Beethoven's great "Archduke" trio.

CEQ Debuts Eco Film

The general public is invited to join the UMass community at an environmental program tomorrow at 8 p.m. in Campus Center Rooms 168-172.

"The Gifts," a film produced for the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, will be shown followed by commentary by Prof. Haim B. Gunner, who will also lead audience discussion.

The film is narrated by conservationist T.V. actor Lorne Greene, who says, "Let us look less to the quantity and more to the quality of our universe." Gross insults to the environment--air, water and soil--are depicted.

The program is being jointly sponsored by the UMass Coalition for Environmental Quality (CEQ) at its opening meeting and the department of environmental sciences. Coordinating the program is the Technical Guidance Center for Environmental Quality of the Cooperation Extension Service.

Several of the artists will be on hand to talk about their works.

There will be daily showings through October 13, from 10:00 A.M. - 6:00 P.M.

O's Stay Close

MILWAUKEE AP - Paul Blair drove in a pair of runs with a home run and a sacrifice fly as Baltimore rallied for 4-3 victory over the Milwaukee Brewers Sunday that kept the Orioles 2-1/2 games behind Boston in the American League East baseball race.

Jim Palmer won his 21st game of the season for the Orioles with ninth inning help from Eddie Watt.

Palmer had given up a pair of runs in the first inning. But the Orioles scored twice in the fourth, and then Palmer scored the breaking run himself in the seventh inning.

Blair hit his eighth home run of the year off Brewer starter Skip Lockwood in the fourth inning, and the Orioles got another run on a walk to Bobby Grich, a double by Boog Powell and a sacrifice fly by Terry Crowley.

Baltimore added a run in the ninth on hits by Palmer, Blair and Bobby Grich and the insurance came in handy when the Brewers rallied for one in the bottom of the ninth, knocking out Palmer.

ChiSox Win

CHICAGO (AP) - Dick Allen rifled his 37th home run of the year Sunday, climaxing a three-run Chicago rally in the eighth inning that gave the White Sox a 7-4 victory over Texas in an American League baseball game.

The victory kept the second place Sox in the race for the West Division flag behind Oakland. The A's played a double-header against Kansas City.

Lee Richards started Chicago's winning rally with a one-out single and moved up on Pat Kelly's single. Mike Andrews' sacrifice fly scored Richards and then Allen followed with his two-run homer over the center field fence.

Allen had driven in two runs earlier as the Sox battled from behind.

Yanks Sweep Two From Indians

CLEVELAND AP - The New York Yankees swept a doubleheader from the Cleveland Indians Sunday to move within three games of first place Boston in baseball's American League East title chase.

New York scored two unearned runs on five Cleveland errors in the 11th inning to win the first game 5-4 and then rode a four-run first inning explosion to an 8-3 victory in the nightcap.

New York scored in the first inning of the nightcap on a walk, a wild pickoff thrown by catcher Ray Fosse and singles by Bobby Murcer, Bernie Allen, John Ellis and Gene Michael, the last three hits driving in runs.

They added single runs in the third and sixth and two in the ninth, one on Murcer's 30th home run of the season.

Cleveland scored on Fosse's infield hit in the first and homers by Kurt Bevacqua in the fifth and Buddy Bell in the sixth.

New York scored its first three runs of the opener in the fifth when Allen doubled, Munson singled, Mel Stottlemyre squeezed home a run, and Clarke singled to tie the game and knock out Ray Lamb.

But reliever Mike Kilkenny walked Murcer and pinch hitter Felipe Alou to force in the third run of the inning.

A's Beat Royals

OAKLAND AP - Paul Schaal belted a third-inning homer and the Kansas City Royals bunched five straight singles for three runs in the seventh inning Sunday for a 4-2 victory over the Oakland A's in the first game of a doubleheader.

Rookie right-hander Monty Montgomery, facing the American League Western Division leaders for the first time this season, raised his record to 3-2 with last-out relief help from Ted Abernathy.

Schaal's sixth homer of the season was the first hit off loser John Odom, 14-6. The Royals' three-run seventh came at the expense of relievers Darold Knowles and Bob Locker.

Cubs, 2-1

ST. LOUIS AP - Jose Cruz' 10th inning single scored Lou Brock with the winning run Sunday as St. Louis nipped Chicago 2-1 in National League baseball.

Brock opened the 10th with a single and raced to third when Ted Sizemore bunted and shortstop Don Kessinger missed Jack Aker's throw on an attempted force at second.

Coming

Next Saturday, football doubleheader: the Collegian staff vs. the staff of the Harvard Crimson in the first game and the varsity football teams from UMass and Harvard in the second game. A true sports spectacle.

Cowboys Whip Sloppy Giants

NEW YORK (AP)-Walt Garrison and Lance Alworth scored touchdowns and Tony Fritsch booted three field goals Sunday as the Dallas Cowboys took advantage of costly New York mistakes to beat the Giants 33-14 in a National Football League game.

Alworth's touchdown, on a two-yard pass from Craig Morton, came with two minutes to play and ended New York's hopes of an upset after the Giants had struck back on the second of two Norm Snead-to-Rich Houston scoring bombs.

Fritsch's field goals in 54, 13 and eight yards helped the Cowboys gain a 16-7 lead in the opening minutes of the fourth quarter. But Snead, who earlier had connected with Houston on a 55-yard scoring strike, struck quickly again with the wide receiver on a play covering 94 yards.

But the Cowboys put it out of reach, starting from their own 20-yard line following a punt, and marched to the Giants' goal line before Morton hit Alworth.

With Calvin Hill rumbling for 43 yards on eight carries and Morton connecting on clutch third-down passes, the Cowboys marched 77 yards with the opening kickoff, Garrison plunging over from the one.

Following a punt, Dallas took over on its 40. Garrison swept around right end for eight yards and on the next play, Morton's attempted pass to Alworth went instead into the hands of Pete Athas, but the Giants' cornerback dropped the ball.

Skins Top Cards

WASHINGTON AP - Tight end Jerry Smith caught his first two passes of the season-both for touchdowns-and the Washington specialty teams came through again Sunday as the Redskins beat the St. Louis Cardinals 24-10 in a National Football League game.

Washington's second victory in two starts kept the Skins atop the National Football Conference's Eastern Division. St. Louis is 1-1.

Smith, who caught only one pass in pre-season games, was alone in the end zone when quarterback Billy Kilmer floated a six-yard pass to him late in the first period.

The touchdown ended a 29-yard Redskin drive that started after safety Roosevelt Taylor intercepted a St. Louis pass on the 46 and returned it 17 yards.

The specialty team, heroes of last week's victory over Minnesota, struck early in the second quarter when Verlon Biggs broke through and blocked St. Louis' attempted 42-yard field goal. Mike Bass caught up with the bouncing ball on the Cardinals' 32 and carried it in for the score.

Namath "Bombs" Colts, 44-34

BALTIMORE (AP) - Joe Namath threw six touchdown passes, four for 65 yards or more, as the New York Jets outlasted the Baltimore Colts 44-34 Sunday in a National Football League game.

Namath connected on 15 of 28 passes for an incredible 496 yards, with his final two TD tosses of 79 and 80 yards to Rich Caster stunting Baltimore's fourth quarter victory bid.

Those were the only scores of the second half for the Jets, who led 27-20 at halftime after Namath made three touchdown tosses during a 1-1/2 minute span late in the second quarter. The two teams combined for 31 points in a little more than four minutes.

New York, 2-0 in the eastern division of the American Conference, scored three times on the first play after gaining control of the ball and on the other three occasions needed just four plays to march 70 yards or more.

In addition to the long tosses to Caster, Namath threw 65 yards to Ed Bell, who caught seven passes for 197 yards, and 67 yards to John Riggins for 67 yards

Dolphins Splash To 34-13 Win

MIAMI (AP) - Miami's sparkling runners, Jim Kiick, Mercury Morris and Larry Csonka, combined for four touchdowns Sunday to power the Miami Dolphins to a 34-13 triumph over the Houston Oilers in a National Football League game played on a rain-soaked artificial turf in the Orange Bowl.

Miami dominated the sloppy contest played on soggy Poly-Turf carpet before 77,821 rain-drenched fans. The victory boosted Miami's record to 2-0 in the American Football Conference's Eastern Division.

Houston is 0-2 in the AFC Central Division.

The Dolphins, staying largely on the ground, ran for four touchdowns and piled up a 27-0 lead before Houston rallied for two touchdowns in the third period.

Kiick tallied twice, while Csonka, Morris and quarterback Bob Griese had one touchdown each.

Kick opened the scoring with a one-yard score and added another TD on a 6-yard pass from Griese in the fourth quarter.

Morris scored on a two-yard run Csonka ran over from the four and Griese ran around left end for the final TD.

Houston's scores came on an 82-yard pass from Dan Pastorini to Charlie Joiner and rookie Willie Rodgers' one-yard run in the third period.

GREEN BAY, Wis. (AP) - Charlie Smith scored the lead touchdown after a 34-yard pass interference penalty and Jack Tatum raced a record 104 yards with a fumble recovery, sparking the Oakland Raiders to a 20-14 National Football League victory over the Green Bay Packers Sunday.

The Raiders, hurt by penalties at crucial times, got their break when Phil Villapiano recovered a fumble by Scott Hunter at the Packer 45 late in the third quarter. Three plays later, Darryl Lamonica's long pass for Fred Biletnikoff was intercepted by Jim Hill, but a pass interference call on rookie Willie Buchanon put the ball on the Green Bay one.

Smith scored on the next play, overcoming a 14-13 Green Bay lead. The Raiders held on to square their record at 1-1 when Frank Patrick, who replaced the injured Hunter at quarterback in the fourth quarter, couldn't move the Packers.

The Raiders' other scores came on field goals of 43 and 14 yards by George Blanda, and Tatum's spectacular fumble runback which erased the oldest record in the NFL books.

By EARLE BARROLL

Dick MacPherson WAS from Maine.

"I'm sure they'll take it like good sports," he quipped on Saturday after his gridders had just gotten through demolishing Maine, 37-0, in the season opener for UMass at Alumni Stadium. "They got to remember, I'm from Massachusetts now."

That makes it two for two for MacPherson over the Black Bears who have not scored on a UMass squad in three seasons. And except for a couple of dropped passes during this game the final score might have exceeded the combined total of the last two years.

After the game Mike Pomerleau who was to be the returning manager this fall for the football team, but was felled over the summer with colitis was given the game ball "in a very emotional locker room" MacPherson said.

The story behind that game ball will long be remembered by Maine.

In no particular order UMass combined:

—A young, tenacious, alert defense that recovered one fumble, intercepted four passes and harrassed Maine quarterback Rich Prior with a fierce pass rush in completely shutting off the opposition for the second week in a row (97 total yards),

—A rejuvenated offense that amassed 468 total yards after a paltry showing last week vs. Cornell.

—And a strategic discovery by fullback Dick Cummings that sparked a second period explosion in ripping through the Black Bears who only the week before had had themselves a field day in belting Boston University 25-7.

Maine employed a "monster" man on defense. This same villain last week had the B.U. ground attack in his back pocket and for almost 15 minutes on Saturday he was doing the same thing to Paul Metallo and company. Then...

"I found that he was coming up and meeting our sweep when we went wide," Cummings said. "After that when I led the sweep I met him head on, pushed him outside and Paul and the guards came inside him."

From then on the ground game combined itself with a mid-season form Peil Pennington (14 for 25, 228 yards, with at least three dropped) in blistering the Black Bear defense for 16 points before the half and another 21 before the day was over.

Up until the discovery, Pennington was the entire UMass offense. Consistently he bisected the Maine secondary in the first quarter, only to have two long drives halted by his own fumble and a missed Mark Palau field goal both inside the 20 yard line.

This led MacPherson to comment, "I'm very satisfied with the win, but we should have gotten it in more" in referring to these miscues.

Metallo scored three times on one yard plunges, Cummings added a short burst himself (to go along with the brainstorm of the season), Palau redeemed himself with a 30 yard shot to open the scoring and Mark Tripucka hooked up with Ed Hadjusek early in the fourth quarter for a 30 yard scoring play to complete the romp.

"We're still making mistakes," MacPherson noted. "But we're a lot stronger than Maine. We have a lot of good young talent that's improving every week and this is very encouraging."

Next week UMass travels to Cambridge to take on Harvard. The last time these two schools met was almost a decade ago.

The word from the head coach: "I honestly don't think we're as good as we can be. We'll find out some more about ourselves against Harvard."

Soccer Team Gains Scrimmage Win

The UMass varsity soccer team defeated the Amherst College team 4-1 in a scrimmage Friday afternoon.

Rudi Jones tucked in a rebound from a Tom Coburn shot to put the Redmond-men ahead early in the contest. Tony King upped the score to 2-0 when he tallied on a perfect pass from Jeff Hague.

Amherst came to within one when Mark Woodbrey headed a shot past Carl Vercolione.

Coburn scored on a penalty shot after an Amherst defender blocked a shot with his hands. Mark Tyma tallied on a great individual effort when he stole a pass in front of the Amherst goal and blasted it into the right corner.

"I was very pleased with the performance of the team as a whole," summed up Coach Gerry Redmond, "but we should not become too complacent at this stage, as we still have a lot of work to do. All the team played well, and because of this we were able to score the goals."

Several future UMass opponents played over the weekend. Maine, which will be in Amherst this Saturday, lost to Boston University 3-0. WPI was nipped 1-0 by Hartford, while Springfield was defeated by Middlebury 3-1. UNH, chosen to challenge with Vermont for the YanCon title, smashed Holy Cross 5-0.

Jones Takes Classic

ROBINSON, Ill. (AP) - Grier Jones came from five strokes off the pace to force a sudden-death playoff Sunday, then beat longshot Dave Marad on the second extra hole for the championship in the rain-plagued Robinson Fall Golf Classic.

The 25-year-old Jones made up five strokes over the last seven holes to tie Marad at 273 at the end of the regulation 72 holes. Jones scored his second victory of the season with a par to Marad's bogey on the 220-yard second playoff hole.

Both made par on the first playoff hole at the water-logged Crawford County Country Club course and both missed the green on the long par three second.

Jones chipped to about two feet and made it, while the 28-year-old Marad, looking for his first tour triumph, chipped to about four feet and missed for a bogey.

Sox Win, 7-2; Lead By One

BOSTON (AP) — Luis Tiant pitched a seven-hitter and Rico Petrocelli and Reggie Smith hit home runs as the Boston Red Sox whipped the Detroit Tigers 7-2 Sunday and strengthened their hold on first place in the exciting American League East baseball race.

The victory gave the Red Sox a one-game lead over the second-place Tigers.

Tiant, 14-5, one of the hottest pitchers in baseball, won his 10th game in 11 decisions since Aug. 1. The victory was his 10th straight at Fenway Park.

Woody Fryman, 8-3, had a five-game winning streak stopped by the Red Sox, who scored four runs in the first inning off the Tiger lefthander. Carl Yastrzemski contributed a two-run single in the rally before Smith hit a two-run homer, No. 21 of the year.

The four-run outburst wiped out a 1-0 Detroit lead taken in the top half of the inning on Norm Cash's sacrifice fly.

The Tigers scored their second run in the fifth on Dick McAuliffe's run-scoring single, but then the Red Sox put the game away on Petrocelli's three-run homer in the fifth, his 15th blast of the season. The runs were the first scored of Detroit reliever Chuck Seelbach in his last 13 appearances.

Pats' Comeback Nips Atlanta

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP) — The New England Patriots drove for two fourth period touchdowns behind Jim Plunkett and held on for a 21-20 National Football League upset over Atlanta Sunday as the Falcons' Bill Bell missed a 10-yard field goal attempt with just 28 seconds remaining.

The Falcons marched from their 28 to the New England 2 before being forced to call upon Bell on a fourth down. Bell lined up directly in front of the crossbar but his boot sailed wide to the left as a partisan crowd of 60,399 joined the Patriots in cheers.

Plunkett, fighting back after many moments of utter frustration, engineered two long scoring drives in the fourth period after the Falcons had gone in front 20-7 on touchdowns by Art Malone and Dave Hampton in the third quarter. Far off the mark on numerous passes Plunkett found the range at the outset of the finale. The former Stanford All-American dropped back and lobbed a pass to old college teammate Randy Vataha who leaped high to take the ball away from Tom Hayes at the goal on a 37-yard touchdown play.

A few minutes later Plunkett directed the 78-yard touchdown surge which proved decisive.

Landry Booed, Lions Lose

DETROIT (AP) - Minnesota intercepted four Detroit passes, converting three into third quarter scores, and Dave Osborne scored three touchdowns Sunday as the Vikings clobbered Central Division rival Detroit 34-10 in their National Football League game.

The capacity crowd of 54,400 at Tiger Stadium booed Detroit quarterback Greg Landry, the victim of the first three interceptions. He was replaced by Bill Munson late in the third quarter and Munson promptly gave up another disastrous interception.

Minnesota, 1-1, spotted Detroit, 1-1, a 3-0 lead in the first quarter before the nationally televised audience on a 36-yard field goal by Errol Mann.

But it was the Vikings game from then on as quarterback Fran Tarkenton blitzed Detroit's pass defense and Viking defenders stymied the sluggish Lions virtually the rest of the way.

Court Upholds 3rd World Voting Rights

The General Court of Justice last night denied an injunction to prevent 15 Third World representatives from voting in the Student Senate until the court rules on the constitutionality of their positions.

The petition for the injunction was brought by a student advocate for former Senator Matt Tackeff, who resigned following the controversial vote September 13 that guaranteed 15 senate seats for representatives of the Third World.

The injunction would have prevented the representatives from voting in the Senate, but not their election, their being seated in introductory meetings of the senate, or their placement on committees until the court makes its ruling.

Arguing for the injunction, advocate William E. Spinn argued voting participation by the representatives would tie up student government if the court later found the apportionment creating their seats unconstitutional and the bills they voted on were challenged.

The court is scheduled to start consideration of the reapportionment itself around October 5.

Student attorney-general Bert Emmons, arguing against the injunction, said the petitioners for the injunction would have to prove "immediate and irrevocable damage" that would result if the injunction were not approved.

Spinn then called senate speaker John Hogan as a witness and asked him whether the lack of an injunction would cause such damage. Hogan, who was a co-sponsor of the bill creating the seats, said the lack of an injunction "could" cause delays, but only if the bill was found unconstitutional and the bills were challenged.

Spinn then said he would "guarantee" the bills would be challenged if the act were found unconstitutional.

"We can't afford to have senate action in the next five weeks held up or found invalid," he said in his concluding remarks.

Emmons, in his concluding remarks, said that since the court had judicial review of all senate action, it could repair any possible harm done by challenges to senate action.

After a short recess, the court refused to issue the injunction.

In the September 13 meeting, the senate had reapportioned itself to guarantee the 15 Third World representatives and designated the New Africa House (Mills House) a residential area.

Supporters of the bill which would be reviewed next year, claimed the bill would increase Third World (Black, Chicano, Spanish-speaking) participation in the senate.

Opponents of the bill, including Senator Tackeff, claimed it was unconstitutional because it created a "racially defined constituency", and denied representation to students not in that constituency.

Oath's Validity Questioned

By SUSAN HUBBARD

"There is basically no meaning left in this oath," declared Attorney for the Students Richard Howland at a meeting yesterday in the Campus Center called to discuss the Massachusetts State Employees loyalty oath.

Present at the meeting, besides the Attorney for Students, was John DeNyse, the Director of Personnel and Financial Services who is responsible for securing signatures on the oath cards, and the newly appointed Ombudsman, Jay Savereid.

Discussed at the meeting were various ramifications of the oath, including the possibility of taking legal or legislative action against the oath, the question of foreign citizens signing and the consequences of failure to sign the loyalty pledge.

Professors, teaching assistants, as well as students employed by the University are presently being required to submit the signed loyalty oath cards to the administration by November 15, 1972. Those who have previously signed such cards are not required to do so again.

Attorney Howland said, in giving an historical perspective to the issue, that the bill which established the loyalty oath as mandatory was passed in the pre-McCarthy era, specifically 1949. The oath was contested in District Court in 1969 and the signing of such oaths was suspended at that time.

The U.S. Supreme Court ruled on April 18, 1972 that the Massachusetts oath was legal, overturning the 'illegal' ruling which the District Court handed down. In ruling on the case, entitled Cole vs. Richardson, Howland states, "The Chief Justice found this oath constitutional only because he assumed certain terms used in the oath to be vague and literally to have no meaning."

In Chief Justice Warren Burger's words, "The purpose of the oath is clear on its face. We cannot presume that the Massachusetts legislature intended by its use of such general terms as "uphold," "defend", and "oppose" to impose obligations of specific, positive action on oath takers. Any such construction would raise serious questions whether the oath was so vague as to amount to a denial of due process."

In summary, the Massachusetts loyalty oath states that the signer will uphold the Constitution of the U.S. and the State of Massachusetts and will oppose the overthrow of these governments.

Concerning the actual consequences of signing such an oath, Attorney Howland quoted passages from the Supreme Court ruling, saying that any actions which the individual previously took, in opposition to the working of the oath, were not to be considered in the signing of it.

"You have no responsibility to have lived up to (past) or live up to (in the future) the words of the oath," stated Howland. "The only time the oath is applicable is during the time the pen hits paper."

Any further legal action against the bill was discouraged by Attorney Howland who felt that further efforts should be channeled into working for the repeal of the oath, through the Massachusetts legislature.

"It would be better to try and repeal this oath than to even attempt to change the working," he said. "Each and everyone has the right to see that such a bill would be heard."

However, Howland felt that some legal action could be taken regarding the exemption of foreign citizens from signing this pledge. Certain nations prohibit their citizens from affirming loyalty to another country, while still retaining their citizenship in their homeland.

As reinstated, the oath only exempts foreign physicians or nurses working in state hospitals within Massachusetts from signing. But the addition of foreign nationals to the lists of exemptions is a very possible action, Howland feels.

In the case of a state employee committing an act against the state after signing the oath, for example an act of civil disobedience, Howland is relatively sure that no perjury action would be brought against such an individual.

John DeNyse stated that letters and oath cards have been mailed to all University employees who do not presently have loyalty oath cards on file with the Secretary of the Commonwealth. This includes employees who were hired in the period 1969-1972, when the oath was temporarily suspended due to the court action.

Those who have not yet signed will be payed, at least up until the time that the cards are to be turned in, on November 15, remarked DeNyse. A final notice would be issued in the case of those who still refuse to sign, before pay would be suspended.

Toward the end of the meeting, further actions, including petitioning, initiation of legislation and further publicity concerning the issue were recommended. A committee was formed of interested students and faculty to begin carrying out these actions.

Sargent Replies

Governor Francis W. Sargent has written a reply to a column by Clark Kerr in the Boston Globe of Sept. 21.

Kerr, Chairman of the Carnegie Commission on Higher Education, had charged in his column that Sargent was misusing some of the recommendations listed in "The More Effective Use of Resources", a commission report. Sargent had stated in the Sept. 10 issue of The Globe that he would use those guidelines to evaluate the fiscal 1974 budget of the University.

Kerr had said in The Globe that the University could not be compared to other institutions which have been established longer and are much larger.

Kerr had also praised the expansion of the UMass-Boston campus.

The text of the Governor's letter follows.

Dear Dr. Kerr:

Although I have not had an opportunity to see the full text of your recent letter concerning higher education budgets in Massachusetts, the accounts I have read suggest general agreement on fundamental issues between your views and those of my administration.

As you may know, I have been much impressed by the distinguished work of the Carnegie Commission on Higher Education. The educational reforms you have urged are long overdue in Massachusetts as elsewhere. And your suggestions for ways to make more effective use of resources are timely, for we now face the fiscal problems that many other states encountered several years ago.

Our long tradition of reliance on quality private higher education made us slower than many states to expand our public institutions. They have grown rapidly, however, increasing their enrollments by an annual average of 14 percent over the past twelve years. One consequence has been that some of our private institutions are now threatened by insufficient enrollments, as students elect the less costly public colleges and universities. We need to develop a policy of balanced growth in Massachusetts, so that every student can be economically provided with a superior education without the heedless expansion of one sector permanently damaging the other.

Our support of public higher education has grown even faster than its enrollments. During the past twelve years, as state support of higher education grew by less than 15 percent annually in the nation as a whole, state appropriations in Massachusetts grew each year by more than 22 percent. Our expenditures per pupil rose by more than 8 percent a year in a period when your statistics suggest that the national figure was about 3.4 percent.

We have come a long way. We still have much to do, and I agree with you that we must concentrate our resources on areas and institutions that serve unmet needs. The Boston campus of the university of Massachusetts is certainly one example of that imperative.

I am hopeful that the many dedicated men and women shaping the destiny of higher education in Massachusetts will be guided by the wisdom of the Carnegie Commission, which has performed a major service to the nation. I respect your custom of setting broad policy guides and encouraging each state and institution to apply them to its particular needs and circumstances, and hope that we in Massachusetts can live up to your lofty charge. My administration is committed to making the effort.

Sincerely,
Francis Sargent

Westover Anti-War Action Planned

The Committee for Continuing Action at Westover has announced plans for an anti-war, civil-disobedience demonstration on October at 7:30 AM at the Main gate of Westover Air Force Base. This action is being taken to dramatically emphasize continued opposition to the air war and especially to the increased levels of bombing and destruction in Indochina.

During the week preceding the demonstration, September 24th-28th, workshops will be held in the Five College area. On the agenda for the meetings will be discussions of last spring's Westover demonstrations and plans for possible future anti-war actions in the Pioneer Valley as well as discussion of the civil-disobedience on October 2nd.

A film of last spring's action will be shown. All workshops will begin at 7 PM: Sunday September 24th at Hampshire College, Monday at Mt. Holyoke College; Tuesday at Smith College; Wednesday at Amherst College; and Thursday at UMass.

The Committee for Continuing Action at Westover is the organization which planned the civil-disobedience demonstrations at Westover last spring where over 1400 people were arrested. The group has also maintained a weekly vigil throughout the summer at the main gate of the base.

A spokesperson for the group stated that "we shouldn't wait until November to express our opposition to the war but we should use every means available to continue to demonstrate that the majority of the American people oppose the war."

Parking Fee Hike Opposed

American Federations of State, County, and Municipal Employes, has sent the Trustees a petition signed by 2,000 employes here objecting to the increase in parking fees from $1 to $5 annually. The petition stated that the undersigned faculty and staff were "opposed to paying a parking fee to park in state owned parking lots which were built with taxpayers money."

Carol Drew, president of the local, expressed pleasure with the response of the employes and said "the parking situation at this University has become ridiculous.

"It has gotten to the point where employes pay this exorbitant fee and then can't even find a place to park."

In a statement issued by the local, it was pointed out that at a recent state convention of delegates who represent all the Massachusetts locals outside of Boston a resolution was passed stating the intention to press legislation to suspend parking fees for state employes.

The parking fee hike has also been opposed by the other campus union, the UMass Employes Association. At a meeting last month, the association pledged to take "vigorous action" against the increase and said it was investigating the possibility of taking legal action against the University.

The unions maintain that parking is a condition of their employment and should be provided by the University without charge. They also say that the increase is something that should be negotiated.

UMass officials last month stated that the University felt it was on solid grounds in raising the fees and that it had no intention of annulling the hike.

The increase went into effect Sept. 1. It is primarily designed, said a UMass spokesman today, to pay the administrative costs associated with registering vehicles on campus.

The spokesman said a small portion of the added revenues would go for physical improvements of parking lots and increased safety measures in the lots.

Deloria Decries Christian Doctrine

By MARK VOGLER

Indian author Vine Deloria addressed an audience of over 900 last night in the Campus Center Auditorium, analyzing the American Christian as opposed to Indian religious beliefs.

The Standing Rock Sioux and author of the book Custer Died For Your Sins declared that the traditional Indian World view must and shall prevail in order to assure a brighter future for the American Society.

"If we don't undertake a complete examination of all values and beliefs of Western Civilization and Christianity, weighing them on their merits, then we are going to continue to have American presidents who oppose abortion and risk overpopulation because birth control is unChristian.

Someone ought to do away with the Christian doctrine, of creation, because that's one reason that we're in the mess we're in. "We (the American Indians) are the opponents of the American way of life for the next decade and we are going to win."

Deloria criticized anthropologists for inhibiting the Indian's efforts to identify himself and to regain the self respect that he lost to the whiteman. According to the guest speaker, the anthropologists made the mistake of equating the stereotyped Indian of yester year with the one of today. And in the event he didn't conform to those prescribed patterns, he wasn't an Indian.

Being sarcastic but to the point in relating his attitude toward the Bureau of American Indian Affairs, Deloria earned the crowd's approval.

"If I had to play hearts with Billy Graham and Oral Roberts, I'd go to hell," Indian author Vine Deloria told an attentive audience in the Campus Center Auditorium last night. (MDC Photo by Steve Smith)

"Before General Custer went to Little Big Horn, he stopped by and said: 'Don't do anything till I get back.' We like to refer to it as the hotbed of inertia."

Deloria said that the difficulty of the Indian to advocate and communicate ideas to the Americans revolves around tribal religious and philosophical ideas which come into direct confliction with the Western Christian and political culture.

"As you look back through the various anthologies, you find that many Indian chiefs said that you couldn't buy land because one would have to dig three feet down before you could hit the soil. What was on top was the remains of their ancestors.

"Yet the Americans traditionally insist upon being segregated in the ground in little air tight boxes. Consequently there is no point in the Christian religion where the people can relate to the land at all. This is the problem."

The speaker said that there is a current move among his people toward ecology which aims at building a new type of social system.

He said that the traditional Western view finds that nature is dead, man is alien, and there is another world after this one.

His concept of the Indian view states that nature is alive and good, and the Indian doesn't care if there is another world or not.

In summation Deloria stated: "I see no way that Christianity can assess the crisis of ecology, the crisis of human personality, and the crisis of life after death.

"Their failure is an almost openended willingness to bend words and phrases to account for the course of history. If I had to play hearts with Billy Graham and Oral Roberts, I'd go to hell. All those guys in the cotton bowl don't know what they signed up for."

In the question and answer period that immediately followed the talk, the obvious campus issue over the dropping of the nickname "Redman" was the first inquiry.

Deloria commented that he had been basically on the fence about the idea of athletic teams bearing Indian names, yet he initially had no strong objection.

"But after listening to a sports writer's complaint that all you'll have left is Lions, Tigers, and Bears, then I am against it.

"All along the Indians have been considered a species of animal and that's my reason for opposing the name "Redman". So you can rename your Redman the Smallpoxes or the Genocides in memory of Jeffery Amherst (Who traded blankets that were contaminated with smallpox to a tribe of local Indians.)

"I can honestly say that I was glad to see the Braves move out of Boston because Boston wasn't too brave, except for the occasional tea parties they threw."

Quagmire Returns

The Central Area will once again have its own newspaper, The Quagmire, a four-page, tabloid-size bi-weekly.

Edited by a staff directed by Cynthia Nadreau, the Quagmire will distribute 1,600 copies of its first edition, Oct. 5, to the 12 dormitories that make up the Central Residential Area.

The publication will contain Area news items, events, and anything of interest to the students.

"We're trying to produce a balanced newspaper that will not only encourage communication between students and the power structure, but will also provide a literary outlet for students who find difficulty being published in other campus media," said Editor Nadreau.

Financed by the Centrral Area Council, The Quagmire is an educational vehicle for students who may earn academic credit for participation on its staff if it is approved as a colloquium within the next few weeks.

"We're not giving away credits," said Nadreau. "What we are trying to do is to find people to write for us who would otherwise not have the time. And allowing one credit will help to relieve the academic strain."

The first meeting will be held on Tuesday evening (Sept. 26) at 7:30 p.m. in The Quagmire office, B-16 Baker basement. If you can't make it, call Baker offices and leave your name.

Class Ring Cost Discussed

By LAURA DUBOWSKI

The Student Senate Services Committee, headed by Chairman Bob McGrath, met with representatives of Josten's Inc. last night, (the corporation employed by the University for the purchase of class rings) to discuss the rising costs of class rings.

Due to the spiralling cost of gold, the price of the rings has increased-an incident which fell under the concern of the Service Committee.

David Yelle and Robert Doherty, representatives of Josten's, explained that at the time the contract originated, the price of gold was approximately $38 an ounce. Since that time the price has increased to approximately $68 an ounce. When the University and Josten's signed the contract it was agreed that if there was a substantial fluctuation in the price of gold, one way or the other, the cost of the ring would change accordingly.

The two men went on to clarify their company's new policy involving the gold price increase. They stated that the price of the ring starts with the gold based on $38 an ounce. (This figure is the amount that the government says is the best set standard.)

Each month there will be a surcharge on gold according to the market price of the gold at that time. The price of the ring will include the total of the base price plus the surcharge for that month. Prices will vary from month to month, it was added, but once the price has been affixed for a month that price will remain the same for the entire month.

Another plan was suggested by Yelle and Doherty which stated that if a student feels that the price of the ring is too exhorbitant he could order another ring with the same quality and design-but with less total weight. As a result, less weight - less cost.

McGrath discussed the feasibility of an alternative plan that included asking the Student Senate to purchase a quantity of gold, before the cost skyrocketed, and keeping it stored away until ring-making time came each year. The representatives of Josten's didn't think this plan was a wise one.

'Outreach' Involved In Community Programs

By JOANNE RESTEGHINI

The Center for Outreach Programs, is a clearinghuse for off campus community service here at UMass. The center, which was opened recently, is located in 318 Arnold House. Since this is something initiated recently, many students are not even aware of its existence and what exactly the center does.

According to Mr. William Burke, Director of the Center for Outreach Programs on campus, the center has four main purposes.

Most importantly, Outreach acts as a clearinghouse which refers students to any existing volunteer programs on campus and to the needs of the different agencies, departments and programs in the community.

Outreach also goes out into the community to find what needs different agencies, departments and programs may have that the University can fulfill.

Thirdly, Outreach is responsible for keeping an up to date inventory of all programs on campus that offer a service to the community. This inventory will be checked and revised at the end of each semester. Lastly, Outreach will develop new programs that involve a great number of students.

The Center for Outreach Programs serves two groups of people - students and the community. "The programs are satisfying a students need for an experience related to his major academic field as well as satisfying a need in the community," commented Burke.

Outreach has a list of over 109 current programs in the state. It also has a list of over thirty different rural programs across the country.

"One of the most discussed and supported new systems is that of setting up more options by which students can obtain a more meaningful education by experiencing first hand, situations that are directly related to their field of study," reports the Carnegie Commission on Higher Education.

The Report of the Presidents Committee on the Future of the University of Massachusetts states: "We recommend diversity in place of learning including expanding opportunities for field work in courses and opportunity to spend a year or semester in field work for credit."

Outreach programs are providing a student with all these suggestions made in both reports.

It is hoped that more programs may be developed for which the student may receive credit for his work. One program already in planning is the instruction of some sixty students as to how to fill out income tax forms. When the students have finished their instruction, they will be sent out into low income communities to help those in need. The students will be receiving two credits for their work.

There are also plans for more internship programs on the city, state and federal level. This would involve a semesters work for which the student will receive fifteen academic credits.

For anyone interested in becoming an Outreach volunteer, an appointment should be made for an interview with Mr. Burke or one of the five staff members. The interview will provide any information a student would like to know, as well as discussing the existing programs in which the student may be interested. At the end of the interview, the student will receive his assignment.

In many cases, there will be a brief orientation in the program which the student has chosen so as to familiarize him with what to expect from the job.

UN Urged To Crack Down On Terrorism

Decrying criminal attacks against innocent persons, Secretary of State William Rogers calls for a special global conference to shape a treaty cracking down on international terrorism. (AP)

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP) — Secretary of State William P. Rogers called urgently on the United Nations to convene a special global conference early next year to shape a treaty cracking down on international terrorism.

Submitting a U.S.-proposed treaty Monday to the 132-nation General Assmbly, Rogers said criminal violence against innocent persons is tearing "the very fabric of international order."

U.S. diplomats said the main effect of the treaty would be to bring about extradition of alleged offenders to the country where their crime was committed or stiff prosecution by the country which holds them. They also could be extradited to the country against whom the crime was committed.

The treaty conference plan was part of an eight-point resolution Rogers asked the world body to adopt as "decisive action to suppress these demented acts of terrorism."

Initial reaction to the secretary's half-hour presentation, in his annual policy speech at the General Assembly opening debate, was limited.

Britain's foreign secretary, Sir Alec Douglas-Home, said "the subject has to be dealt with" but he deferred further comment pending study of the U.S. proposals.

Andrei A. Gromyko of the Soviet Union said he would have to study the U.S. offering "thoroughly".

The terrorism question-the highlight of general debate so far-is contentious because various Arab, African and Asian governments feel it is aimed against liberation and anticolonial causes they support.

Much international terrorism is politically motivated, and there is disagreement over how to define deeds which their perpetrators portray as different from ordinary crimes.

The U.S.-proposed treaty would hit at those who kill, kidnap or cause "serious bodily harm" to civilians in crimes committed by foreigners in a country which is not their political target.

Rogers sounded the law-and-order theme in addressing the assembled diplomats.

He recalled the Munich massacre of Israeli Olympians by Arab extremists and other terrorist horrors in recent times.

"In this year alone 25 airliners from 13 countries have been successfully hijacked, and 26 other attempts have been frustrated," he said.

"In this year alone 140 airplane passengers and crew have been killed, and 97 wounded, in acts of terrorism. In five years 27 diplomats from 11 countries have been kidnapped and three assassinated. In New York, Arab and other missions have been threatened."

Other items in the U.S. resolution would have the General Assembly:

—Call on all nations to join the Tokyo, Hague and Montreal conventions against aircraft hijacking and sabotage.

—Request the International Civil Aviation Organization to call without delay a diplomatic conference to produce a treaty putting more teeth in the anti-hijacking conventions.

—Urge all countries to take immediate steps to prevent use of their territory or resources to aid international terrorists.

—Recommend that U.N. members cooperate in trying to stamp out international terrorism, including exchange of information about terrorists' activities.

In Brief ....

Congress Approves Missile Freeze

WASHINGTON (AP)-The historic five-year U.S.-Soviet freeze on intercontinental nuclear missiles and missile-firing submarines was approved Monday by Congress.

A Senate resolution approving the May 26 Moscow arms accord but urging the President to seek equal, not inferior, U.S. nuclear forces in any permanent arms limitation treaty was accepted by the House and sent to President Nixon.

The vote was 306 to 4.

Sen. Brooke To Study Red Tide Reactions

BOSTON (AP)-Sen. Edward W. Brooke, R-Mass., said Monday he will conduct his own investigation into charges the state overreacted in banning the sale of shellfish because of the red tide algae off the Massachusetts coast.

Brooke made the announcement as he met with 35 members of the state's seafood industry to begin work on loan applications from businesses that suffered economic loss because of the red tide.

Senate Condemns Thieu's Actions

WASHINGTON (AP)-The Senate Monday adopted a condemnation of what it called repressive acts of the regime of President Nguyen Van Thieu in South Vietnam.

In adopting an amendment by Sen. Adlai E. Stevenson III, D-Ill., the Senate demanded that the United States quit supporting or appearing to support attempts by the South Vietnamese government "to discourage legitimate opposition by abridging the right to vote, freedom of the press, or other individual liberties."

Lavelle Sole Instigator

WASHINGTON (AP) - Air Force Chief of Staff John D. Ryan singled out Gen. John D. Lavelle as the sole instigator of unauthorized air attacks against North Vietnam in Senate testimony released Monday.

In response to remarks by Sen. Harold Hughes, D—Iowa, Ryan said; "we found others who were exposed to it, but in your words, the bad apple was the head apple."

Despite that assessment, Ryan said relief of command was adequate punishment for Lavelle. He said he did not think a court-martial would be appropriate and that he thought no one else should be punished.

Lavelle was fired as 7th Air Force commander for conducting 28 raids before the White House renewed heavy bombing. At the time, Maj. Gen. Alton Slay was Lavelle's chief of air operations.

"My belief at the time," said Slay, "was that Gen. Lavelle was perfectly, in fact, my absolute conviction was that Gen. Lavelle was completely cognizant of what he was doing. He knew the rules."

Slay testified in a Denver hospital in the hearings by the Senate Armed Services Committee into civilian control of the military. Also under examination is Lavelle's proposed promotion from major general to lieutenant general and his retirement at that rank.

Japan, China Work For Harmony

PEKING (AP) - Prime Minister Kakuei Tanaka expressed Japan's regret and repentance Monday for past aggression against China and joined Premier Chou En-lai in predicting total agreement in their talks to normalize long-strained relations.

Tanaka used the words "profound self-examination" to express Japan's feeling about half a century of Japanese military aggression which left China broken and exhausted.

Tanaka's remark came at a glittering banquet in the Great Hall of the People at the end of the first day of his six-day state visit, expected to establish diplomatic relations between Peking and Tokyo and sever Japan's 22-year-old diplomatic links with the Nationalist Chinese on Taiwan.

The 74-year-old Chou touched briefly on Japanese militarism in his toast but said, "the past not forgotten is a guide for the future" and added that "the Chinese people make a strict distinction between the very few militarists and the broad masses of the Japanese people."

He went on to say that it was the common desire of both countries to restore diplomatic relations and asserted, "Now is the time for us to accomplish this historic task."

His own assessment of the two-hour official talks held earlier in the day with Tanaka was more emphatically stated than Tanaka's.

He said: "Today, leaders of China and Japan have already begun their talks of great significance on the question of the normalization of relations between the two countries. We expect that our talks will achieve complete success."

In his reply, Tanaka said, "It is possible to reach agreement. I am willing to accomplish this important task and take a new step forward along the road of long standing Japan-China friendship."

Both men spoke of contributing to the peace and prosperity of Asia by their moves while reserving the right to maintain friendly relations with their allies.

The two foreign ministers, Masayoshi Ohira of Japan and Chi Peng-fei of China, hold talks Tuesday morning while Tanaka and Chou resume their conversation in the afternoon.

The first working talks Monday between Chou and Tanaka were described by Japanese delegation sources as "surprisingly frank and very useful."

Neither side disclosed what had been discussed but the shape and nature of future relations, including a new peace treaty and a commercial pact, were believed to have been the central subjects.

Refugees Report N. Viet Atrocities

Boats used as homes crowd a river known as the "Street of Sampans" in the old Imperial city of Hue, a still tranquil city in spite of heavy fighting to the west and north. (AP)

SAIGON (AP) - As refugees tell it, 40 civilians in Quang Ngai Province were locked in a building and blown up with dynamite because they were considered "unsuitable for indoctrination."

In other cases, wives and children have watched their menfolk shot in batches of a dozen following "people's trials" in Binh Dinh and Kontum provinces. Their crime: lack of enthusiasm for Hanoi's brand of liberation.

These and other atrocity stories trickling out of enemy-occupied areas have reinforced American apprehensions of a bloodbath if the Communists take over South Vietnam. U.S. officials are particularly concerned about what they call "spite killing."

"Any time you pursue the hard revolutionary line you're going to have a bloodbath," said one American who investigates atrocities. "You have to knock off the old order to make way for the new. In this respect the Viet Cong are as nasty as ever.

"Spite enters into it when you get a guerrilla who's lived in the jungle for five years and suddenly finds himself occupying a town where everyone owns radios and Hondas. They'll be a lot more guilty verdicts in the people's trials.

"The North Vietnamese are supposed to be better disciplined, more well-behaved, but they're becoming downright spiteful too. They come south expecting to be greeted as liberators and find everyone running away. They get mad and shoot up some rice farmers. Sheer spite."

The official noted that in Tet 1968, the Communist command blamed American combat troops for quelling an expected popular uprising. This year the the North Vietnamese couldn't use this excuse and they "lost their cool."

Commanders of Hanoi's invasion force that crossed the demilitarized zone March 30 watched three-quarters of the people of Quang Tri Province flee before they realized there might be no one left to liberate. So they cut Highway 1 South of the province capital and slaughtered hundreds of civilians with fleeing military convoys.

A North Vietnamese prisoner who participated in the April ambushes said he had been told by his officers that "anyone going south was my enemy."

Since then it has become a standard North Vietnamese tactic to encircle a population center and seal off all avenues of civilian escape before attempting its capture.

Before the offensive, only six hamlets in Binh Dinh Province with a population of 6,000 were listed under Communist control. Now 400,000 South Vietnamese civilians are living in enemy-held areas stretching from Quang Tri Province in the north to the Mekong Delta's U Minh Forest.

Their fate is largely unknown. Refugees are the only source of atrocity stories and reports of mass movement of civilians to North Vietnam. These cannot be corrobated until the areas in question are recaptured by government troops, and thus do not figure in official statistics.

Since the offensive began, authorities have reported confirmation of 2,558 civilian assassinations, 9,313 abductions and 5,277 civilians wounded in terrorist incidents and various types of atrocities. But these figures come from contested areas or those only briefly occupied by the enemy, as opposed to those firmly under Communist control.

U.S. Ready For Economic Reform

WASHINGTON (AP) - With a surprise announcement that the United States is ready to lay reform proposals on the table, President Nixon called on Monday for an immediate start on negotiations to reshape the world's monetary system and trade rules.

"The time has come for action across the entire front of international economic problems," Nixon told the governors of the 124-nation International Monetary Fund and the World Bank at the opening of their annual meetings.

Nixon blunted foreign criticism that the United States has dragged its feet on reforms by announcing that Secretary of the Treasury George Shultz will present "a number of proposals" to this four-day meeting on Tuesday.

They represent "the best thinking of my economic advisers," Nixon said. "I commend them to you for careful consideration."

A spokesman for the U.S. delegation said Shultz would not offer a complete or comprehensive plan but would offer "some ideas for starters" that would go beyond mere statements of principle.

In his unusual appearance before the governing boards of the global financial agencies, Nixon emphasized two basics of U.S. policy-that the monetary talks be accompanied by negotiations to eliminate trade barriers and that this country be accorded the power to adjust the value of the dollar, as other countries change the exchange of their currencies.

"We shall press for a more equitable and open world of trade," Nixon pledged, "We shall meet competition rather than run away from it.

"We shall be a stimulating trading partner and a straightforward bargainer.

Then-in a sentence clearly addressed to the European Common Market, which has been creating common barriers to imports while forging a bloc of trade preferences with other countries of Europe and Africa-Nixon added:

"In turn, we shall look to our friends for evidence of similar rejection of isolationism in economic and political affairs."

But the President also had a sentence to placate the AFL—CIO and others who have accused U.S. multinational corporations of closing production lines at home and setting up plants abroad. The U.S. companies argue they must set up foreign subsidiaries because they cannot penetrate foreign markets with exports.

"I want to see new jobs created all over the world," said Nixon, "but I will not condone the export of jobs out of the United States caused by an unfairness built into the world's trading system."

Nixon gave no clue to what method Shultz will propose for giving the United States a means of adjusting the dollar's value. Since all non-Communist currencies are valued in terms of the dollar as a standard it is not possible for the United States to move as other countries do to correct a payments imbalance by a currency devaluation. American officials have urged new rules permitting small and possibly more frequent shifts in exchange rates.

POW Release Depends On War Settlement

HANOI (AP) - Premier Pham Van Dong of North Vietnam has reiterated that the North Vietnamese want to release all captured American pilots and will do so when there is agreement on settling the war.

Dong said in an informal 90-minute discussion Sunday, attended by this reporter and the four antiwar activists who came to Hanoi to escort home three released fliers, that President Nixon was aware of the need for a settlement before the remaining pilots could be freed. He asserted that there was no misunderstanding on this point.

The premier said the framework for settlement of the war has long been available in the seven-point proposal put forward by the provisional revolutionary government, the Viet Cong. This calls for the total withdrawal of American forces and the formation of a coalition government.

Dong said the clarification statement on the three-party coalition government made by Mrs. Nguyen Thi Binh, the Viet Cong peace delegation head, in Paris Sept. 11 should be stressed.

Under this formula, President Nguyen Van Thieu of South Vietnam would be excluded, but the Saigon government would name one-third, the Viet Cong another third, and the final third would include Catholics, Buddhists, exiled South Vietnamese in Paris and others.

Dong declined comment on the meetings between U.S. presidential aide Henry A. Kissinger and Le Duc Tho, adviser to the Hanoi peace delegation, on the grounds of secrecy.

The premier also said the time had come to consider aid to North Vietnam for reconstruction of the damage caused by the bombing.

Dong told the delegation that the Vietnamese people knew who was responsible for the destruction, and knew who should supply the aid.

Earlier, antiwar activists, Cora Weiss, David Dellinger, Rev. William Sloane Coffin and Prof. Richard Falk, went with the released pilots and their relatives to a hospital and met patients who said they were victims of U.S. bombing in Hanoi.

McGovern Hits Nixon On Environment

Democratic presidential nominee George McGovern pins a twenty-dollar bill to a bust of San Gennaro, patron saint of Naples, in Little Italy section of New York. The gesture, besides contributing to the church, is supposed to bring good fortune to the giver. The crush of the crowd at the San Gennaro street festival cut short McGovern's appearance there. (AP)

BILLINGS, Mont. (AP) - Sen. George McGovern told Westerners Monday the Nixon administration is "doing the special-interest bidding of some of the forces of greed and privilege" in matters of conservation and the environment.

He said the present secretary of the Interior, former Maryland Rep. Rogers C. B. Morton, "is an Easterner who cares little and understands less about the problems of Western America."

And he said the Federal Power Commission, which is supposed to regulate big oil, coal, gas and electric interests, has been loaded with spokesmen for big utilities and big oil companies.

The Democratic presidential nominee promised if elected to appoint top officials of the Interior Department "who know the West, where our resources lie" and pledged to appoint FPC members "who will look after the public interest not the special, selfish interests."

He pledged also to appoint an attorney general who will "stop the growth of monopolies", to bring about strict regulation of strip mining and to fully fund federal environment programs.

He said also he would urge legislation to authorize a national grid to better distribute the nation's electric power, and to enlarge national parks, forests, wilderness areas and historic monuments.

McGovern chose as his forum the environmental-minded Western States Water and Power Consumers Conference.

McGovern spoke to a near-capacity crowd in a large movie theater in Billings, as an unseasonable three-inch snowstorm fell outside.

McGovern returned to his demand that Republicans make public the donors of $10 million contributed to the Nixon campaign before a new disclosure law went into effect.

But he said he would be surprised if they did so because "it would be such a shocking revelation of the working relationship between the big oil companies, ITT, Penn Central and Lockheed and these other firms that have been benefited by the administration that it would make it impossible for President Nixon to carry his campaign to the ordinary people."

McGovern said that under Morton and his assistant secretary for water and power resources, James Smith, the Bureau of Reclamation "has become a full partner of the private power companies."

McGovern accused Nixon of talking a great deal about protecting the environment while opposing spending federal money to protect it.

"I've never been able to understand how the President is able to tell us in one breath that a few hundred million dollars spent to save the water and the air and the land of this country is inflationary, but somehow it's not inflationary to spend $250 million every week chasing little people in black pajamas around the jungles of Southeast Asia," he said.

GOP Dinner In Framingham

BOSTON (AP) - More than 250 persons are expected to attend a $1,000 per plate fundraising dinner for President Nixon's reelection campaign in Framingham Tuesday, one of 25 similar affairs being held across the nation.

Chairman of the New England dinner is Lloyd Waring of Rockport, a well known Republican fundraiser, who said in a statement Monday that many of those attending "will be representing a block of Nixon supporters who pooled their financial resources so they could be represented in Framingham.

"At the same time, this effort is being paralleled by an all out effort to obtain smaller donations from Republicans, Democrats and Independents from across New England..."

Waring also is chairman of the New England fund-raising effort for the campaign.

A closed circuit television address by the President will be carried live to all 24 dinners.

Harassment Hinders Communist Campaign

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP) - Gus Hall, the American Communist Party's candidate for president, said Monday his campaign has been hindered by telephone calls to potential sympathizers and by publication in newspapers of the names of people signing petitions to get his name on Connecticut ballots.

He said it amounted to "harassment" by "small-town newspapers editors and the FBI, especially in Connecticut." He did not name the newspapers, however.

Without naming groups other than the John Birch Society, Hall said his party had found campaigns being conducted against it in Watertown, Orange and Greenwich.

Hall made his comments at a news conference during a one-day campaign stop.

Hall also criticized Sen. George McGovern, the Democratic candidate, for saying he would end the Vietnam war in 90 days after taking office.

"All that is needed to end the war is 90 seconds," Hall said. "Or one telephone call to Moscow."

He said minority parties are the only alternative to "Nixon's corrupt, anti-labor, anti-consumer, war-making, racist administration."

McG Trailing Badly In Polls

WASHINGTON (AP) - Never before in the more than 35 years of scientific public opinion polling has a major party presidential candidate trailed as badly as George McGovern. As he himself has said of his standing: "It couldn't get any worse."

McGovern hinted over the weekend that his private polls indicate a rise of about 5 per cent in his standing above Labor Day, when he trailed President Nixon by about 34 points.

"When we do start to move, I think it'll be a steady climb," he told newsmen.

Experience tends to bear out McGovern's remark, although no one has come out a winner after such a poor start. As pollster George Gallup told a House subcommittee last week, McGovern "can take encouragement from the fact, as 36 years of polling history have shown, the wide lead of a front runner early in a campaign typically evaporates."

For example, Gallup says Hubert Humphrey gained 10 points and lost by only one percentage point in the popular vote in November.

In 1964 Barry Goldwater gained 8 percentage points during the same period, in 1960 Nixon gained 1, in 1956 Adlai Stevenson lost 2, in 1952 Stevenson gained 3, in 1948 Harry S. Truman gained 9, in 1944 Thomas E. Dewey lost 2 points, and in 1940 Wendell Wilkie showed no change.

Gallup has noted that the trailing candidate gains ground particularly when he is the candidate of the majority party in the country, as is Democrat McGovern.

Meanwhile, McGovern's polltaker claimed Monday that his poll, showing McGovern 22 popularity points behind President Nixon, is more recent and thus more accurate that the 39-point lag reported in another poll.

Pollster Patrick Caddell told a news conference also his findings showed "tremendous volatility" among voters-one-third of those polled had changed their minds since a previous poll of the same people last July.

Caddell's poll was at odds with a just-published poll by Daniel Yankelovich, Inc., which showed Nixon leading McGovern in popularity by 62 to 23 per cent, and even leading among Democratic voters by 43 to 40 per cent.

The Yankelovich poll was taken between Aug. 25 and Sept. 12, on behalf of Time Magazine and The New York Times.

Caddell, president of Cambridge Survey Research, said these results were out of date compared to his private poll taken for McGovern last Wednesday, Thursday and Friday. This gave Nixon 56 per cent, McGovern 34.

Another prominent pollster, Louis Harris, told the same House subcommittee that low standing in the polls can create a sympathy vote for the underdog.

Humphrey says the polls do not reflect what is happening in the key electoral-vote states, which are the real battleground.

He said the polls are dominated by "conglomerate figures that reflect the anti-McGovern sentiment in the South, the border states and the smaller, less populated Western states. These conglomerate figures are what they did to me in 1968."

'Vanguard Of The New York Movement' At New Africa

The "Vanguard of the New York Movement", an exhibit of works of black image makers, opened last night at the New Africa House to a group of 25 people. Present at the opening was Nigel Jackson, curator of The Acts of Art Gallery in New York City.

Mr. Jackson after his welcoming statements said he was very surprised at the small number of people who turned out considering the sizable population of UMass and the social significance of the exhibit. "Although housed in the New Africa House, this show is for everyone to see. It is impossible to love something you can't hate. I want people to come and hate the exhibit because afterwards I know they're going to love it."

The show is the combined works of ten black artists who have previously had showings at the Acts of Art Gallery. In context of the works shown the exhibit is fantastic. It covers a wide spectrum of images, with contemporary as well as cultural accents. The art show will be open to the public every day from 10:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m. until October 13th. Go and spend some time 'image-gazing'.

Exciting Sarge

Governor Francis Sargent in his letter of September 19 to students at institutions of higher education has promised "to make this year the most exciting in the history of Massachusetts higher education." The excitement may come from watching him slash the 1974 budget request of the University and other state colleges.

He has indicated a willingness to change the structure of higher education but still seems to work under the theory that college is a place to train for a job. He says, "Why preserve programs that prepare students for jobs that no longer exist?" The indication seems to be that the University's goal is merely training for jobs that do exist.

Sargent has referred to the Carnegie Commission reports as guidelines for "far-reaching educational reforms." Meanwhile, Clark Kerr, commission chairman, has written in the Boston Globe that many of these recommendations are not intended for use in places such as Massachusetts which ranks "close to the bottom" of its per capita income spent on higher public education."

We agree with the governor when he says that we've come a long way in public higher education. But now is not the time to stop. The University's growth will be in jeopardy if the 1974 budget request is cut back too much. A 35% increase, such as UMass has requested, may sound like a lot, but we have to make up for previous budget cuts sometime. This "catch-up" should not be deferred.

Minutemen's TheOne

The Student Government Association general election ballot on Thursday will contain a referendum to determine the new nickname for university sports teams. The renaming committee has submitted three names, "Minutemen", "Statesmen", and "Bay Staters", for consideration. We feel the best choice is Minutemen.

Minutemen is a catchy name, and in conjunction with "UMass", would sound even catchier. It has a unique meaning which immediately brings to mind Massachusetts. It symbolizes action.

Minutemen lends itself to reproduction in insignia form better than either "Statesmen" or "Bay Staters". The colorful colonial musketeer in uniform is a symbol familiar to anyone with even the scantiest knowledge of Massachusetts history.

"Statesmen" is simply a "blah" name. A statesman could be one of a hundred characters, and could bring to mind images as far apart as Benjamin Franklin and Adlai Stevenson. There is nothing particularly catchy or unique about it. Back when UMass was Mass. State, it was the nickname, but when the school reached university status, it was dumped in favor of "Redmen".

"Bay Staters", while unique, has no color and doesn't make a strong impression on the mind. It too, can be considered a "blah" name.

There are no major schools in the area, or in the nation, for that matter, who use the nickname "Minutemen". One of the main functions of a nickname is to make identification easy, and to give a school an "identity." This name serves that purpose.

The Massachusetts Minutemen. Think of it.

Issues Or Images?

By STEPHEN ANDERSON

This year's presidential campaign had promised to be a fairly issue oriented contest. Instead it has become a race based on personalities, advertising images and prejudices. Senator McGovern and President Nixon said they intended to discuss issues. However, they are avoiding embarrassing issues and questioning each other's credibility.

Senator McGovern, Larry O'Brien and Sargent Shriver constantly remind us of the Watergate incident and questionable handling of Nixon campaign funds. Their message seems to be that McGovern is more honest than Nixon. This may be true but it will be very hard to prove. The investigation of the Watergate incident and into Nixon campaign funds will not be completed until after the November election. Even when the investigations are finished at least one political party will disagree with the results. Senator Muskie tried to convince people to "Trust Muskie" and "Believe in Muskie". He was destroyed for not talking issues. If McGovern pushes his honesty too much it could do to him what trust did to Muskie. People do consider honesty when they vote but they would like a president they can agree with.

The first non-issue that was introduced into the campaign was the Eagleton affair. Eagleton was McGovern's first appointment of national importance and he blew it. The disturbing thing about the Eagleton fiasco was not that he had been under psychiatric care but that McGovern did not know it and the way he dealt with the problem. McGovern's ability as a leader was first questioned at that time. If McGovern wanted to dump Eagleton he should have done it the day Eagleton revealed his problem. If he wanted to keep Eagleton he should have said, "He's had a problem, let's talk about issues." He did neither and seemed to follow the wishes of his supporters.

Vice-President Agnew, Senator Dole and President Nixon have also done their bit to play down the issues. The Vice-President has offered his own solution to the Watergate riddle. While not many people may believe it, it does give the party faithful something to rest their consciences. Senator Dole has done some really deep digging and come up with some funny money in the McGovern treasury. But his charges have been rejected by the Government Accounting Office. President Nixon has developed a new method to avoid discussing issues. He doesn't talk to anyone. Since his nomination the President has only made two campaign trips. We are seeing less of him now that we did before the campaign began. Not only does the President refrain from public appearances, he avoids the press except on rare occasions. Since the beginning of this year he has received extensive press coverage. His trips to China and Russia; and the convention have placed attention on him. He has not held many televised press conferences, in fact only two this year. This does not allow for examination of his policies in a reasonable, responsible way. The way things look now William Rogers, Melvin Laird and Spiro Agnew may make Nixon's only campaign appearances.

There is a lot of name calling this year. It's not the usual name calling we have had other years. There appears to be much more feeling in it. McGovern has compared Nixon's policies with Adolf Hitler's. The Republicans have tried to picture McGovern as a Radical-Liberal. The country does not seem willing to accept their President as a New Hitler, but many people do seem to view McGovern as a radical-lib. The Vice-President who is an expert at sniffing out radical-libs will probably carry the message that McGovern is one everywhere. Many voters think McGovern is radical because of his stands on abortion and pot. Yet if McGovern's real position on these issues were known people could hardly consider them radical.

If President Nixon would come out of hiding and Senator McGovern could get more exposure and discuss more of his positions, it could still be a good campaign.

Nothing But The Truth

WASHINGTON–There is no doubt in my mind that the Justice Department has conducted the most thorough investigation into the Watergate bugging affair that was humanly possible. The fact that they were unable to trace any of the money in the case to any higher-ups in the Committee For the Re-Election of the president was good news to all of us who hate to think that any of our political leaders would be involved in such a sordid affair.

Of course there are certain psychological factors at work in such an investigation which no one can control. When the President's own attorney general is asked to look into a scandal in the President's own party, there is always the suspicion that something was covered up.

The person I feel the most sorry for is the poor bureaucrat in the Justice Department who was called into his superior's office one day and told, "Hapless, the President of the United States of America wants you to investigate the Watergate bugging affair and all its ramifications."

"The President wants me to do that?"

"That is correct, Hapless. He has given specific instructions that he wants to leave no stone unturned in his effort to root out the evildoers who would have the audacity to bug the offices of the Democratic National Committee."

"Gosh, that's a big assignment."

"The President of the United States, who happens to be President of all the people as well as the leader of the most powerful country in the world, expects you to treat this as just another case."

"He does?"

"That is correct. He has instructed the attorney general that even if his own political party is involved, and his own close personal friends are to be investigated, and his re-election is at stake, he still wants the truth to be made public at the earliest opportunity."

"Even before Nov. 7?"

"The President is more concerned in the illegal uses of wiretapping and bugging than he is in what happens on Nov. 7. You owe it to the President and the attorney general to see that every bit of evidence in this case is available to the grand jury."

"Why me?"

"Because the President feels that you are the best man for this job. He knows that you will not let personal considerations or your loyal feelings toward him and the great party which he leads interfere with your objective investigation of this dastardly deed.

"He feels, as does the attorney general, that you will do the job, regardless of jeopardy to your upcoming promotion or the consequences to your future with the Justice Department."

"Is that how they feel? I didn't even know the President knew me."

"He might not know you personally, but he knows that the attorney general would not assign anyone to this case unless he was certain that this person could not be intimidated by men in high government positions.

"I might add that as your superior I am proud that the attorney general has selected someone from my staff. I have as much at stake in this thing as you do, Hapless. Whatever you turn up will personally reflect on me as well as this department. We shall all be watching you closely."

"Don't you have a Mafia case I could have instead?"

"No, Hapless. Anyone in this department can investigate a Mafia case. But there are very few men we can trust to handle an investigation this explosive. It is your duty to our President and the attorney general whom you will be working for, God willing, for the next four years, to give us the truth and nothing but the truth, so help you God."

'GOLLY GEE, I KNOW I SAID I WOULD GLADLY DIE IN COMBAT TO SAVE THE THIEU REGIME, BUT THIS IS RIDICULOUS . . . '

Letters To The Editor

Pedestrians, Cyclists, Auto Hazards

To The Editor:

I agree with the letter Warren T. Windle Jr. wrote in the Collegian of the 21st of September, but I fear that his solution to the problem could turn out to be a little impractical, especially if cyclists spoke of how dangerous pedestrians and motor drivers are, and if drivers spoke up against pedestrians and cyclists. Like most social issues, this would also need "much giving and much taking" by all the parties concerned.

Can I bring the following items to his notice - and to the notice of all the readers of the Collegian, and those concerned?:

1. Since exceptions are not the rule, the fact that he (and others who have experienced similar behavior from cyclists) may have seen a few cases - is no reason to generalize that ALL cyclists also behave so.

2. The Collegian of Sept. 19th, stated the 'pedestrian crosswalk law'. But how many pedestrians and drivers are aware of this law? When crossing the streets at crosswalks I see that cars are not interested in stopping, usually not until the pedestrian is smack in the middle of his lane. So do we restrict all cars to outside campus limits?

3. On the other hand, there are many pedestrians who cross roads totally disregarding any road sense, or crosswalks made for that purpose. Don't they realize that this creates a very real danger for cyclists and drivers? So what should be done? Restrict pedestrians to the periphery of the campus?....the periphery of the campus being delineated by E. Pleasant St., Hobart Lane, N. Pleasant St., Governor's Drive, University Drive, Fearing St., etc....

4. Sure. There are a few cyclists who are road hogs. But if campus walks were made for pedestrians, then why do they WALK ON AND DESTROY THE FEW GRASSY PLOTS THAT UMASS CAN BOAST OF???? So by the analogy that cyclists are to be disciplined because they drive (or weave) on campus paths, then I move that pedestrians face the same music for destroying the grass, and drivers for not respecting the pedestrians.

5. If the grass is there for aesthetic reasons, use it only to relax and recreate on, not as a parade ground. If all the ground was paved, surely you wouldn't enjoy that!

6. On the other hand, there are many pedestrians who contribute greatest to waste and LITTER on campus. How many cyclists or drivers have you seen doing this? So the obvious solution would be to restrict pedestrians to off-campus limits! And that should solve the litter problem. (Don't give me that bull of there not being enough wastebaskets around ...Even when there are wastebaskets, you can see the pedestrians throwing their litter all over the campus!)

By now I am sure that Mr. Windle would agree that the solution is not in removing cyclists to the periphery of the campus. (The auto vs the cyclist, the cyclist vs the pedestrian, the pedestrian vs the grass and green...At least the cyclist and the pedestrian can fight back and 'demand their rights', but the beauty that was once this land is fast going forever.)

The solution would be in a more honest consideration for others by all concerned. How many of us are aware of the road rules in the State? And how many of us follow them? A cycle bell or horn is not an expensive accessory, but it is more than useful in reminding other users (on and off the road) of the cyclist's presence. Appropriate hand and/or light signals are yet another way of showing one's intentions - after all, everybody is not a mind-reader. A generator unit and reflectors are necessary (along with light colored clothing, if possible) for any night riding - both for the cyclist and for the others in his vicinity. A campus-walk is not the Daytona Speedway, and a bike is, after all, much faster than walking. Why, then, the need to demonstrate the 'mean maximum speed' attainable with one's bike on a campus walk?

The 'for-and-against' arguments for driving, cycling and walking could go on into eternity, but it is NOT my intention to make an issue of it.

To me, and to all, the solution will be in respecting the other man's (and woman's) point of view, and be caring enough to recognize and realize that they also have a right to the services society gives its citizens. Not just lip-service, but a respect-in-action-and-deed; by doing unto them, as we would love to have them do unto us.

Why So Piggy?

To The Editor:

Within the past two weeks the police have stopped me for possession of alcoholic beverages and picked up a boy on my floor for drunkenness. As far as I know, in the past two years that I have been at U. Mass., the police have never been so arrest crazy over misdemeanors. At a meeting last week I, along with a large group of students, was told that the police become upset when they say hello to a student and the student does not reply; that in fact they are trying to create a good rapport with the students. I find the idea of picking up a student for drunkenness ridiculous, for on any given weekend there must be several thousand drunks roaming around the U. Mass. campus. To have this put on your record, if you are one of the unlucky ones that has been picked up is completely absurd. It is also ludicrous to think that the police would stop a student for something as small as possession of alcoholic beverages.

There have got to be some reforms in the Campus Police Policies concerning student-police relationships, and I feel they better be soon before we see the entire student population behind bars for misdemeanors.

Jonathan Poster

Frustration

To The Editor:

In my attempts to cross the campus, purchase a cup of coffee or just walk from the Campus Center to the Student Union, I've found people unwilling to give an inch so that I may pass without interference. Why is it that I must always give way to the oncoming individual? People, for the most part, don't excuse themselves when they bump into you, in fact, some don't even acknowledge your existence. I realize the fact that the University is crowded and overcrowded, but this doesn't have to mean we have to live with rudeness. I'm presently fed up with giving way and having people trying to walk through me, I'm probably larger than nine-five percent of the student population, one of these days your attempts to walk through me may surprise you, you may end up on your ass.

Usually non-violent but if provoked...

Big Bad John Armstrong

Editorial Points

The Campus Police are still arresting people for illegal possession of alcoholic beverages. This, of course, is for lack of anything better to do. If all you had to do was give out speeding tickets and record burglaries; you'd want to get into the heavy law enforcement work, too.

And we still have incidents where security is righteously guarding the entrances to the lots while tape players are being ripped off inside.

Rents and Fees

To The Editor:

Last year the Rents and Fees Committee of the Student Senate was able to negotiate a 10% reduction in the Physical Plant budget. The result of this action was the transfer of some janitors from trust fund positions to state funded positions in such areas as the Grad Research Center and a limited increase in the room rent. The affect to the dormitories because of this movement of personnel was the reduction in the number of janitors in the dorms. In order to stay within the budget, Saturday cleanings were discontinued in some dorms while others, such as Sylvan, had their weekly service reduced.

Now that the students have had an opportunity to see that reduction in services the Rents and Fees Committee will hold a meeting at 7 P.M. Tuesday, September 26, in Room 178 of the Campus Center. The focus of that meeing will be to discuss further cutbacks or a reinstatement of the previous level of maintenance. I, therefore, urge any student who has an opinion on this subject to come and express it Tuesday night.

Volunteers of America

To The Editor:

Re: Volunteers for McGovern

Quit? Should Senator McGovern quit? Definitely not. With more than six weeks remaining, the campaign can be turned around with the same formula that brought victory in the primaries. An up-hill battle is nothing new to George McGovern and political observers generally look for a substantial leveling of public opinion in the polls as election day nears.

After canvassing for McGovern this fall, I assure you the major polls distort the reality of voter opinion. There seem to be many more undecided voters than these sources indicate. What's more, anti-Nixon sentiment runs high among the undecided. Their votes will go to the candidate whose supporters actively solicit them--especially by personal contact in their homes. Undoubtedly, the Republicans are complacent and will not mount this sort of effort. Hopefully, they will continue to be deluded by these early polls.

The proven McGovern formula is door-to-door canvassing. It is hours of work by thousands of volunteers. It is the candidate of the people going directly to the people. It is grass roots politics, not computer mailings. It is the only way to win.

So far this semester, the work asked of the Students for McGovern organization at UMass has been far greater than the capacity of the volunteers to perform it. We need more volunteers. With students settled into the new term, and the campaign at its most critical stage, it is essential we move NOW to secure the help needed.

If the Nixonites have complacency to contend with, then supporters of McGovern have seemingly come down with a case of defeatism. It is unwarranted negativism that sadly marks increased dependence on media/polls in the forming of opinions--or so it is maintained. Do not assume that Nixon has won anything. However, do not assume that McGovern can win without your help. If you rely on the vast number of others who "must surely" be helping McGovern, then there won't be any help.

The primary task is canvassing in N.E. communities on weekends; however, there is much work on campus in fund-raising, publicity, etc. The Students for McGovern meet weekly on Wednesday at 8 PM (watch MDC Notices for place). If you are interested in canvassing, manning the table in the Campus Center, or other work, please call: JoAnn 6-7326, Ed 6-5730.

Bargaining Sessions Ordered For Strike

BURLINGTON, Mass. (AP) — As Burlington's 470 school teachers continued their strike through its fourth day Monday, a state commission ordered daily bargaining sessions and a judge pondered whether he has jurisdiction to bring contempt proceedings against the strikers.

Middlesex County Probate Judge William E. Hays, sitting in Cambridge, postponed until Tuesday a decision on whether he can bring the contempt proceedings against the teachers who have paid no attention to a restraining order Hays issued last Wednesday.

At the same time, the state Labor Relations Commission declined to file unfair labor practices against the Burlington School Committee.

But the commission did order immediate day-to-day bargaining between the committee and the striking Burlington Teachers Association and also ordered both parties in the dispute to accept Harvard Prof. Archibald Cox as an impartial factfinder and mediator.

A negotiations session which had been previously scheduled between the two parties for Monday evening was held, although no results were immediately available.

In tne appearance before Judge Hays, the teachers argued that the court's jurisdiction did not extend over their strike. The school committee's attorney said it did and Hays told that attorney, David Berman, to present a brief supporting his position in court on Tuesday.

Meanwhile, school continued much the way it has since last Wednesday-teachers picketed Burlington's 10 public schools but only the secondary schools were closed. In elementary schools, some teachers and volunteers, including parents, conducted classes.

"Our elementary enrollments are a little higher today than the last day of last week," acting school superintendent Thomas Michael said. A spokesman for the teachers said that wasn't so, claiming there were "fewer students, fewer substitutes, fewer parents."

"Some of the parents have now appreciated what teachers go through," the spokesman, who declined to be identified, said. "One woman who sat in front of 40 pupils Friday was going out of her tree. She said, 'No More'."

In addition to picketing, teachers continued a canvassing visit to homes in Burlington, seeking support for their strike position.

Spokesmen for both the teachers and the school committee have said salaries are a primary issue in the strike.

Clark Warns U.S. To Obey POW Laws

BOSTON (AP) - Former Atty. Gen. Ramsey Clark said Monday he is not optimistic North Vietnam will release any more American prisoners of war, and he said the attitudes of government officials would be to blame if they don't.

Clark, speaking at a news conference, said it is imperative that "he American government obey the law."

He said Article 117 of the Geneva Convention provides that prisoners of war released while a conflict is still in progress must not be returned to military service. Clark said the posture of American officials leaves North Vietnam doubtful that Article 117 will be obeyed.

"It is imperative that everyone who wants prisoners released act in a way conductive to their release," Clark said.

He said Defense Secretary Melvin Laird's charge on Sunday that North Vietnam was violating Geneva accords by using prisoners of war and their families for propaganda purposes should not have been made "until we hear from them the prisoners first.

"I think they will tell us if they've been used," Clark said, adding that he did not believe any of the American party in Hanoi recently had been coerced into saying anything.

"We're getting three precious human lives and he (Laird) takes this time to criticize North Vietnam. I am not optimistic any other prisoners will be released in the near future," Clark said.

Clark said the American government could get back all of the country's prisoners by ending the war, but he said in place of that, more prisoners could still be returned if charges such as Laird's were not made.

Clark said it had been his experience in a recent visit to Hanoi that the Viet Cong were treating American prisoners "with humane concern."

Clark said it was his opinion the North Vietnamese would have a difficult time explaining the release of American prisoners to their people when American planes continue to bomb in the North.

"Secretary Laird's comments on Sunday can only cause North Vietnam to refuse to release prisoners in the future," Clark said.

He said the three American prisoners being released by Hanoi should be released from military service if they so desire and he said they should be allowed to return home with their families free of government intervention.

Howard Zinn, a Boston University professor of history who went to Hanoi in 1968 to accompany three released American POWs home, said it had been the North Vietnamese wish in 1968 that the released prisoners return home by ways other than the American military.

Zinn said he had assurances from military officials before going to Hanoi in 1968 that the prisoners could return by commercial plane if they wished. But he said those same officials later virtually forced the released prisoners to return home via military plane.

Zinn said it was that kind of actions by military officials which he felt could be blamed for more American POWs not being released by Hanoi.

And he also charged that an unintentional "conspiracy" existed between the American government and the American media covering Southeast Asia to "keep the American public ignorant" about what happens daily in the war zones.

Christian Groups Planned

A series of groups dealing with Christian and other religious subjects is being planned by the United Christian Foundation at UMass.

Some of the groups may be studying Christian thought and life, new ways of understanding the Bible, other religions, psychology and religion, Christian life styles, or other subjects. Other groups may focus more on prayer and fellowship, or on personal growth, according to Ed Curtin, chairman of the Religion Task Force of UCF.

The wide range of possibilities will be more specifically defined over the next two to three weeks, as students and others express their personal interests to members of the Religion Task Force. Persons interested in further information may call the UCF offices at 545-2661 or 545-2789, or drop in at the offices at 319 Hampshire House.

"We hope these groups will attract different kinds of Christians, non-Christians and those who don't know where they are," said Tom Lindeman, UCF staff member. "We believe that it is essential for people to get themselves together about faith questions, and to do it in a place where a variety of options are available to them."

A Coffee, Tea and Talk time is being sponsored by UCF today between 2 and 4 p.m. at 319 Hampshire House, so that students and others who are new to UCF may meet some UCF members and find out about other programs and services available through the foundation.

United Christian Foundation is an ecumenical ministry on campus supported by major Protestant denominations.

UTexas Names Its Magazine

By TONY GRANITE

WHAT'S IN A NAME? A magazine by any other name will never be the same for some lucky students at UTexas-Austin, where they've been holding a "Name the Magazine Contest".

Prizes are a weekend in Mexico City, a 10-speed bike, a movie camera, and record albums. For what? Naming the new tabloid mag to appear this Fall, inserted monthly in the weekend edition of The Daily Texan. The new mag takes the place of three moribund publications: Riata, Texas Engineering and Science Magazine, and the Ranger humor magazine.

HOME IS WHERE THE SERVICE IS. That's what Midland Lutheran College (Nebr) believes, according to a report in the Midland newspaper there.

The college is inaugurating a weekly linen rental service, this Fall, together with individual room telephone service and rental of two-cubic-foot refrigerators.

Anything to keep the kids at home.

BIKE BURGLARS BEWARE! The Michigan State Bookstore has located a virtually theft-proof bike lock that it is consjdering on stocking for its customers. But the price of $25 is causing them to hesitate.

The key lock comes with a four or six-foot chain that is five-eighths inches in diameter of welded steel.

"It's a monstrous thing and it weights a ton," the MSU News quotes the store manager as saying. "A thief would need a blowtorch to break through the thing."

Besides the price, another cause for hesitating to stock the lock is its weight.

"We're just wondering whether kids would be willing to pay that price when most of their bikes aren't even worth that much...and a lot of kids like to ride with their chains hung around their necks. But with this one, their chains would be dragging on the cement."

Who said crime doesn't pay?

CONVERSATION PIECE - there's a price tag of $35 on the yearbook of Bob Jones U. That's for the outsiders to pay. Students pay for the book through matriculation fees.

Foundation To Award Fellowships

The University has been invited to nominate four seniors and one recent graduate for the Danforth Graduate Fellowships, to be awarded in March, 1973 according to Dr. H. Duncan Rollason, Associate Dean, College of Arts and Sciences, South College, the Liaison Officer for the Foundation on this campus.

The Fellowships, offered by the Danforth Foundation of St. Louis, Missouri, are open to men and women of any race, creed, or citizenship who have a serious interest in college teaching as a career, and who plan to study for a Ph.D. in a field common to the undergraduate college. Applicants may be single or married, must be less than thirty years of age at the time of application, and may not have undertaken any graduate or professional study beyond the baccalaureate.

Approximately 100 Fellowships will be awarded. Dan Brown '71 received an award and Leonard Grzanda '72 was awarded honorable mention. Candidates must be nominated by Liaison Officers of their undergraduate institutions. The Foundation does not accept direct applications for the Fellowships. Interested students are urged to consult Dean Rollason immediately.

All applicants for these Fellowships must take the Graduate Record Examination. October 3 is the last date on which the Educational Testing Service will accept applications without a $3.50 penalty fee and October 10 is the final date for the October 28, 1972 Graduate Record examination.

Danforth Graduate Fellows are eligible for four years of financial assistance, with a maximum annual living stipent of $2,700 for single Fellows and $2,950 for married Fellows, plus tuition and fees. Dependency allowances are available. Financial need is not a condition for consideration.

The Danforth Foundation, created by the late Mr. and Mrs. William H. Danforth in 1927, is a philanthropy concerned primarily with people and values. Presently the Foundation focuses its activities in two major areas, education and the city.

Pearl Buck Hospitalized

BURLINGTON, Vt. (AP) — Officials of the Vermont Medical Center said Monday that author Pearl S. Buck rested comfortably overnight after being admitted Sunday suffering some discomfort in the abdominal region.

Miss Buck's physicians, Dr. John Davis and Dr. Laurence Coffin said she was still undergoing diagnostic tests as scheduled.

This is the 80-year-old Nobel and Pulitzer Prize-winning author's second hospitalization in less than three months.

On July 1 she was admitted to Rutland Hospital near her home in Danby after what doctors said was an onset of pleurisy.

Last Friday Miss Buck was honored at Castleton State College with a musical-literary tribute. During that evening she spoke to the audience from her seat.

She is most noted for her books on China, having lived in that country for 40 years. Her 1931 novel, "The Good Earth", sold nearly two million copies.

'Role Of Women' Colloquium At Mt. Holyoke

Two women intensely involved in education and the women's movement will present the key address of the colloquium "Escape From the Circle: An exploration of the effect and effectiveness of education in determining the roles of women" Friday, September 29 through Sunday, October 1 at Mount Holyoke College.

Coral Lansbury, Associate Professor of English at Rosemont College, will open the conference Friday, September 29 at 8:00 p.m. in Gamble Auditorium with the topic "Votes for Women--A Study of Political Illusions." Miss Lansbury has recently completed THE FEMININE FRONTIER, a look at women's suffrage in a socio-economic historical context, which she wrote under a grant from the American Philosophical Society.

A native of Sydney, Australia, Miss Lansbury received her B.A. degree in English History from Sydney University and completed a Ph.D. degree in English at Auckland University. She was selected one of the Outstanding Educators of America in 1972 for her service and leadership in education. Miss Lansbury, who lives in Villanova, Pa. with her husband, Dr. J.H.M. Salmon, a History Professor at Bryn Mawr College, is author of ARCADY IN AUSTRALIA.

Bernice Sandler, Executive Associate of the Association of American Colleges and the first woman staff member of that organization, will speak Saturday, October 30 at 8:00 p.m. in Gamble Auditorium. Her topic is "Can the Hand that Rocks the Cradle Rock the Boat?" Mrs. Sandler, a former teacher and mother of two teen-aged girls, completed a doctorate in education at the University of Maryland. In 1970 she began working as a psychologist for the Department of Health, Education and Welfare. Since then she has lead a campaign to get more and better teaching jobs for women through the application of a Federal Executive Order forbidding sex discrimination in employment practices by holders of Federal contracts. Some 350 colleges holding Federal contracts have been hit with complaints of sex discrimination.

The colloquium will proceed through Saturday, September 30, with panels entitled "Experts Explain the Present," "Alumnae Question the Past," and "Students Project the Future." Sunday the colloquium will be concluded with Morning Worship Service.

A New Challenge For A New Coach

By MARK VOGLER

Competing in both collegiate and professional football are two demanding tests that many young and aspiring athletes would welcome.

Having succeeded in both undertakings, Errol Prisby welcomes another challenge--the challenge of coaching collegiate football.

Prisby, a Cinci U grad who was a member of the Denver Broncos and the Cleveland Browns while in the pros, is one of two new additions to the UMass football staff.

Having played college ball under Head Coach Dick MacPherson (who was an assistant then) at Cincinnati and then a year of professional ball at Denver was to Prisby's advantage in securing a coaching position at UMass.

Acquiring connections is one thing. Getting the right man for the job is another. MacPherson was no doubt influenced by having coached Prisby on two levels, but he's confident his new selection will prove to be a great asset to the staff.

As the coach put it: "I have a firm belief that a lot of the true character of any man really comes out on the field of play. Having coached Errol Prisby, I can honestly say that he demonstrated leadership, intelligence, emotional stability, and a great desire to excel.

"His success after graduation, in professional football, and in his teaching and business careers was easy to forecast after watching Errol grow. I just thought he'd be a great asset to the University of Massachusetts and its athletic department. I'm so happy that Dean Bischoff decided to hire him. The squad has already taken to him."

Prisby worked four years with the Mountain Bell Company in Denver before assuming his present position at the University. He eagerly confesses that his new occupation is not the conventional 9 to 5 job.

"It's far from that," remarks Prisby. "My day starts at seven and doesn't get over until about ten. In between it's mostly all football."

Although designated as a receiver coach, Prisby's duties are relegated to working with both the pass receivers and defensive backs. He's actually the roving coach of the staff.

"I'm probably most valuable to the coaching staff on the field," states the new assistant. Pass coverage and receiving were my specialties in both the pros and while at college. This experience enables me to work closely with the cornerbacks and receivers.

"I might also contribute by filling in for the offensive and defensive coaches so that we can more thoroughly prepare ourselves for the upcoming game. While doing so, I have a specific responsibility."

Three fine years at Cincinnati led to Prisby's signing by the Cleveland Browns after graduation. He started a few games at cornerback and as a receiver. But a loss of a toe in an accident suspended his playing career. Doctors said he'd never play again.

It was a hard blow to Prisby, and he was determined that he would see action again. He played some basketball, building up his agility and regaining his confidence.

He decided to give it another try. So Prisby consulted the Denver Broncos in 1967 and asked them if he could play for just one year. The Broncos signed Prisby as a free agent.

"It made me feel great deep down inside," commented Prisby. "To me it was a great challenge. I wanted to leave with the satisfaction of having played at least one complete season in pro football.

"At the end of the season, my heart no longer felt that I was with playing, so I decided to retire. But I left with some fine memories."

Prisby didn't have many moments of glory, but he did share some thrills while with Denver. In 1967 Denver handed the AFL Champion Oakland Raiders one of two losses during the year. In that game Prisby played some fine defense against Oakland's outstanding receivers.

But as far as Prisby is concerned, his finest hour came in the Cleveland Browns training camp as he fulfilled his boyhood dreams. Prisby can perhaps best recall that moment.

"As a senior at Kent Roosevent High School, just in the shadows of Cleveland, every boy's dream was to play with the Browns.

"And when I reported to training camp, I couldn't believe that a little boy from the sticks was rubbing shoulders with Jimmy Brown, Lou Groza, Leroy Kelly and the likes. I was in a dream land.

"I can remember my uncle taking me to every Cleveland home game. As we were sitting in the stands he used to say: 'You'll be playing there some day.' I would tell him that it would be cool. My uncle really believed in me."

Sugarloaf CC

The weekly Sugarloaf Mountain Club's 3 mile cross-country run held on the ugly Area north of the New UMass track attracted almost fifty runners male and female. Bill Elliott lead all the harriers while Freshman Marion Kulick finished first female in 33rd place ahead of the other 4 women.

Race directors Tom Derderian and Charlotte Lettis decided to change the location for the rest of the races to the Orchard area to provide a more scenic and varied course. Next week's run will begin at 4:00 somewhere in the Orchard probably near the Orchard Hill dorms.

The Sugarloaf club is a local women's athletic organization formed by Lettis to promote women's athletics, primarily cross-country and track and field.

The top male and female finishers:

1. Bill Elliott	16:02	1. Marian Kulick	20:40
2. David Stamps	16:04	2. Merry Cushing	20:41
3. John Hubbard	16:19	3. Cathie Dowd	23:53
4. Mike Levins	16:25	4. Claire Brianna	26:03
5. Stuart Markow	16:32	5. Karen Colrain	nt
6. Rich Zawacki	16:48
7. Al Johnson	16:56
8. Joe Martino	17:12
9. Jim Shapiro	17:13
10. Dave Amato	17:20

IM Football

In Intramural Football action last week, a total of 53 games were played, 33 of which were recorded as shutouts. The week was highlighted by Kappa Sigma's 59-0 romp over Alpha Tau Gamma in a Fraternity Trojan League contest.

Leading the onslaught was quarterback Ted Donahue who threw five touchdown passes, including two to Steve Benson, and rushed for two of his own. Bruce Cobleigh ran the opening kickoff back for a score and his teammates scored the next two times they had the ball to run up an insurmountable 21-0 first-quarter lead. The stout Kappa Sigma defense not only kept Alpha Tau Gamma off the scoreboard, but they were also credited with two safeties.

Donahue, who also captains this powerhouse, feels his team is unbeatable. "I don't think there's a team on campus that could beat us right now. The only teams that might give us a little trouble are the Munich Munchkins and the team from Phi Sigma Delta. Our frat house in past years was looked down upon because we were supposed to be the Athletic Frat, and we never won anything, generally due to lack of organization. But this year we decided to show everyone that they're dead wrong. We plan to enter just about every intramural program this year and we expect to win more than our share of the trophies." Only time will tell.

In other important games, the Marauders, last year's Campus Champs had a rough time of it as the Hills Heads threw quite a scare into the Theta Chi team before bowing 9-0. Defending Frat champs Phi Sigma Delta, who seem to have the best chance against the powerhouse Kappa Sigma, rolled over Sigma Alpha Epsilon 30-0. The Thatcher Redwoods, last season's Residence Hall winners, drew a bye last week.

In an interesting sidelight, of the 53 games played, three were forfeits, one game was played under protest and will be rescheduled for a later date, and 26 games were decided by less than 10 points. On the other hand, 14 contests were won by a margin of more than three touchdowns. All of which points to tight races in virtually every league. And in the immortal words of Spiro Thaddeus Agnew — "It should be an interesting campaign."

Rugby Club In Action

By PERRY WHITE JR.

The UMass Rugby Club traveled south to Fairfield University Saturday to play the Fairfield club in what was to be a good afternoon of Rugby.

The B teams took to the field first, and put on a good demonstration of how Rugby can be. Fairfield looked the better team in the first half and scored six points on a try and the kick after. In the second half, UMass began to show some strength. With the hill to their backs, UMass tightened up and Cipriani set up Mark Der-Murgreditehian who carried the ball in for four points. The kick after was missed and the game ended Fairfield 6 UMass 4.

The A game was played next and the Fairfield club jumped to a quick lead. UMass came back to score when Nick Abbot kicked the ball over the Fairfield front line, and Micky Lolos scooped it up and was in for four points. In the first half the two teams were pretty well matched, but in the second half Don Auger scored for UMass to give them an eight to six lead. Fairfield came back to score fifteen more points, nine of which resulted from penalty kicks. UMass scored once more to end the game, Fairfield 21 UMass 12.

By the time the C game started, it was cloudy and the side lines were littered with beer cans and drunks. Armed with speed, agility, and that never give up attitude, the UMass C team romped to victory. Fly half Steve Farrah scored eight points on two tries to help in the 18 to 0 win.

The Rugby club plays in Boston next Saturday and then hosts the Yankee Conference Tournament October 7th and 8th.

Lettis Decision To ECAC

On Wednesday UMass athletic director Frank McInerney will bring the question of Charlotte Lettis's eligibility before the annual meeting of the Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference.

Lettis, a Junior, wants to tryout for the cross-country team but under current E.C.A.C. rules is not allowed to even tryout for the varsity or jr. varsity teams. Conference rules do not strictly prohibit women from cross-country teams but the eligibility rule reads, "All male students who have....."

Cross-Country team members and Coach O'Brien stand solidly in support of Lettis and like all other candidates she has been given a physical (which she passed) and equipment to train in.

About the possibility of her being ineligible Lettis says, "I pay my money as does any other student I should get full services for it including the right to try for an interscholastic team." Lettis continues, "This is an educational institution and athletics is part of a person's total educational experience."

Lettis has some impressive credentials to bring with her to the UMass team. Last year she won the women's New England cross-country title and since then has completed over a half dozen open road runs of 8 miles or more including a race to the top of Mt. Washington. In these races she finished ahead of over half the men.

Erving, Hawks Sue NBA

ATLANTA (AP) — Julius Erving and the Atlanta Hawks have filed a $2 million federal antitrust suit against the National Basketball Association and Commissioner Walter Kennedy over their refusal to sanction Erving's move to the Hawks.

The suit, filed Sunday in U.S. District Court, is set for a hearing Sept. 29 in Atlanta. The action was filed in advance of Kennedy's announcement Monday that he had fined the Hawks $25,000 for playing Erving in two exhibition games over the weekend.

The NBA claims that Erving belongs to the Milwaukee Bucks, which picked him in the NBA draft last April. Erving, who dropped out of college in his junior year to play for the Virginia Squires of the American Basketball Association, had meanwhile negotiated a five-year contract with Atlanta.

The federal court suit charges the NBA and Kennedy with Sherman Antitrust Act violations in applying NBA bylaws to the situation. The NBA Board of Governors ruled last week that the bylaws were applicable to Erving and that the Hawks must no allow him to play.

The action, said the suit, amounts to a "combination and conspiracy to restrain interstate trade and commerce in violation of Section I of the Sherman Antitrust Act."

Bylaws binding Erving to the Bucks "provide a pervasive web of restrictions which award to one team the exclusive rights to a player's services, regardless of whether he is actually playing for or being compensated by such team."

The Bucks paid nothing for the rights to Erving and no contractual agreement exists between the two parties, said the suit. The suit adds that the bylaws covering the case are "restraining and prohibiting Erving and others similarly situated from negotiating freely in a competitive market for rendition of their services to NBA member teams."

Erving and the Hawks said in the suit that he still has litigation against the Squires pending in federal court in New York. He holds in that suit that his four-year contract with the Squires should be rescinded because the agent who represented him in negotiations also was on the payroll of the ABA and "undervalued" Erving's talents.

Erving negotiated his contract with the Hawks after playing out the 1971-72 season with the Squires.

Despite the NBA warning not to play Erving, he paced Atlanta Saturday night to a 112-109 victory over the Kentucky Colonels, and played again Sunday when the Hawks lost 104-103 to Kentucky.

Booters Open At BC

By DOUG FIDLER

The UMass varsity soccer team will open its 1972 season tonight at 7:00 p.m. when it meets the Boston College Eagles at Chestnut Hill.

First-year Coach Gerry Redmond has not decided yet who will start the game, but has several players to choose from who looked sharp in pre-season play.

Mark Tyma and Steve Sormanti should get the starting nod at midfield, while Ed Doherty and Mike Nugent will see a lot of backup action.

Howie Spier, Jeff Hague, Tom Coburn, Jim Vollinger, Tony King, Rudi Jones, and Dean Lungu should all play a considerable amount of time at the attacking positions.

"I've been impressed with the team's progress to date," reviewed Coach Redmond. "In particular, their running has become more effective and their passing more unselfish. We still do have to work on improving the accuracy of our passing, though."

"The most pleasing thing to me has been the response of the players to my coaching ideas and their willingness to work hard at improving their play."

Redmond is apprehensive about playing on the astroturf and under the lights, as they have not done so as yet this season. "We hope to get there a little early so that the team can have a run on the field."

Luiz Ambar, a native of Rio de Janiero, will join McKenna as the only freshmen on the squad. Although he will not make the trip to Boston, he will be working out with the varsity this week in preparation for UMass' initial Yankee Conference game this Saturday against Maine in Amherst.

An upset has already occurred in this infant conference season. Connecticut used tenacious defense to defeat Vermont 3-2 in overtime last Saturday. Vermont was pre-seasonally picked to be one of the top contenders for the YanCon Crown.

Tomorrow: A Look At Peil Pennington

Roy Lyons

After years of viewing sports and hearing how versatile some of the athletes are, I think it's time to credit the announcers with having some potential versatility of their own. Many of the Boston area and network sportscasters would be perfectly capable in other professions. Individually, I'd rate them something like this:

Johnny Pesky - Race track kibitzer. Johnny's voice is frequently heard in the background when the other Red Sox announcers, Ken Coleman and Dave Martin, are taking their turns at the mike.

Clark Booth - Special consultant to Funk and Wagnalls. Clark can make a sports show meant for the general public sound like a seminar for graduate students majoring in English.

Johnny Most - Demagogue. With his biased views and emotional outbursts, this would be a natural for the Celts' sportscaster. He merely needs to take a soap box to his now famous position at the Garden "high above court side".

Jim McKay - Judge. Jim displayed his prowess as a decision maker during the Olympic Games in Munich by determining exactly what does or does not constitute a protest by an American athlete.

Jack Whittaker - Haberdasher. Jack seems to be a true clotheshorse with a special flair for golf hats in the true Ben Hogan tradition.

Bud Wilkinson - Mathematician. Bud always seems prepossessed with numbers. By the time he has covered number of turnovers, number of offensive plays, number of third down conversions, and amount of time each team has had the ball, the play is over. And, to wrap it up, let's not forget Mr. Controversy himself:

Howard Cosell - Attorney. Howard has done more cross-examining on the air than most lawyers do in a life time. He was at his merciless best in a recent "interview" with our assistant track coach in Munich, Stan Wright. (Cosell has, in fact, studied law).

Name To Be Picked

The UMass Minutemen? The UMass Stateman? The UMass Bay Staters?

One of these names will be the one chosen to replace "Redmen" when the student body votes on them in the Student Government Association election on Thursday.

The three names were chosen from a list of approximately twenty by the Re-naming committee, which met last night in the Campus Center.

The list of names, submitted by students and members of the re-naming committee, included "Redmen" in the original twenty, but it was determined that the resubmission of "Redmen" as a choice would only result in the name eventually being picked by the administration.

Names included; "Rebels", "Pioneers," "Cardinals", "Aggies," "Brewers," "Raiders", "Colonials" and several others.

The twenty names were subjected to a preliminary vote which reduced the number of names under consideration to six: "Minutemen", "Colonials," "Pioneers," "Statesman," "Bay Staters" and "Raiders."

Committee members then voted on the six by preference, with "Minutemen" being top pick, followed by "Statesmen" and "Bay Staters" respectively.

The committee was composed of; Denise Magnell of the Student Senate, Paul Doran of the Commuter Assembly, Kent Best of WMUA, Bill Ballou of the Collegian, Prof. Bernard Bussell of the Athletic Council, Dan Melley of the Athletic Council, Tom Price of the football team, Skip Parmenter, a former member of the football team, and Bernard Noymer of the Alumni Association.

Brown Arouses Crowd On Impact Of Drugs

By PAM HYJEK

Drug therapist Dan Brown last night delivered an engrossing lecture on his studies of the use of psychedelics and what he believed to be the impact of their use on this generation.

While most of the large crown listened attentively, some laughed aloud, empathizing with some of Brown's descriptions that struck a note of relevancy in their lives. Brown spoke in the Student Union Ballroom in a Room to Move sponsored lecture.

Experienced in drug crises, therapists that employ hypnosis and LSD psychotherapy, and a student of parapsychology, Brown is taking his Ph. D. in Religion and Personality.

One of his main ideas was that there are two basic patterns of usage of psychedelics; the casual "play-group" that has been the experience of the vast majority of young people, and the controlled, planned session in which higher dosages of LSD are used, and in which attention is focused inward.

Brown stressed the dramatic difference between these two usages; stating that the latter one prepares the user for patterned journeys through chaotic regions of their make-up, to eventually provide growth. He noted that the care involved in this type of usage is consistent with the awe and respect that primitive man had for what they considered the sacred properties of psychedelic substances.

Though the "play group" usage was superficial, people tripping only to have fun, this, he pointed out, was a blessing in disguise as people had no preparation for deeper experiences. When people did descend to deeper levels, the superficiality of the "play group" allowed no course of working out the surfaced conflicts. It was, ironically, the deeper, richer experiences that became "bad trips", in the inappropriate environment of the popular "play group" tripping.

To deal with the problems arising from the "bad trips", Brown suggested a higher dosage of LSD and a guide to lead the individual through the conflict "space". But due to th illegality of psychedelics, he uses hypnosis and fantasy venting; heavy therapy for heavy problems.

Brown warned against methods that repressed these areas of conflict, pointing out that were bad trips occur, they mark personal crises in the individual and offer tremendous opportunity for growth rarely found in the every day course of life. He noted the possibilities for enlightenment in this artificially induced crises situation.

Positive developments in the youth culture that may be attributed to the use of psychedelics according to Brown, are a breaking with the shackles of the past; using the distances provided by drugs to explore the inner self. Another good effect is the ability to see through "social games" with a capacity to conceive of various ways of looking at culture.

Observing that our society is barren in providing rituals of growth and identity discovery, he saw psychedelics as such a rite of passage--or as a system of self-therapy to struggle through conflicts with intrinsic, new-found creativity.

Brown saw that the number of people who found these uses were disturbingly small.

One bad reaction he sees as the days of tripping are on the wane, is the significant usage of barbituates. This, he linked with people who may have had heavy experiences with LSD; "bad trips" and who use downs to damper the surfaced conflicts.

Still other people, added Brown, deal with these surfaced conflicts, left over from the tripping phase, with meditation. This new dimension brings people to another realm of crisis-the spiritual. Brown reflected that the changing form of youth crisis problem must be met with adequate change in treatment methods.

McCoy Reflects On CCEBS

Rody McCoy said that the CCEBS student should bring his leadership back to the community he came from. McCoy who is active in many organizations, and was in the hotbed of the New York teachers strike a few years back, is the new director of CCEBS. (Photo by Alan Chapman)

By ROBERT L. SCHEIER

Associate Professor Rhody A. McCoy, the new director of the CCEBS (Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black Students) program says he wants the program to become more autonomous and direct its students to return as leaders for the communities from which they came.

Dr. McCoy, currently an associate professor at the UMass School of Education, became the director of the program on July 1, succeeding Dr. Laurence L. Johnson.

The CCEBS program provides financial, academic, and counseling assistance for 600 black, Spanish-speaking, and Chicano students at UMass. It was founded in June, 1968.

Last November he was appointed by Governor Francis Sargent to a commission to establish a plan for school district organization and collaboration in the state, and is—among other posts—an advisor to the Model Cities program in Springfield.

In an interview, he said that among his goals will be to recruit and counsel students with an eye to their future careers. He said these programs could be combined and administered by CCEBS.

"We have had numerous counseling problems," he acknowledged, adding that many students got caught up in the bureacratic maze" of the university before realizing they needed special counseling help.

He said the CCEBS program should counsel a student in how his collegiate studies will relate to improving his community when the student returns to it.

"Historically, those persons with degrees have been invisible in their communities when they return to them," he said. "We think our graduates should, along with remaining active in their occupations, hold a leadership role in those communities."

By taking this role in the communities, he continued, they could help pass along the acquisition of skills to other students.

Another function of the program, he said, was to give the students a "political awareness" to help them use their skills to help their communities.

He acknowledged that there were "apprehensions and anxieties" between some black and white students on campus, but said their effect could be lessened by "getting people involved in productive things."

In reference to the recent student senate act guaranteeing 15 seats to Third World representatives, he said quotas "are a game" and "not an intelligent way to deal with any issue."

He also said many CCEBS students had changed their majors, complaining of bias in courses in some departments. The program was preparing to discuss the charges with the departments involved, he added.

Dr. McCoy received his B.S. from Howard University in 1947, Master of Arts from New York University in 1949, an Advance Certificate in Administration and Supervision from Brooklyn College in 1968, and his Doctor of Education degree from the UMass school of education in 1971.

He was unit Administrator of the Ocean-Hill Brownsille school district in Brooklyn from July, 1967 through July, 1970. The district was a federally-funded experiment in community-controlled schools.

In addition to being a lecturer in Urban Education at the School of Education, he is a former director of the Worcester-Springfield Career Opportunity Program (COP) program at UMass.

Trustees Meet On Budget

By JAMES GOLD

The Executive Committee of Boston's UMass Board of Trustees met today to take up the issues of the fiscal 1974 budget and nominees for honorary degrees.

Also discussed at the meeting were the UMass-Boston governance system and tuition waivers for six foreign students attending the urban campus.

The committee went into executive session to discuss the matter the upcoming budget battle. According to a source close to the trustees, a strategy to counter Governor Francis Sargent's requests to cut the budget was the major topic of the session.

In regular business, it was decided that honorary degrees for the UMass-Amherst commencement will be determined by a committee, which has already been established. Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery, President Robert Wood, and the Trustees. Wood called for real participation by the committee, not just "pro forma participation".

A constitution authorizing a "University-wide" governance system at UMass-Boston was submitted for consideration by Boston's Chancellor Roy Hamilton. "University-wide" as used in connection with that constitution means that a University Assembly which represents the students, faculty, and professional staff in a unicameral body will have most of the governance power at the Boston campus.

By suggestion of Trustee Chairman Joseph Healy, a decision to accept the constitution was temporarily put off until all the commitee would have more time to study it.

A problem had developed when an old draft of the constitution had been sent to the committee members in advance of the meeting instead of the corrected draft.

Concerning the approval of six tuition waivers at UMass-Boston, Trustee Frederick S. Troy said that these should be employed "prudently".

The meeting, which was held at the President's office, lasted two and one-half hours. Most of this was used for the executive session from which the press is barred.

State Candidates To Debate

By GARY TWARDZIK

Tonight's meeting of the undergraduate Student Senate will feature statements by John W. Olver and John D. Barrus, candidates for state senator from the Hampshire-Franklin. The meeting is slated to begin at 7:00.

Each candidate will deliver a 10-minute presentation on campaign issues to be followed by a question-and-answer period. Both Barrus, the incumbent Republican, and Olver, the Democratic challenger, were unopposed in the September 19 primary.

According to John Hogan, speaker of the Student Senate, the status of the injunction hearing concerning the Senate's recent reapportionment plan affecting Third World interests will also be announced at the meeting. The plan guaranteed 15 seats in the Senate to representatives of the Third World at UMass. "I expect a subpoena relating to this issue will be served at the meeting by an advocate of the Attorney General's office," Hogan said. A court hearing has been set for October 5.

Other topics to be briefly considered at tonight's meeting are the feasibility of adding a cafeteria in the Goodell building for next year and the merits of incorporating student government at UMass.

Hogan believes that tonight's meeting will be "more informal" than usual as this will be the last meeting of the old Senate. New senators will be elected Thursday and sworn in on the following Wednesday. People elected this Thursday to represent Third World interests will also be sworn in at the next meeting, Hogan said.

Sylvan Janitorial Service Discussed

By NATHAN GORENSTEIN

The alleged lack of basic janitorial services in Sylvan Residential Area confronted the Student Senate Rents and Fees Committee at their first meeting of the academic year.

A delegation of Sylvan residents, led by Area President Mickey Harris, Mcnamara Head of Residence Kathy O'Connell and Mcnamara House Moderator Mike LaClair told the committee that while there was a 22% rise in the occupancy rate of the area this year, the number of janitors per dorm has been cut from 4 to 3, making it impossible for public areas to be cleaned as needed.

While no solution was reached last night, at next week's Rents and Fees meeting budget material will be presented along with an up-to-date report on janitorial conditions, and how students in Sylvan feel about a rent hike to cover the cost of more janitors.

Sylvan was originally supposed to have 5 janitors per building, which was cut to four when the area opened last year; and as a result of a 10% cut in janitorial services, this area has only three janitors per building.

Jim O'Donaghue whose committee engineered the cut last year said the committee had tried to find other areas to cut last year, without success.

Chuck Hampton, financial manager of the residential halls, said they had looked into food operations and furniture replacement, among others, "but that no one wanted the burden."

Bob Allan, supervisor of Dormitory Maintenance said the problem was compounded because three of the nine janitors in the building are women, who carry only a half a work load and are unable to do the heavier work, such as carrying out trash.

In the two weeks Sylvan has been open the problem has been compounded because of sickness among the janitors, leaving each dorm with only two. However, Allan said the dorms now had their full complement of three.

Allan said that when janitors were cut this year it was decided that rubbish and toilets would have first priority, with a cutback in the cleaning of public areas. (Lounges, halls, conference rooms)

Harris said the janitors have eliminated the vacuuming of suite lounges to save time and have been "bending over backwards to make it work."

Harris said that only the sinks and toilets are being done on any regular basis, leaving the bathroom floors and showers to be done on a catch-as-can basis. Harris added that trash pick-ups are being made only two days a week instead of five. Allan disagreed on this.

Jim O'Donaghue suggested that the students do the work that the janitors don't have time for. He said that surveys have found that a number of schools provide limited janitorial service to suites.

Harris replied that the students are paying to have the work done, and lack the equipment and know how to do it.

Harris said students had helped out all last year, but the problem was compounded now by a 22% rise in occupancy and the janitorial cut. These factors he said were effecting the moral of students and janitors.

SUG Revises Its Constitution

By WALTER LALIBERTE

The Student Union Governing Board voted 8 to 4 last night to revise its by-laws and constitution and to make itself a body elected by the students and the professional staff of the Student Union-Campus Center Complex.

The reforms of the SUG Board now join the new constitution passed by the Student Senate last week to revise the Board. The next round of action will come on October 2, when the Graduate Senate takes up the issue of SUG Board reform; by voting on the Student Senate's proposal.

Also agreed to were provisions for initiative petition, recall, student referendum, and selection of Board officers from the elected representatives of the SUG Board.

The new rules create 24 elected positions on the SUG Board. The professional staff of the complex will choose three voting members. Students will elect a total of 21 representatives to be apportioned to residence areas, commuters, and grad students.

The number of students on the Board are to reflect the proportion of the University population living in their residence area. Graduate students and commuters will be represented in a proportional manner also.

Guy Ross proposed the inclusion of professional staff representatives on the body. He said, "sometimes hostilities were created between the SUG Board and the staff." He expressed hope that this could be averted in the future.

Ross went on further to describe his action as being "blatantly political", and as being in response to actions taken in the Student Senate.

Measures to offer representation to student employees and alumni groups, however, failed to gain acceptance. Mike Zisser argued to maintain a small group, but cautioned to "Make sure the number of people on it work."

He further added that action at this time to broaden representation was inappropriate due to the lack of sufficient time to consider the issues.

The revisions allow the student body at large to decide issues. Upon petition of 10 percent of the student population, or 2/3 of the senate, an issue will be placed before the students for voting.

Any Board member elected by the students, may now be recalled. This requires petition of 10 percent of the constituency, action by the senate, or action by the SUG Board.

Release of POWs Becomes Campaign Issue

(AP) - Three American prisoners of war were heading for home from Hanoi on Tuesday, their oft-delayed and roundabout release through U.S. antiwar go-betweens a hot new issue in the presidential campaign.

Cocooned by Communist aircraft, the trio had yet to make contact with U.S. military or government officials.

"They are just exploiting these people for their own propaganda aims," Vice President Spiro T. Agnew charged.

He said if North Vietnam was really sincere it would "deal with the duly elected government of the United States instead of every dissident antiwar group who is attempting to make a contact in behalf of mainly themselves rather than of the prisoners, in my judgment."

In San Francisco, Democratic presidential candidate George McGovern blamed what he described as interference by the Nixon administration for the delay of a week in the departure of the prisoners from Hanoi.

At the core of the mounting controversy were the three POWs - Navy Lt. j.g. Mark Gartley, Navy Lt. j.g. Norris Charles and Air Force Maj. Edward Elias.

They were flown out of Hanoi Monday for Peking, after a farewell dinner of noodle soup, Vietnamese spring rolls, beef dishes and sweets.

The three had spent a total of 5-1/2 years in North Vietnamese prison camps. Gartley, shaking his head in wonder, mused:

"I used to sit in my cell and think about how I would eventually get out. I would talk about it with my buddies and we came up with some fantastic ideas. But I never in wildest dreams imagined it would be this way."

US Plan Abandons Key Role of Dollar

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States seized the initiative in world monetary reform Tuesday by laying down a comprehensive plan for more flexible currency values, a greater role for "paper gold" and abandonment of the keystone role of the dollar.

Secretary of the Treasury George P. Shultz presented the proposals-which include tough penalties for nations running heavy balance-of-payments deficits or surpluses-to the annual meeting of the 124-nation International Monetary Fund.

The U.S. plan will be on the table when the IMF's Committee of 20-a new policymaking task force representing both great and small countries holds its first meeting Thursday.

The U.S. proposals include:

—Allowing the dollar the same flexibility as other currencies to float above or below its stated par value; also permitting the U.S. government to buy and sell currencies in foreign exchange markets, as other countries do, to protect the value of its money.

—The IMF's artificial money, Special Drawing Rights, or SDR, would gradually become the standard of value for all currencies, replacing the dollar in that role. The SDR, called "paper gold" and used only by governments in settling their accounts, is now worth $1.08.

—Study would be given to converting into SDRs some of the roughly $60 billion worth of excess dollars now piled up in foreign central banks as a result of chronic U.S. payments deficits.

—Providing orderly processes for "a diminishing role of gold in international monetary affairs". But Shultz said he did not expect governmental holdings of gold "to disappear overnight."

Providing pressures on "surplus countries"-those with rising reserves of gold, SDRs and foreign currencies-to correct such surpluses by revaluing their currencies or other means. Countries with deepening deficits would be required to devalue or take other steps to close the payments gap.

—"Small devaluations would be freely permitted" and if the deficit reached some greater magnitude, the deficit itself would provide a justification for a greater devaluation "under appropriate international surveillance." The phrase presumably means under the supervision of IMF.

—Countries which refused to correct persistent deficits might forfeit their rights to borrow currencies from the IMF or their allocations of SDRs. Countries running surpluses might also be penalized by withdrawal of IMF's services.

—If a country running a chronic surplus failed to correct it-and thus forced chronic payments deficits on its trading partners-the "other countries should ultimately be free to protect their interests by a surcharge on the imports from the chronic surplus country."

Revamp In Manila Begins

MANILA (AP) - President Ferdinand E. Marcos ordered massive land reform Tuesday, reopened elementary schools, pledged to stabilize prices, and announced more arrests and an investigation of the news media in the Philippines.

The armed forces began a far-reaching disarmament campaign in the fourth day of martial law rule. Restrictions on some of the media were relaxed and the Supreme Court pondered the case of eight newsmen imprisoned under martial law.

Foreign diplomats waited to see whether Marcos' bold move could spin the Philippines out of its downward spiral.

In a five-minute broadcast, the president proclaimed the entire country a land reform area. He established a fund for purchase of land and directed its implementing agency to act immediately.

Marcos blamed the "existing national emergency" partly on "widespread discontent and unrest among our farmers."

More arrests were announced against elements accused of subversion, bringing to 92 the stated total of those picked up and still held since martial law was proclaimed Friday night. Four others have been released.

Some foreign diplomats say they expect to be able to tell within two weeks whether the tight rein stops the country's downward fall. They will be watching several key factors like criminality and corrupt government agencies.

All observers interviewed since martial law was declared say the threat of a Maoist rebellion has been growing steadily. They differ with one another over how serious the threat is. All agree, however, that major reforms were drastically needed.

Senate Passes Military Aid; Rejects Withdrawal Deadline

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Tuesday voted down a four-month deadline for withdrawal of U.S. troops from Indochina and passed a $ 1.8-billion foreign-military-aid-bill on its second try.

The 45-42 vote striking the end-the-war amendment from the bill reversed two previous Senate votes this year.

On Aug. 2, the Senate added the identical amendment to the military procurement bill, but it was lost in conference in the face of a recent 208-160 negative vote in the House.

On July 24, the Senate had voted 50 to 44 to cut off funds from U.S. participation in the Vietnam war but then killed the foreign-aid bill to which the measure was attached.

The aid bill was passed 46 to 41 Tuesday after adoption of an amendment by Republican Leader Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania increasing its total from the $1.55 billion approved by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee to $1.82 billion.

The amount still is $431 million less than requested by the Nixon administration and $311 million less than voted by the House.

The bill now goes to a House-Senate conference to work out compromises on the money authorization, and a dozen non-money differences.

Vice President Spiro Agnew interrupted his re-election campaign to fly in from Texas and preside in case his vote was needed to break a tie on the Stennis motion to strike the end-the-war amendment.

On the roll call 32 Republicans and 13 Democrats voted for elimination of the amendment; 35 Democrats and 7 Republicans voted against the motion to strike. Among the absentees was Sen. George McGovern, D-S.D., the Democratic nominee for president.

In Brief ....

Study Criticizes Local Gov't Economics

NEW YORK (AP) - A federally funded study criticizes local government officials around the nation for concentrating their economic policies solely on growth which the study says makes their cities unattractive places to live.

The study was critical of federal officials for compiling employment data by counties which "renders it virtually useless for city government's policymaking purposes."

Air Strike Continue

SAIGON (AP) - American warplanes struck damaging blows at North Vietnam's fuel reserves and U.S. Navy ships dueled with its shore batteries Tuesday. Ground fighting tapered off in South Vietnam.

Fischer Continues Complaints

NEW YORK (AP) - World chess champion Bobby Fischer said Tuesday that American authorities failed to make proper arrangements to allow him to lead the U.S. team in the chess Olympics, now in progress in Skopje, Yugoslavia.

He issued a statement through a public relations firm saying that without his services and those of grandmasters Bill Lombardy and Larry Evans, the chances of the U.S. team to win first place is virtually nil.

Uganda, Tanzania Accept Peace Plan

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) - Foreign Minister Omar Arteh of Somolia said Tuesday Uganda and Tanzania have accepted a five-point peace plan to be in effect by the week's end and a cease-fire already is in operation.

Arteh told newsmen he expected details of the peace formula to be announced in a few days.

Tanzania's information minister, Daudi Mwakawago, told a news conference in Dar es Salaam that his country has accepted in principle the withdrawal of army units from the Uganda-Tanzania border, meeting one point of the peace plan. He said details must still be negotiated.

Observers in the Ugandan capital of Kampala expressed belief that one point still at issue concerns the future of Milton Obote, deposed Ugandan president who has been living in Tanzania since overthrow by Gen. Idi Amin 21 months ago. The invasion was staged by Ugandan exiles loyal to Obote.

Amin told Arteh during the weekend there could be no border peace while Obote stayed in Tanzania.

In another development, military spokesmen in Kampala accused India and Zambia of planning a fresh invasion of Uganda from Tanzania. India called the claim "totally false."

The airlift of 50,000 noncitizen Asians from Uganda continued and Asians staying on in the East African country began obtaining identity cards.

Amin wants all noncitizen Asians out by Nov. 7.

Those being exempted or who have Ugandan citizenship have to buy identity cards, complete with photographs, between now and next Tuesday.

Hanoi Claims U.S. Uses POWs As Spies

Mrs. Minnie Lee Gartley, right, of Dunedin, Fla., mother of recently released prisoner of war Navy Lt. (j.g.) Markham L. Gartley, puts her hands together in prayer during recent visit to Phat Diem Cathedral 80 miles south of Hanoi, as U.S. aircraft were making airstrikes nearby. At left is Mrs. Olga Charles, wife of freed pilot Navy Lt. (j.g.) Norris A. Charles of San Diego, Calif. The women were invited to North Vietnam for the release of their relatives. (AP)

PEKING (AP) - American antiwar activists, in Peking with three prisoners of war released by North Vietnam, disclosed Tuesday a charge by Hanoi that U.S. packages mailed to POWs have contained spying devices rigged into such things as cans of milk.

The Pentagon called the charge ridiculous.

Cora Weiss, leader of the four Americans who went to Hanoi to receive the released servicemen, said: "It looks to us an unmistakably professional job."

The charge was first made broadly on the American delegation's second day in Hanoi, Sept. 17. Hoang Tung, editor of the official Communist party newspaper Nhan Dan, said his government was "extremely upset by electronic devices hidden in packages regularly sent to prisoners."

The activist delegation - Mrs. Weiss, David Dellinger, the Rev. William Sloane Coffin and Prof. Richard Falk - said they asked for evidence to back up the charge. This evidence, they assert was displayed Monday shortly before the group left for Peking and thence Moscow en route to the United States. Their schedule calls for a further stopover in Copenhagen and arrival in New York Thursday night. The antiwar delegation said this route was chosen to keep the three released pilots out of U.S. military hands on the way home.

As described by the delegation, the nearest thing to an "electronic device" seemed to be material for a radio receiver.

This correspondent did not see the display. I had accompanied the antiwar group from New York, and had attended various meetings with the three released POWs and seven other POWs who were brought forward for interviews Monday, but I was not advised that the alleged materials for espionage were to be shown.

I was elsewhere in Hanoi when the display took place at the Hoa Binh Hotel.

Later Mrs. Weiss told of the display and I received photographs which she said the North Vietnamese had described as showing packages and contents sent to American prisoners.

A Pentagon spokesman, Maj. Gen. Daniel James, said when asked for comment in Washington: "The charges are too ridiculous to dignify by trying to address them in detail. I know of no instance of such actions taking place and I think it is just another of the propaganda web that Hanoi is spinning to obscure the real facts concerning her intransigient position in refusing to negotiate meaningfully for our prisoners of war."

From the pictures could be discerned three names of alleged recipients - Charles Robert Tyler of Mesa, Ariz.; Edward Alan Brudno of Harrison, N.J., and William Robinson of Robersonville, N.C.

Mrs. Weiss' group told of the following:

—An extra-large tube of Colgate toothpaste which when squeezed out revealed what Hanoi said was a receiving apparatus with a battery compartment and an earpiece.

—Inside a candy bar were two pieces of cellulose paper, 2 by 3 inches, with instructions for writing messages that would not be detectable. The special paper was to be folded so that it made a sharp edge and the secret message was to be written with this edge, the North Vietnamese said. Then, by using a code word in a normal letter, the prisoner would tell the person receiving receiving his letter that there was a special message to be found by special processing of the paper.

—A peanut shell that had been hollowed out and contained a message, and also cans of Carnation milk and Maxwell House instant coffee which Hanoi said also had contained messages.

—A toy hippopotamus about 1-1/2 inches long, sealed, which when opened showed an enclosure with raised writing on one side reading "use secret hiding place" and on the other, "hold together, stand up."

One small cellulose sheet was said to have asked for verification of the deaths of five American fliers, as announced by the North Vietnamese, and information about any others known to be dead. The same sheet asked recipients to provide any information about prisoners captured anywhere in Indochina. The instructions with this were said to read: "Identify X reference word X provide details on letter writing procedure X. Are you under constant observation by guards or interrogators while writing home queries? Are some POW's not allowed to write? Do you get to keep your letters from home? Do POWs have access to or control of communications receivers? What frequencies and times can you receive queries? If not available, what critical parts are needed to build a receiver. How effective is covert POW communications."

The North Vietnamese asserted such things had encroached on their security, and that they had taken necessary steps. They voiced a demand that the United States put "an end to this practice."

Kissinger Resumes Talks in Paris

PARIS (AP)-Henry A. Kissinger had his 18th secret meeting with the peace envoys from North Vietnam on Tuesday and another round was set for Wednesday. Neither side would say what was under discussion.

The presidential adviser's presence in Paris was not publicly known until the White House announced it in Washington early in the day. Then it was the White House that announced later that the talks had been extended to a second day.

There was no explanation for continuing the talks.

The North Vietnamese refused to comment at all. There was no report from either side on what they talked about.

Kissinger met again with Le Duc Tho, the Hanoi Politburo member and special adviser to the North Vietnamese delegation to the peace talks, and Xuan Thuy, chief of the delegation.

This was their fifth private session since July 19. The meetings have been held roughly every two weeks, with the exception of the month-long break following the Aug. 14 meeting when Tho flew back to Hanoi and Kissinger took off for Saigon before returning to Washington.

The latest series of secret talks began after the resumption in July of the four-party weekly sessions which the United States had suspended for 10 weeks.

Following the last secret rendezvous on Sept. 15, Thuy said the U.S. and North Vietnamese positions on political and military problems were still "far apart."

While refusing direct comment on the meetings with Kissinger, Thuy said he did not see any sign that the war is in the process of ending.

Skyjackers May Face Death

WASHINGTON (AP) - Airplane pirates could face death, and nations helping them could lose U.S. flight-service rights, under a bill approved by the House Commerce Committee Tuesday.

The legislation would give a jury a death penalty option as punishment for a convicted skyjacker, or a minimum of 20 years in prison if the death penalty is not imposed. The president would be empowered to suspend U.S. flight rights of foreign nations which support such terrorists.

The measure, sponsored by Rep. Harley O. Staggers, D—W. Va., committee chairman, was approved by voice vote. Key provisions are similar to those contained in a Senate-passed bill. Staggers said the legislation would give the government more power to halt aircraft piracy.

The Supreme Court has declared the death penalty unconstitutional as generally administered in the United States, but has left open a door for new death penalty laws that are uniformly upheld.

Lavelle Investigated Again

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Senate Armed Services Committee decided Tuesday to call the nation's chief military man for further questioning on unauthorized bombing raids against North Vietnam.

Adm. Thomas Moorer, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, will appear "to clarify a couple of points" at a closed session of the committee Wednesday afternoon, a committee staff member said.

The committee has been inquiring into the raids that led to the firing of 7th Air Force commander Gen. John D. Lavelle and has held up the nomination of Gen. Creighton Abrams as next Army Chief of Staff. Also under study is civilian control of the military and Lavelle's proposed promotion from major general to lieutenant general and his retirement at that rank.

After hearing Moorer, the committee will discuss the Abrams nomination and the Lavelle inquiry, staff member John Goldsmith said, but he doubted if there would be any committee action.

Lavelle has been accused by some senators and witnesses in the probe as being the sole instigator of the 28 unauthorized "protective reaction" raids carried on before renewed heavy bombing of the North was ordered by the White House. Abrams and Air Force Chief of Staff John Ryan have disclaimed exact knowledge of what Lavelle did.

However, in one raid on Quang Land airfield, Lavelle sought permission from Moorer for the strike.

Moorer has said he gave permission but only because the airfield was a Navy target. The permission was needed to allow the Air Force planes into the area, Moorer and others have said, they called it a jurisdictional question.

Moorer told newsmen last week he gave Lavelle permission only for a within-the-rules reconnaissance mission. However, Air Force aircraft on the mission ended up bombing the airfield after reportedly receiving groundfire.

Nixon Well Received In N.Y.

NEW YORK (AP) - While antiwar demonstrators shouted "Stop the Bombing!" President Nixon paid tribute Tuesday to the immigrants who came to America in search of freedom.

Standing beneath the Statue of Liberty on Liberty Island in New York Harbor, the President was forced several times to pause in his remarks dedicating the $7-million American Museum of Immigration.

Nixon supporters chanting "Four more years! Four more years!" drowned out the cries of the group of about a dozen protesting U.S. bombing of North Vietnam.

Police escorted two bearded young men and one young woman from the crowd. The officers' hands were clamped over the mouths of the trio.

The crowd of about 3,000 clustered at the base of the famous statue included hundreds of school children of various ethnic groups who had arrived by boat before Nixon's helicopter landed.

In praising the millions of immigrants who came to America, Nixon said they believed in hard work, and "they didn't come here for a handout."

He continued that "when it comes to love of country, love of America, those who came from other lands are the very first."

"Let's always be worthy of their love of America...their love of peace," Nixon said as he concluded and moved through the fringes of the crowd shaking hands.

The antiwar demonstration was the first Nixon has encountered since he began his re-election campaign.

The first stop in a journey carrying him from New York to California underscored the President's quest for support from normally Democratic ethnic voting blocks.

From Liberty Island, Nixon's scheduled carried him to hotel meetings with Jewish leaders from across the country and with his New York Republican and Democratic backers.

Then it was a late-night speech at a "Victory '72" dinner.

The $1,000-a-plate dinner in New York's Americana Hotel was one of 30 such dinners across the country in a major Republican effort to fatten an already sizable campaign kitty. Republicans hoped to raise upwards of $10 million through the dinners.

A closed-circuit television network was set up to beam the President's speech to the other dinners, where a galaxy of Republican stars was appearing.

Vice President Sprio T. Agnew was in Chicago, Tricia Nixon Cox in Washington, Julie Nixon Eisenhower in Kansas City and other Cabinet members and celebrities were appearing elsewhere.

Nixon planned to fly early Wednesday to California for a noon fund-raising speech in San Francisco and another $1,000-a-plate dinner that night in Los Angeles.

New York with 41 electoral votes and California with 45 are key elements in the President's re-election strategy aimed at carrying the big states.

Likewise, his strategy calls for making inroads into the usually Democratic voting blocs.

McG Claims Credit For Release of POWs

LOS ANGELES, Calif. (AP) - Sen. George McGovern said Tuesday he believes that if President Nixon is re-elected he will ask for a national right-to-work law.

And he repeated allegations that the Nixon administration plans also to ask for a national sales tax, lower federal wage ceilings and move toward compulsory arbitration.

The Democratic presidential nominee's assertions were made at a breakfast meeting of friendly labor union officials in San Francisco.

McGovern said later that there have been numerous "leaks" from the administration about a national right-to-work law, which would outlaw compulsory union membership. He said it's the kind of thing that appeals to President Nixon's financial backers. He said nothing further about where he got his information.

McGovern also said he believes his "nudging" of the administration is partly responsible for Hanoi's decision to allow three freed American prisoners to return home. McGovern had said Sunday the administration was "playing politics" with the men by insisting that they undergo military briefings on their return. Defense Secretary Melvin Laird said McGovern was making himself "a spokesman for the enemy."

Tuesday McGovern renewed his attack, claiming that Nixon delayed release of the prisoners to keep them from telling "the awful truth about the war-that it is the bombing which keeps them in prison."

At the labor breakfast, McGovern added that the administration plans to reduce the Pay Board's 5.5 per cent wage guideline to between 3 and 3.5 per cent after the election.

Only the right-to-work charge is new. For the first time in many presidential campaigns the Republican National Convention this year refrained from adopting a plank opposed to compulsory unionization.

In other moves apparently aimed at carrying support from labor unions, the administration recently dropped its vigorous efforts to get Congress to pass a law to use a form of compulsory arbitration to settle national emergency transportation disputes.

On the tax matter, the President has pledged that taxes won't go up in a new Nixon administration, but his aides won't rule out the possibility that he'll ask for a nationwide value-added tax, a form of sales tax in which items are taxed at each stage of production and on the amount of the value which that production step has added.

Recently the Pay Board said the 5.5 per cent guideline would stand at least for the time being.

While McGovern was criticizing Nixon on labor issues, some important union officials were endorsing Nixon.

Joseph Tonelli, president of the 315,000-member United Paperworkers, endorsed Nixon for re-election at a Washington news conference. Later nine presidents of member unions of the International Building Trades Unions added their endorsements.

The airline industry cut off air travel credit for the Democratic National Committee Tuesday, bowing to new regulations governing extension of campaign credit.

Other airlines joined the cut-off after American Airlines cancelled the committee's 12 air travel cards. American said the Democrats owed the airline $11,658, including $6,227 that was past due.

In other campaign developments Tuesday:

—Pollster Louis H. Bean said McGovern has to get up to 43 per cent of the vote for Democrats to retain control of Congress. He said Democratic members of Congress have traditionally run about 7 per cent ahead of their presidential nominee.

—Sen. Robert Dole, R-Kan., GOP national chairman, issued a statement criticizing McGovern for failing to be in the Senate Tuesday to vote on an aid to Israel bill and efforts to cut off money for the Vietnam war.

—The League of Women Voters said it is urging the Justice Department to enforce full compliance with the Voting Rights Act of 1970. In a letter to Atty. Gen. Richard G. Kleindienst, the League said at least 13 states have not taken necessary steps to guarantee eligible citizens a vote in the presidential election.

Church Leaders Split Between Candidates

NEW YORK (AP) - While some church leaders have organized to support the presidential candidacy of Sen. George McGovern, others are advising against such partisanship and others have voiced their backing for President Nixon.

It's a mixed medley when it comes to recording the religious counterpoint to the current national election contest, but that element is keenly involved this time, even though both candidates are Protestants.

"Directly and indirectly, religious factors will play an extremely important role in the outcome," says the Rev. Dr. Gerald Strober, who has done special research on the subject.

For the first time in the annuals of modern presidential elections, some prominent churchmen have formed a cross-country interfaith network, called "Religious Leaders for McGovern," in bahalf of the Democratic contender.

Although acting as individuals, and specifically not as spokesmen of their constituencies, they maintain that ending the Vietnam war is such a basic moral imperative that it justifies clergy in taking sides publicly in the campaign.

It's a new strategy, breaking with the long-time practice against clergymen organizing to back particular candidates. But its key planner, Methodist Bishop James Armstrong of Aberdeen, S.D., says there are "new reasons" for it.

"We're raining death on Vietnam today more than ever before," he says. "A nation is being reduced to rubble and it's our moral responsibility to do whatever we can to stop it."

Local units of pro-McGovern clergy are being formed in many communities.

On the other hand, Dr. Strober, coauthor of a new book issued by Association Press called "Religion and the New Majority," contends that the nation's new, predominant political force is symbolized by evangelist Billy Graham's friendship with Nixon.

"There's a close affinity between Nixon's and Graham's political and social philosophy and their vision of America," Dr. Strober says, adding that their view coincides with that of a growing preponderance of evangelical Christians.

He says that even though Graham avoids specific endorsements, his influence strengthens Nixon's position, both because of their close friendship and the compatibility of their views, which is shared by a decisive "new majority" of middle Amerians.

Some clergy have backed Nixon more directly.

In Fort Worth, Tex., at a meeting of the National Baptist Convention, U.S.A., representing 6.3 million members and the country's largest black denomination, its president, the Rev. Dr. Joseph H. jackson, came out for Nixon's re-election.

However, "boos" and shouted protests sounded in the meeting hall when he told 12,000 delegates: "McGovern says he'll get us out of Vietnam in 10 days. If he does more than Nixon in Vietnam, he'll carry a white flag."

Rabbi David Polish, president of the Central Conference of American Rabbis, urged Jewish institutions and their representative leaders not to take sides publicly in the contest. He said such partisanship could produce a schism detrimental both to the cause of Israel and of the American Jews.

Bagels As American As Apple Pie

NEW YORK (AP) — Comedians have made it a staple of their repertoires. A cement doughnut, they've called it. The scone of stone.

But the bagel has become a favorite treat of an estimated six million Americans since Jewish immigrants first brought the roll with the hole to U.S. shores at the end of the last century.

Less than 10 years ago, the bagel was still considered an ethnic product. But a survey of customers by Lender's Bagel Bakery Inc. of New Haven, Conn., one of the nation's biggest poducers, shows that, by family name at least, 52 per cent were non-Jewish.

The breakthrough came in 1963 with the advent of the first bagel-making machine. Now new frozen food techniques make it possible to mass-produce and then package and ship bagels across the country without damaging their crusty outsides and chewy insides.

"Prior to that bakers had to make and shape the dough by hand, and it could take six to nine months to develop a set of skilled hands" says Murray Lender, president of the firm started by his father in 1927.

"Then the bagels had to be boiled and baked."

Before automation, two-man teams used to roll out lengthy strips of dough, cut them to size and roll them around their fingers to form ring shapes and seal the ends. The bagels, made of high gluten white flour, yeast, malt, salt and water, then were dropped in boiling water to reduce the starch content before baking. Boiling before baking is what gave the bagels their outer sheen and hard crust.

Lender, who worked closely with the developer of the bagel-making machine, said the machine could produce more bagels in a half hour than a two-man team working all day.

In 1955, Lender's father and mother and one employe turned out 3,000 dozen bagels a week for annual sales of about $55,000.

Last year, Lender's sales exceeded $2.25 million with almost all of the 58 million bagels produced at his 80-person New Haven plant now presliced and frozen.

"A basic problem with the fresh-baked bagel is that it hardens too soon. You've got to get it from the bakery, rush home and eat it," Lender says.

"We got around that by a chemical formulation that elongates moistness by adding smaller amounts of vegetable shortening and a larger degree of egg yolk," he explained.

"That actually made the bagel a bit softer, but we didn't get too far away from the traditional bagel, and we don't market a roll that just looks like the bagel.

The bagel is believed to have originated with a Viennese coffeehouse operator in the 1680s.

Industry sources estimated that more than 400 million bagels are sold each year in the United States. And although 80 per cent are sold on the Eastern seaboard, Lender says sales outside New York are increasing.

Lender said that "you do have to explain to some people that they're like a Jewish English muffin: toast them and serve with butter, jam or cream cheese."

Mother Charged In Swapping Baby For Car

NAPLES, Fla. (AP) - A teenage mother was returned to Florida Tuesday to face charges of trading her 3-month-old son for a used car, and police in Alabama said they had staked out a carnival in the search for the child's father.

Jennifer Fire Sims, 19, was lodged in the Collier County Jail prior to being transferred to Immokalee for a Wednesday arraignment before Collier County Judge Christopher Sapp.

Mrs. Sims was taken into custody by officers who said they found her hiding in a carnival truck near Union Springs, Ala.

Police in Alabama escorted Mrs. Sims to Florida Tuesday, and officers in Ashford, Ala., said they were watching the carnival to see if Eugene William Sims, 24, returned to pick up his belongings.

Colliier County Sheriff Doug Hendry said the couple was accused of trading Eugene Evans Sims to Harold and Frances Vannoy for a 1971 Chevrolet.

Police said the trade took place last week at an Immokalee trailer park where both couples were working as tomatoe pickers.

Immediately after the trade was made, Hendry said, Sims and his wife packed two older children in the newly acquired auto and left Florida.

The couple sought work with a carnival owned by Jimmy Wright of Troy, Ala., who told police he told them they could stay around and he would provide food while they waited to see if he had jobs for them when the carnival moved to Ashford.

Sims and his wife were charged with "selling a child for payment or something of value," and the Vannoys were charged with "receiving a child for payment or something of value."

Police said two people who witnessed the trade, Sammy Fountain, 20, and Mary Hague, 33, were charged under the same statute.

Police say the baby was making good progress at a Naples hospital, where he was admitted suffering from dehydration and malnutrition.

Man To Run Maine's Length

PORTLAND, Maine (AP) - Jim Carroll is a 63-year-old Portland man who weighs 125 pounds and has a startling shock of thick gray hair on his head.

To celebrate his retirement he is running the 400-plus miles between Kitteryfand Fort Kent. That's the length of Maine.

"I've got a big ego to satisfy," said the slight man after winding up the third day and the 62nd mile of a journey he says will take him about three weeks.

"It's also a stunt," Carroll added. "I want to give my grandsons somthing to think about."

He started training for his run a few months ago....just after he retired as chief controller at the Portland International Jetport. He has been filling the vaccum that awaits many men at their retirement with 20 miles one day, eight miles the next and then a day of rest, all in preparation for this run.

"I think if I can continue doing 20 miles a day I'll set some kind of a record," Carroll said. "And that's my purpose."

He said the toughest part of the run so far is disciplining himself to stop.

"Otherwise I'll exhaust myself," he said. "So I try to do eight-minute miles and stop about every 15 minutes to take a drink and walk for one minute."

The UMass City:

During the past few years students have witnessed an incredible amount of construction occuring on the UMass campus. Construction, whose total cost is in the realm of 68.4 million dollars, and whose purpose is to supply the proposed 25,000 students with a necessary 5 million square feet of academic space.

Mr. John Littlefield, Director of Planning, said, "The fundamental drive of the university is to maximize the number of students and to supply them with the necessary facilities."

Unlike the Campus Center and the dormitories, the new library, the Fine Arts Center, Tobin Hall and the three towers at the Graduate Research Center are not, as Littlefield called the, "self liquidating". They do not pay for themselves. The money for these buildings comes from state appropriations except for about 6.7 million dollars which the federal government has given to the university as grants.

The completion of the Library and the Fine Arts Center is important because as Chief Project Engineer, Ed Ryan said, "The major central part of the campus will be complete and the landscape will finish up."

However Littlefield said previously that, "Landscaping is achieved through separate state funds." He added, "No funds for parking lots of landscaping have been granted for 5 to 6 years."

The Library designed by Edward Stone, is expected to be complete by February 1, 1973. Ryan has said, "Everything in the final contract (of the Library) is now in the final stages of completion."

Tobin Hall, the new psychology building, was designed by Coletti Bros., who won an award for their design of Herter Hall. The building was accepted by the Building Commission last Monday, and a few classes have already met there.

The Fine Arts Center was designed by Kevin Roch and John Dinkeloo. It is expected that this building will be complete by late next fall.

The Graduate Research Center is being built in two parts referred to as Phase I and Phase II. Phase I consists of the present complex including the tower. Phase I should be complete by November. Phase II will add two more towers to the complex, but will take about 2-1/2 more years to complete.

Urban Expansion

The Library has 28 stories and contains 405,000 square feet of floor space. It is set on a two story podium. The basement is unfinished, but the second lower level will be used as the main floor with services and a courtyard.

The services include reference desks, catalogues, microfilms, newspapers, and general periodicals. A tunnel to South College exists as a loading dock.

The first floor will contain administrative offices and a circulation return desk. The second floor is for reserve and circulation purposes. In the East Lobby special stairs have been constructed to give access to the second, fourth and fifth floors. The fourth and fifth floors are study floors. During exams this allows for a 24 hour access to the Library.

After the fifth floor a pattern evolves; one study floor for two stack floors. The Library will have a total of 6 study floors and 12 stack floors. The studies consist of departmentalized studies and smaller individual study rooms. The 25th floor is for archives and special collections. The 26th floor will be a colloquia with an outside walkway. Garry Menges, a Librarian who has helped plan much of the new building, said that, "There is not enough money to equip the building the way we would like." He also added, "The Library has spent $850,000 for equipment which is nearly half the sum Northwestern University used to equip their Library which is relatively the same size." The Library will have a capacity for about 3,000 readers. It will hold 2-1/2 million volumes which is twice as much as the present number of books.

Tobin Hall contains class rooms, offices, and experimental labs equipped with special one way mirrors. One new feature is the sound room. The room is entirely separate from the building and is suspended from springs to cut back on vibrations. The inside of the room is filled with polyethylene cushions to stop virtually all sound reflection in the room.

The Fine Arts Center will include, along with a music library, a 22,000 seat auditorium. The orchestra section will be set on hydraulic lifts so that it may be elevated to various heights. There is a smaller 700 seat theatre and a students workshop theatre in the round.

Poor Phone Service Confirmed by DPU

BOSTON (AP)-Massachusetts telephone customers' suspicions of bad service have been confirmed by private study-released one day before hearings begin on New England Telephone and Telegraph Co.'s request for a $61 million emergency rate increase.

Service in the Boston and Springfield areas is inadequate, hampered by lack of equipment, breakdowns and slow service, according to the Arthur D. Little, Inc., study released Tuesday.

But service is improving, the study said, and should be good in most areas by 1975.

The report was released by the Department of Public Utilities just in time for the opening session Wednesday of the DPU's hearing on the company's emergency rate increase.

The company has asked for a total of $122 million, but it says it needs half of that quickly so that it can continue upgrading service.

For customers in the state's metropolitan areas, this would mean a second increase within a year for a necessity that, according to the report, began to deteriorate in 1966 and has just begun to rebound. In January of this year the company was granted a $66 million rate increase.

Another suggestion of higher phone charges-this one from the president of the New England company's parent, American Telephone & Telegraph Co.-would raise installation fees to $60. President Robert D. Lilly said Monday that this much is needed to cover the companys expenses.

In Massachusetts, the telephone system began to break down when demand got ahead of equipment, the report said, listing the cause as poor planning.

From 1969 to 1971, the report said, "in total, the aggregate planned expenditures did not measure up to the job."

According to the DPU's chairman, John R. Verani, "The telephone company's management grossly underestimated the demand there was going to be for service in the 1971-73 era. The company failed five or six years ago to anticipate demand."

Current service, according to the report, is worse in Boston, particularly the downtown section, followed by Quincy, Brookline-Newton, Arlington-Cambridge, Malden, New Bedford, Brockton and Springfield.

"Performance was good in 1967," the report said, "but deteriorated rapidly after the extended strike in 1968."

Delays in dial tones and lack of central office equipment for incoming calls peaked in 1969, the report said, but "equipment irregularities continue to cause difficulties. This indicates a maintenance problem."

Trunk problems, which mean inability to complete calls because of overloaded circuits, began to mount in 1969, the report said.

"Despite the more than threefold increase in annual construction expenditures since 1967, the telephone company was unable to recover and to keep pace with the roughly 20 per cent increase in demand, as indicated by the continued rise in...busy circuits until 1971," the report said.

While the busy circuit problem lessened sharply in early 1972, the report said, "the level in the first quarter was still unsatisfactorily high."

Upgrading service will take several years, the report said, "and service in the western part of the state and outside the Route 128 perimeter will in general be good with the exception of trunking problems in the Springfield area."

Local calls should be easy to complete in all areas except Boston, Plymouth, Canton, Dedham, Ipswich, Melrose, Rowley, Quincy and Brockton. Here the problem should be partially solved by 1973, the report said.

It said troubles with dialing long distance will probably take until 1975 to clear up. But it said equipment malfunctions will continue unless the company makes a special effort in this area.

In order to keep bad planning from interferring with service, the DPU has ordered the telephone company to keep it better informed of its plans and service.

Public hearings begin on the order in Pittsfield Nov. 1, and the DPU plans to issue the order, or a modified version, in January.

It directs the phone company to make immediate improvements in phone service in Newton, which the report pinpointed as having particularly serious problems, and to set up a committee to review all information on forecasted demand.

It also requires the company to plan central office growth on a four-year basis and to perform yearly traffic measurements on all switching units that service more than 500 customers.

The order also requires the company to notify the DPU when it changes its forecast or fails to meet department standards.

The DPU issued the order, according to Verani, because "certain of the practices, equipment and services of the New England Telephone and Telegraph Co. are unjust, unreasonable, unsafe, improper and inadequate."

LOUDSPEAKER THEORY & DESIGN
Profs: Alan Evelyn and Computer (Bose Corp)

Aimed at both the beginner and the advanced student, this course spends the bulk of its lecture and demonstration time explaining the principle of directly reflectant sound, as exemplified by the Bose 901 speaker system.

The Bose's unique solutions to the familiar problems of woofers, tweeters and crossovers (the 901 uses nine small speakers, all of them reproducing the full audio range), speaker resonances (closely spaced speakers cause inaudible resonances), acoustical variations (the Bose comes with its own equalizer) all will be discussed.

The student is exposed in succession to each of the speakers in one of the Bose 901 systems (the complete Bose 901, at $476, includes two speaker systems and an equalizer) and the student is given an opportunity to examine the difference each speaker makes.

Music is played to acquaint the student with the life-like sound of the Bose 901, and the student is free to compare that sound with that of any other speaker in the store.

Take The Initiative

Nineteen seats will go unfilled in this Thursday's Undergraduate Student Senate Elections. Nomination papers for these seats have not even been filed. Is this how Undergraduates here choose to use the powers for which they have fought so hard?

It is disgraceful that students here are so unwilling to take the initiative when they have a chance to run their own lives. Contrary to popular belief, the Student Senate does have power over the affairs of the University. But rents are going up on campus housing. It is a sterile, degrading experience, and fees have gone sky high and promise to go higher.

The reason for this is that at the moment a small core of dedicated students are carrying the entire burden of Student Government on their shoulders. It is impossible for them to do the entire job alone. It's incredible that on a campus of 20,000 undergraduates, there are only 30 or so who are responsible enough to represent student interests.

A special election must now be held to fill the nineteen seats. Nomination procedures for these seats must begin all over again. All students from these unrepresented areas should make sure that they will go unrepresented no longer. Act when the time comes, or don't complain about losing control over your lives.

Domestic Tragedy

By ED FOGARTY and GABE IMPERATO

In 1968 Richard Nixon campaigned on the issue of 'Law and Order'. He said then that this country was in a state of moral degredation, that crime and rampant in the streets, and that a firm hand was needed to deal with these issues. He declared that he and his running mate Spiro Agnew had the strength of character and conviction to carry through the necessary and expedient means to achieve a stable society.

In the past few weeks George McGovern and Sargent Shriver have been pointing out that Richard Nixon has not reduced drug abuse in this country since he took office, that the flow of drugs from Indochina has, if anything, increased. Mr. Nixon's only response to this challenge was that the judiciary system within this country is too lenient, that judges were often not harsh enough and allowed first offenders to get off too easily.

It may be true that there are problems within the judiciary system in handling criminal drug cases. But that was not the point of the challenge offered Mr. Nixon. It was challenged that the flow of drugs is too great. All of which speaks for Mr. Nixon's priorities and his manner of handling domestic issues.

During his term of office Mr. Nixon has demonstrated his abilities at diplomacy. Especially in the past year he has achieved many milestones in the area of foreign relations. But what of his domestic diplomacy? How has he handled the domestic crises?

When Mr. Nixon took office in 1968 it was in the aftermath of many mass demonstrations and at least one riot, that of Chicago during the Democratic Convention. President Nixon's solution to this rabble-rousing protest and this demoralizing cancer of society was to bring it to trial. Thus we had the Chicago Seven Conspiracy Trial, of which none were conspiracy. Now we have the Watergate break-in, where no one is even tried for conspiracy.

In the spring of 1970 President Nixon ordered the invasion of Cambodia. His response to the riots that followed was that of ignorance at best. The May-Day demonstration of spring 1971 drew from President Nixon a declaration of Martial Law and a citation to the Washington Police Chief for a job well done. His administration has responded to protest and dissent with more conspiracy trials (the Berrigans et al).

Since President Nixon has been in office his response to the domestic problems of America has been to either ignore them or to squelch them. While the issue of Viet-Nam continues to tear at the gut of Americans he chooses to prolong the war. Where the tension flares up he drowns it. His solution to any and all conscientious acts is a trial for conspiracy.

Except of course at Watergate where the Justice Dept. has failed to initiate proceedings against the defendents.

His final solution of moral questions has been a diplomatic facade of growing world respect for U.S. foreign relations. This facade is supposed to make the American feel good and forget his guilt.

Mr. McGovern is facing the problem of moral disillusionment also. His solution is to 'Come Home America'. He and Mr. Shriver have recognized that America is disillusioned, disenchanted, and disenhearted of itself. Both forsee that law and order and a peaceful society cannot be built upon force, that society's disease cannot be cured by a beating. America needs to continue its advancements in foreign matters, but it also needs to buoy its domestic spirit. Our spirit, our integrity need the tending not of the club, but of our questioning and interaction.

What we need is not the reaction of the Nixon administration, but the leadership of George McGovern.

Bon Appetite

By JOANNE PRATT

In an attempt to "provide better service" to eaters of Basic Foods at the Worcester Dining Commons, the Campus Food Service has taken a significant step toward developing The Most Repulsive Atmosphere for Eating in recent UMass history. I refer to the movement of the Basic Foods line from the Blue Room to half of the east dining hall.

While the Blue Room wasn't perfection, it was (and probably still is) a pleasant, fairly relaxing place to eat. At least one had the feeling while eating there that one was enjoying a meal rather than choking down food in a bedlam.

The Blue Room is spacious (inasmuch as any room filled with starving UMies is spacious), with two points of easy access. The carpets and general decor provide an attractive eating atmosphere, and serve to minimize the feeling that dining commons were designed to hold their own against the periodic onslaughts of a vast, undesirable herd. Tables of various shapes lend spatial variety to the dining atmosphere, and offer a choice of seating arrangements. When one can change one's physical orientation in the dining commons appreciably by choosing different types of tables, one tends to become discouraged with the dining commons atmosphere at a much slower rate. Admittedly carpets, room to move, and table variety aren't everything, but they can add quite a bit to what is perhaps an inevitably distressing situation.

When one reached the end of the cafeteria line in the Blue Room, one could generally find room to deposit one's tray while dressing a salad or obtaining milk. The table at the front of the room served this purpose admirably, and in such a way that huge traffic jams were generally prevented. One could dress a salad without having to be on the constant lookout for moving bodies, trays, and salad spoons. In the actual eating area, table placement made it possible to traverse the room end to end, tray in hand, without incurring serious danger of losing one's dinner. Overall, on a physical level the Blue Room seemed well situated to catering to diners' needs.

In contrast, the Basic Foods half of the east dining hall is crowded and unappealing. There is only one point of easy access to the Basic Foods line, as one of the two entrances to the hall involves crawling through the frequently lengthy Regular Foods line. Once one enters the dining hall and has passed through the cafeteria line, the physical setup becomes chaotic. Tables, all of the same unappealing shape, are bunched together in long, narrow rows. The affect is that of a prison whose inspection is long overdue. When people are seated back to back in the rows, it is almost impossible to get to a seat midway down the table while carrying a tray. Presuming that one safely makes it to a seat, enjoyable eating is difficult in the rather depressing atmosphere. The decor is drabbly unappealing, and the tables are generally crowded. Between mouthfuls, one must push one's chair in and out repeatedly to enable other people to get by, while maintaining a state of constant, watchful attention, lest one should get beaned by a tray.

The area for dressing salads is extremely small and poorly situated, and navigation through it is much like trying to find a parking space in rush hour, in-town Boston. The success percentage and aggravation quota are probably quite similar for both operations. Trying to negotiate the salad table can also be likened to a game of dodge-em. Why go to an amusement park when you can play the game ten times a week at the Worcester Basic Foods salad table?

The present setup of the Basic Foods line does have the advantage of allowing the dissatisfied eater to switch to the Regular Foods line. The desire (and need) to switch could be cut by making every Basic Foods meal an edible meal, or in the event that this should prove impossible, by prominently displaying a menu for both lines that would be visible to the student before he/she enters the dining area.

Assuming that under present conditions it is impossible to consistently please students with respect to the food served in the dining commons, one would think that the Food Service would do everything possible to create a palatable eating atmosphere. Judging from the present Worcester Basic Foods situation, this doesn't seem to be the case.

Vine DeLoria & Third World Abortions

To The Editor:

A few words on the recent talk by Vine Deloria. Many of his points were quite well put, but there exist two important contradictions in his denunciation of Christianity. First of all, does not the title Custer Died For Your Sins bear Judeo-Christian overtones?

Secondly, and more importantly, was the blatant contradiction in his view of abortions. Truly it is fashionable for every guest speaker who expects to be popular to be in favor of abortion, but in Mr. Deloria's case, he is clearly mistaken. He claims that the Christian society's President should not oppose abortion, because abortion should not be opposed, especially to Third World People. But I must say that any Third World person who wishes his people to have free and easy access to abortion is essentially advocating self-genocide. If a Third World person believes abortion of her unborn is correct, then she has been convinced to be enthusiastic about her own genocide.

I suppose, perhaps, this Indian gentleman may be correct in his estimation, but from a different viewpoint. It is the goal of Third World abortion seekers to visit Judeo-Christian hospitals for safe abortions. It is usually the Judeo-Christian surgeon who performs this safe operation. Thus I suppose it is in the Christian world where such atrocities are allowed against people of the Third World.

I hope that Third World People who are wishing to continue their legacy stop listening to the bullshit and start thinking - the more of your own that you abort in free white hospitals now, the fewer of your kind will be around in the future. Beware the free abortions for Third World People - the practitioners of this blatant atrocity are slowly engineering (perhaps without even realizing it) Third World genocide.

Want an abortion? Go get it, but just remember that's one less Third World member for tomorrow. (Or is it only today that counts? - If so, then don't use the word "genocide" as a malapropism for "injustice".) Where is the genocide? It's up to you to figure out now...

Silly Statistics

To The Editor:

In his race for the Presidency, Senator George McGovern has repeatedly asserted that he is the candidate of the "little man" and his campaign is supported by the money of the average American. On page forty-two of the September 25, 1972 New York Times (surely not a newspaper hostile to McGovern), I saw reported the names of those who had contributed $2000 or more to either presidential candidate, and the amounts they had given. Armed with these raw data, I decided to test McGovern's assertion. The results I found were as follows: 181 contributors gave Nixon $2,332,503.46 in amounts of $2000 or more. 107 contributors gave McGovern $1,031,442.00 in amounts of $2000 or more. In addition, 50 people or groups "loaned" McGovern $2,353,264.00. I am, of course, unable to know whether these loans are to be repaid. The Nixon campaign committee received no loans. In all, Nixon received $2,332,503.46 from 181 people or groups in amounts of $2000 or more, and McGovern received $3,384,706.00 from 141 persons or groups (16 gave McGovern both contributions and loans).

Breaking this down, we see that the average contribution of $2000 or more to Nixon totalled $12,886.68, and the average contribution to McGovern of two thousand dollars or more was $9639.65. The average loan to McGovern of over $2000 was $47,065.28. Consequently, the average sum of two thousand dollars or more received by McGovern has been $24,005.01. All these figures appear to refute McGovern's claim that he, not Nixon, is the candidate of the little man.

Institutional Racism

To The Editor:

Several people have denounced the Student Senate's 15 seats decision as racist. I agree. But no one seems to have identified or discussed the basic racist assumption behind that decision. It is simply this: that "Third World" students, because of their race, have interests different from and opposed to those of other students, and therefore require some special representation and protection. Also, to make any sense of the issue, it must be assumed that these special interests lie within the Student Senate's realm of action. My question is: What, exactly, are these special interests, and how do they conflict with the interests of others? A second question also occurs to those who think of people in terms of individuals, rather than racial groups: Does this alleged racial interst group even exist, since "Third World" students are individuals with wide-ranging personal interests and viewpoints?

Racism is the practice of attributing certain characteristic modes of thought or action to individuals on the basis of their racial (genetic) background. The Student Senate's decision is plainly racist–it presumes a unity of interest and opinion among "Third World" students on the basis of race. At the same time, it presumes a difference of interest and opinion between "Third World" people and all others, again based on race. I doubt that any such unity or difference exists, outside the imaginations of racists. To think so would imply that people's ideas are determined by their genetic background, the crudest and most explicit form of racism possible.

The 15 seats decision formally institutionalizes racism at UMASS. It sets a highly destructive precedent and brings up two further issues that are bound to generate more conflict and racial tension: How many seats should the "Third World" get? and: Who else gets a piece of the pie? It's time this idiocy was seen and understood for what it is, and brought to a halt. Institutionalizing racism won't end it.

Polaris Submarines

To The Editor:

I must express my disappointment at the results of the contest to rename the University's athletic teams. Surely there are some on this campus who have more imagination than has been shown thus far! Why can't we have a really smashing name, one that will make the front part of Sports Illustrated when it is announced? Oh, I know it may sound corny, but I'm proud of my school, and I don't want to be ashamed of its name when I go around to other parts of the town, and some loud braggart tries to put me down and says his school is great. So let's have a really swell name, one that students from all over will envy. How about the "Cobras" or the "Polaris Submarines"? Can you see the headlines? "Cobras Bite Rhode Island" or "Polaris Submarines Sink Harvard"? Oh, I know it would be hard to write "Polaris Submarines" across the uniforms, but I've thought of that, too! We can have yellow submarines on all the uniforms! Then maybe all the hippies will cut off all their hair and support all our teams. How about it, gang, "The Cobras", the "Polaris Submarines", or the "Minutemen?" The choice is clear.

Five New Department Heads

Five academic departments at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst begin the year with new department heads. They are Professors Nicholas Jay Demerath of sociology, Arnold A. Friedmann of clothing and interior design, Samuel Jay Keyser of linguistics, Donald Progulske of forestry and wildlife and J. Edward Sunderland of mechanical and aerospace engineering.

Prof. Demerath succeeds Prof. Thomas O. Wilkinson, chairman since 1969, who will remain in the department.

The new chairman spent the last two years as executive officer for the American Sociological Association. For 10 years before that he was a faculty member at the University of Wisconsin. In 1964, Dr. Demerath earned a Ph. D. from the University of California at Berkeley. He has a master of arts degree from there, and a A.B. from Harvard College, 1958. His fields of study include social policy, sociology of religion, sociological theory, and social problems.

Among his publications are the books "Social Class in American Protestantism," "System, Change and Conflict," "Religion in Social Context," and "Dynamics of Idealism."

Dr. Friedmann comes to UMass from Pratt Institute of New York University, where he headed the department of environmental design. Until 1953 he was involved in cabinetmaking and furniture design, and from 1954 to the present has had his own interior design office.

He earned his bachelor of fine arts degree and his master of science degrees from Pratt Institute. His publications include "A Critical Study of Interior Design Education", "Interior Design--An Introduction to Architectural Interiors", and about 15 articles for professional magazines.

Prof. Keyser replaces Prof. Donald C. Freeman, who has been named associate dean of the Faculty of Humanities in the College of Arts and Sciences. Prof. Keyser has bachelor of arts degrees from George Washington University and Oxford University, master of arts degrees from Oxford and Yale University, and a Ph. D. from Yale. Last academic year he was a Fulbright lecturer at University College, University of London. He has taught at Brandeis University and the Yale Foreign Student Institute, and from 1962-65 was in the Air Force Systems Command.

Editor of the professional journal "Linguistic Inquiry", published by the M.I.T. Press, he is the author or co-author of several publications.

The National Science Foundation has just awarded him a $42,000 grant for a two-year study of "Phonology and the Syntax of English". His study will use Old, Middle, and Modern English to analyze the language within the framework of contemporary linguistic theory.

Dr. Progulske succeeds Dr. Arnold D. Rhodes, who is returning to full-time teaching after 16 years as forestry and wildlife department head. The new department head is a UMass graduate with an M.S. from Virginia Polytechnic Institute and a Ph. D. from the University of Missouri.

He has headed the department of fisheries and wildlife science at South Dakota State University since 1963 and has been a faculty member there since 1956. His research has centered on several game animals and on broad ecological changes in the Black Hills Pine Forest. At South Dakota he was a key figure in the establishment of undergraduate and research programs in fisheries and wildlife sciences.

A specialist in heat transfer, Dr. Sunderland has taught at Purdue, Northwestern and North Carolina State Universities and Georgia Institute of Technology. He has published extensively in the area of heat transfer and allied subjects.

He is a Massachusetts Institute of Technology graduate with M.S. and Ph. D. degrees from Purdue. He succeeds Dr. John R. Dixon, head of the mechanical and aerospace engineering department since 1966. On sabbatical leave this year, Dr. Dixon will remain in the department and devote full time to teaching and research.

CEQ Opens Files For Public Use

The Coalition for Environmental Quality has opened its research files to anyone wishing to become familiar with environment issues, who needs materials for a report or term paper, or whatever. The Coalition's office is in Room 124 of the Campus Center and it contains two full file drawers under such headings as: Population and Birth Control, Atomic Pollution, Solid Wastes, Connecticut River, Public Lands, Oil, Environment Movement, etc. There are also current and some back issues of conservation publications such as: Environment, Rodale's Environmental Action Bulletin, National Wildlife, Conservation Foundation Newsletter, E.P.A. Citizen's Bulletin, Conservation News, Conservation Report, etc.

The office is kept open by volunteers and while it is not open all day, the following is a temporary schedule: Mon.: 9-10, 1-4; Tue.; 9-2:30, 5:30-8; Wed.: 9-10, 1-2; Fri.: 9-10, 2-4. As more people volunteer, more hours will be posted. Check the schedule on the door.

JOE Meets Tonight

The Juvenile Opportunities Extension (JOE) will be meeting tonight at 7:30 PM in room 917 of the Campus Center to finalize many organizational details for the fall program. The hope of this meeting is to kick off a self sustaining program.

For those who may not be familiar with the JOE program it should be mentioned that the Juvenile Opportunities Extension is a student organization that recruits and organizes student volunteers to work with delinquent youth.

Previously JOE worked predominantly out of the Westfield Detention Center. Volunteers did many things with youth mostly on a one to one basis. Specific activities usually were organized with volunteers taking kids out of the detention facility. Volunteers also put over 700 manhours working directly on the floor of Westfield.

Sponsored by the Juvenile Opportunities Extension, JOE became nationally known with the advent of the JOE II Conference. The JOE Conference was held in January and brought nearly 100 youth on campus for a month. The idea behind the conference was to close the remaining reform schools in the state by placing a youth with a volunteer for a month while Department Youth Service staff, the volunteer and youth worked out a placement back in the youth's own community.

Currently JOE is again sending volunteers to work at the Westfield Detention Center. This move by JOE comes at a critical time as the facility is again overcrowded. This means the staff has all it can do to maintain control in the building with no time to provide alternative activities for the kids. This is where the volunteer becomes extremely important.

A volunteer who can divert some youthful energy away from acting out on floor makes it easier for the staff at Westfield to keep the kids at Westfield. This should not be construed as a mechanism of control but one that allows kids to stay at the center instead of being sent east an hour and a half away from home.

Another aspect of JOE is the parole volunteer program that has been initiated by the Department of Youth Services. This is in the line with a philosophy of community based corrections which has been adopted by DYS. The point to be made here is that while Massachusetts may be nearly last in expenditures for higher eduation it is leading the nation in taking new approaches in dealing with delinquency.

Westover Discussions Tonight

By GILBERT J. SALK

The current legal status of the more than 1200 people who were arrested at Westover AFB last spring and who entered not guilty pleas will be one of the major topics of discussion at "Westover Revisited?" Thursday night at 7:00 in 163 CC.

For those who aren't familiar with last spring's action, more than 1400 people were arrested during a six-week period of daily nonviolent civil disobedience at the Chicopee, Mass. air force base. The demonstrations were the longest-sustained protest of the mining of Haiphong Harbor, and resulted in more arrests than in the rest of the country combined, without a single incidence of violence on the part of either the demonstrators or the police.

"Westover Revisted?" will also feature a 15-minute film of the demonstrations made by Ting Barrow of Smith College. The film shows some of the highlights of the demonstrations and illustrates the concerted efforts made to preserve the nonviolent nature of the action.

The major portion of "Westover Revisted?" will be devoted to an open discussion of future anti-war/propeace activities. Some of the expected questions to be considered: Should actions at Westover continue? If so, in what form? If not, what alternative action is possible? Is McGovern the answer- -or one of a number of answers- -or no answer at all? What is the current status, and the future, of the local anti-war movement?

All who are concerned about any of these, or related, questions, or about their legal status, are invited to attend.

"Westover Revisited?" is being co-ordinated on campus by the Peace Action Task Force of the United Christian Foundation as part of a 5-College series of programs.

We invited a few friends for dinner and they helped clean up the Genesee River.

With the aid of a few thousand pounds of microorganisms, we're helping to solve the water pollution problem in Rochester. Maybe the solution can help others.

What we did was to combine two processes in a way that gives us one of the most efficient water-purifying systems private industry has ever developed.

One process is called "activated sludge," developed by man to accelerate nature's microorganism adsorption. What this means is that for the majority of wastes man can produce, there is an organism waiting somewhere that will happily assimilate it. And thrive on it.

The breakthrough came when Kodak scientists found a way to combine the activated sludge process with a trickling filter process and optimized the combination.

We tested our system in a pilot plant for five years. (At Kodak, we were working on environmental improvement long before it made headlines.) And the pilot project worked so well, we built a ten-million-dollar plant that can purify 36-million gallons of water a day.

Governor Rockefeller called this "the biggest voluntary project undertaken by private industry in support of New York State's pure-water program."

Why did we do it? Partly because we're in business to make a profit—and clean water is vital to our business. But in furthering our own needs, we have helped further society's. And our business depends on society.

We hope our efforts to cope with water pollution will inspire others to do the same. And, we'd be happy to share our water-purifying information with them. We all need clean water. So we all have to work together.

More than a business.

It was a rough day at seas for these people who attempted to blockade the U.S.S. Enterprise. The Coast Guard tried to deter their efforts by using both helicopters to churn up waters, and Coast Guard cutters to capsize boats. (LNS)

Small Crafts Try To Block Enterprise

BERKELEY, Calif. (LNS) — Forty-one people in 20 small boats made a spirited attempt to symbolically blockade the USS Enterprise, the world's largest warship, as it departed from the San Francisco Bay on September

Most of the blockaders ended up in the polluted waters of the Bay as their fleet of canoes, kayaks, and rowboats were either capsized by Coast Guard boats or swamped by a Navy helicopter which hovered overhead.

Thirty people were "detained" at the Alameda Naval Air Station (NAS) and were indefinitely barred from the NAS for their part in what has come to be known as the Battle of Alameda Lagoon. A violation of the bar notice could mean up to 6 months in jail and/or a $500 fine.

The non-violent "battle" was part of a nationwide movement called "People's Blockade" which is sponsored by the American Friends Service Committee. People's Blockade of arms or ships bound for the war in Indochina have occurred at most major munitions depots or Naval Air Stations around the country. Locally, the blockade involved people of all ages and backgrounds, including people from many local radical and anti-war groups.

Six days before the People's Blockade of the Enterprise, three women wearing T-shirts saying "Free the Enterprise 5,000", "Bread Not Bombs", and "Stop the Enterprise for a Human Being", handcuffed themselves to the Enterprise's main gangplank. The women all work with a Palo-Alto-based group called Bread Not Bombs, which is working to send reparations to the Indochinese people.

After 10 minutes, the women were cut from the railings, and were escorted, still handcuffed, to the Naval security office, amidst cheers of support from about 100 men aboard the Enterprise.

On leaving the base one sailor greeted the women and told them, "We support and appreciate what you've done here today." The three women were barred from all West Coast Naval Stations for one year and one woman had her photographer's privilege card suspended.

The People's Blockaders of the Enterprise never actually expected to stop the monstrous warship, though they made a very determined attempt. And indeed, the fifty-of-a-mile long attack carrier sailed on schedule.

But the action was regarded as a great success. The purpose of the blockade from the outset was to make the continuing war more visible to the American public and to show strong support for the sailor's Stop Our Ship (SOS) movement on board the Big E. The attack carrier certainy did not slip silently out of the Bay, as the Navy and Nixon would have liked. The blockade made the Enterprise's hasty departure from the Bay a top news story on all local T.V. stations with some dramatic film accounts. It was front page on most local papers.

Word about the nature and purpose of the blockade was spread well beforehand on the warship by sailors in the SOS movement and by a week of daily leafletting about the blockade at the Naval Air Station.

In the sea, the blockade took on two phases. The first was the actual blockade by the 20 small boats. The second phase was a seagoing picket by larger crafts with huge signs opposing the war and supporting the sailors plastered on their sides or sails.

Twenty-eight boats were organized for the picket, which was to take place at the Naval Air Station channel and underneath the Golden Gate Bridge. However, due to Coast Guard harrassment, the number of the picket crafts was severely limited. The Coast Guard scared many boat owners out of the water by telling them that much of the Bay was restricted waters until the Enterprise left.

Italian Gays Call Big Meeting

SAN FRANCISCO (LNS) — A "Trial of Male Society" will be held at an international congress of gay revolutionary movements and women's liberation movements in Milan, Italy, on October 15.

The congress is being called by members of Fuoril, a collective that publishes a radical gay newspaper in Turin, northern Italy's prime industrial city.

The group, which calls itself the "United Italian Revolutionary Homosexual Front", is asking gay and women's groups from around the world to send literature, drawings, photographs, and tape recordings for an exposition to "establish common activities and future exchanges."

"Our common fight is against the hateful and despotic patriarchal civilization. We have to strengthen our alliances and reinforce our union," the collective states. "Women, and gays of both sexes, are oppressed, repressed, and persecuted by the same enemy, which is the structure of male society."

Fuori!, one of Italy's first visible gay revolutionary groups, expects congress participants to include representatives of gay liberation groups and feminist organizations from a number of European countries, and possibly some from the Americas. One of the largest contingents will probably come from France where the Front Homosexuel d'Action Revolutionaire celebrated its birth over a year ago with a raid on a radtio station that was' airing a condescending panel show on the "homosexual problem".

The Fuori! newspaper first appeared this past summer and shocked the guardians of public morality in Church-dominated Italy, where even women's groups were unknown a few years ago.

In an article published in Socialist Revolution, a West Coast radical journal, Carl Boggs, explained some of the reasons why:

"The family, and with a very traditional conception of women, is still the most sacred institution in Italian society," he wrote. "An extremely powerful force underlying this resistance to change is Catholicism, which in a multitude of ways obstructs any genuine transformation of social relations."

Because the Church has been the most powerful arbiter of "public opinion" in Italy, the feminist movement which has sprung up there in the last two years is without precedent and faces a deeply entrenched

Because the Church has been the most powerful arbiter of "public opinion" in Italy, the feminist movement which has sprung up there in the last two years is without precedent and faces a deeply entrenched adversary.

After the Italian parliament passed a bill legalizing divorce for couples willing to brave excommunication from the Church, the Pope fought back with a popular referendum, as yet unsuccessful, to reinstate "the sanctity of the Christian family".

The Pope's efforts, similar to those waged by Church against New York's liberal abortion law in the United States, enraged enough women to set off Italy's first autonomous women's movement.

Since then, dozens of feminist groups have formed. So far, most of the recruits are university-educated, upper-middle class women but the movement continues to grow. It is also seeking to broaden its base.

The Movimento di Lotta Femminile (Women's Struggle Movement) in Padua has published an eloquent manifesto, declaring that "housework is the only slave labor that still exists within capitalist society." The manifesto calls for immediate emancipation from "the ghetto of the home."

Noting that most Italian women are employed only in the home, the Padua activists have chosen to emphasize the struggle of housewives on a neighborhood-by-neighborhood basis. Their program calls for "women's work" to be shared equally by men and women, and in some cases, to be taken over by community-controled public services paid for by local government. These demands, they insist, must be "immediately inserted in the revolutionary process."

But Italy's left has been no quicker than any other country's in recognizing the importance of "inserting" feminism in the revolutionary process.

In February 1972, women's groups from Milan and Trento convened a National Women's Liberation Conference to gain public exposure for their views. Radical feminists who attended the conference reported a "cold, elitist milieu dominated by male 'experts' and representatives of the old left," according to Boggs.

Since then, increasing numbers of Italian feminists have sought independence from the male-dominated left and many have joined all-female consciousness-raising groups.

And now the Italian left is facing a new challenge from anti-sexist forces: the public appearance of gay radicals.

Fuori's first issue reports a "gay zap" against a "fascist psychiatric congress in San Remo", and includes an Italian translation of Marth Shelley's well-known article, "Gay is Good". The headline reads: "Attention, heterosexuals! The homosexual liberation front has arrived."

Testing For Food Additives Questioned

WASHINGTON (LNS) — Recent hearings before the Senate Select Subcommittee on Nutrition and Human Needs have once again raised the issue of complicity between the Food and Drug Administration (FDA), the National Academy of Science (NAS) and the food industry. And, once again it appears that the Nixon administration has cast its lot with industry--even in the face of widespread public opposition.

During the hearings, Dr. Charles Edwards, Commissioner of Food and Drugs proposed that Congress amend legislation which bans the use of any additive thought to be cancer-producing. Edwards asked that the 1958 Delaney Amendment in question be "loosened" to provide more flexibility for the food industry. He said that strict interpretation would force the eventual withdrawal of many chemicals commonly added to foods, if not the foods themselves. It was under the authority of the Delaney Amendment, for instance, that cyclamates were banned from diet products in 1969.

Edwards' position, as spokesman for the Nixon administration, is heartily endorsed by the major food producing organizations like those represented by the Grocery Manufacturers of America, as well as major food processors like Kraftco, Gerber and Beechnut (baby foods) and Underwood Co.

During the testimony it was revealed that FDA relies heavily on advice from the National Academy of Science in judging the safety of additives. But this relationship was brought into question by several witnesses. Dr. Samuel Epstein, a professor of Environmental Health at Case Western Reserve University charged that "anyone can buy the data to support his case."

He went on to assert that the NAS Food Protection Committee (the one which rules on things like additives and advises the FDA) is "supported strongly by grants from the food, chemical and packaging industries." Epstein's charge was substantiated by the revelation that two members of a seven-member NAS panel (including the Chairman, Dr. Lloyd Filer Jr.) investigating the use of MSG had received research funds from Gerber Foods Inc. which uses MSG in nearly all its baby foods. A third member of the panel actually testified in behalf of the Grocery Manufacturers of America during the hearings.

This evidence was provided by Dr. John Olney of Washington University who added that the NAS committee was composed of "individuals whose credentials are in science but whose loyalties are with industry."

Even Edwards was forced to admit the validity of the charges in a roundabout way: he acknowledged that the FDA had difficulty putting together scientific panels because so many people couldn't be used for fear of potential conflicts of interest.

These revelations won't be news to anyone who has been struggling to limit the number of chemicals in the food they eat (did you know that an average American hot dog is 4% chemical additives?) but apparently it shocked some senators.

Sen. Charles Percy said, "Here we have the same person acting as both judge and jury" and he asked plaintively "Aren't there enough scientists in America so we can avoid this situation?" He went on to urge the National Academy of Science to adopt a new code of ethics which would avoid these conflicts of interest.

There is also a bill, sponsored by Sen. Gaylord Nelson, which would require independent, third-party testing of all food products. Now it is possible for a manufacturer to either test his own product in his own laboratories or hire someone to do it for him. The results are then supposed to be submitted to the FDA.

Task Force Alpha Almost Omega

BANGKOK (LNS) - Task Force Alpha (TFA), the top secret, multi-million dollar computer center that controls the electronic battlefield in North Vietnam and on the Ho Chi Minh Trail, is phasing down operations and will be run by a skeleton staff by December 31, according to sources close to TFA. The sources cite a low-performance, high cost record as the reason for cutting back the program.

Departments within Task Force Alpha are drafting phase-out contingency plans to be submitted to the Air Force for approval. The sources report frequent staff meetings and inter-agency memos pertaining to the closedown.

Probably the most heavily fortified American installation in Thailand, TFA stands in an isolated section of Nakhon Phanom airbase nine miles from the Laotian border in northeast Thailand. The program, known as Operation Igloo White, has been under fire from critics both inside and outside the military as being "ineffective" and "too costly" since it began operating in late 1967.

The crowning blow apparently came when a ranking Air Force general visiting the base dropped into the control room from which targets are plotted. He asked the airman in charge how many targets he had. Three, was the answer. The general became very perturbed, but the airman replied that three targets made a good day. There had been no targets at all the day before.

Task Force Alpha is reportedly manned by about 250 officers and 180 enlisted men. The computer collects, analyzes and stores away information radioed in from the thousands of electronic sensors that American planes have dropped along the Ho Chi Minh Trail both in Laos and North Vietnam.

Some of these sensors "smell" ammonia in urine, some are sensitive to seismic vibrations caused by motor vehicles, some pick up electronic static generated by vehicle engines. Others "hear" random noises through microphones. Some of them hang in trees, while other projectile-shaped sensors bury themselves in the ground leaving only a camouflaged antenna exposed.

The sensors are dropped in sequence along suspected supply routes and at random throughout unfamiliar areas. Increasingly over the last year more sensors have been dropped into North Vietnam, rather than along the Ho Chi Minh Trail, apparently in an effort to strike at the source of supplies.

The sensors remain dormant until activated from TFA or until a strong noise, smell or vibration, depending on the type of sensor, turns them on. Their signals are picked up by relay planes overhead in most cases a single-seater QU-22 from Nakhon Phanom, which amplify the signals before sending them back to TFA. There it is transformed into language that the computer can understand, reported to the monitors, and stored away.

Where sensors have been dropped in sequence along a trail, motor vehicles will activate the sensors one after another. With the help of the computer, analysts try to determine the number of vehicles, their approximate speed and course, and their guess as to where the target will be in thirty minutes, the length of time it takes war planes to get to the target.

Task Force Alpha has also been used to plot the positions of anti-aircraft artillery and SAM missile sites. Sources say that three months ago CIA personnel moved into a trailer in the TFA complex and began making undisclosed use of the facilities.

TFA was a major experiment in U.S. war technology. In an attempt to computerize a mountainous battlefield, the U.S. reportedly spent close to a billion dollars over a three-year period. But from the beginning things were going wrong with Task Force Alpha.

During the first year a major problem was that the computer was receiving too much information to analyze. Information from sensors had to be utilized immediately to be valuable.

The exact location of the sensors was a problem, too; because they are normally dropped by jets flying hundreds of miles an hour, only approximate coordinates can be taken for their position. This problem is compounded, the sources say, by the sensors' inability to determine the direction from which a sound of vibration is coming. The combination of the two factors can throw off a computer's estimate of a target's position by hundreds of yards.

In addition, many sensors simply failed to activate and, of course, could never be repaired. Indeed, much of TFA's equipment is so sophisticated and delicate that it is difficult to keep it in running condition.

The liberation forces caught on to the sensor program quickly and removed and destroyed many of them. Others were left in place and deliberately fed false information: buckets of urine were hung from trees, a single truck would be driven back and forth scores of times.

Operations at TFA have already been slowed down. Sources say that from 9 pm to 3 am the sensors report not to the main computer but to a less sophisticated system which records their findings on a moving roll of paper. The number of computer operators and analysts have also decreased markedly.

Alleged Gas Marketing Monopoly Faces Suit

WASHINGTON (AP)-The National Association of Attorneys General probably will file suit into alleged monopoly practices in gasoline marketing because the federal government doesn't appear likely to do it, Connecticut Atty. Gen. Robert K. Killian said Monday.

Killian, head of the association's gasoline price investigation subcommittee, made his comments after members of the panel met here with representatives of the Justice Department and the Federal Trade Commission.

He said the federal officials offered cooperation but indicated they would not move against the major gasoline companies over alleged price-fixing.

Killian said the committee will meet again Nov. 13 and "hopefully as a result of that, we will be in a position to announce a multi-district antitrust litigation being brought by the National Association of Attorneys General or as many attorneys general as we can muster."

He said he would meet Tuesday with representatives of the University of Connecticut Law School in an effort to get the school's clinic to handle the antitrust suit as a project this year.

Killian's subcommittee was established last June when the association voted to launch a joint nationwide investigation of the pricing and marketing policies of the major national companies.

"There isn't anyone in the country, with the exception of the oil companies themselves, who can tell you how much it costs to produce a tank of gas," Killian told newsmen. "There is absolutely no one, the federal government, no one.

"I don't know if prices are too high. But I know one thing, when a price moves 20 per cent in 24 hours, it is not a natural market."

He said prices in Connecticut were raised simultaneously last November by nine cents and have subsequently been hiked even further.

"What we have at stake is whether the consumers of Connecticut will have to pay 41 or 45 cents for gasoline that a few months ago was 10 cents cheaper," he said.

"We hope that at long last the consumer will understand what goes into making a tank of gasoline, what goes into the selling of a tank of gasoline and what it costs to advertise the tank of gasoline," he said.

He Missed Football So He Came Back

He spent 12 years coaching collegiate football before deciding to move on to the administrative field. But one year behind the desk was enough to convince Bob Lord that his retirement from football was premature.

So Lord has since entered the coaching ranks again. UMass, naturally, is glad that he is back. Head Coach Dick MacPherson echoes his staff's sentiment of the new assistant, one of two coaching additions to the team this year.

"Bob Lord left football two years ago to become an administrator. He found that he missed football coaching and the direct contact with young athletes. He's had great coaching experience, both as a head coach and as an assistant on some top staffs.

"I'm sure that he'll make us a better football team. Bob is a gentleman, a fine teacher, and an excellent example for young men to follow."

Lord comes to UMass with past experience on coaching staffs at Wesleyan, Wake Forest, and Appalachian State Universities. In addition, he has held head coaching jobs at North Park College and MacAlester College.

The new grid assistant was a standout performer at Colorado State University where he was feted with all-conference honors for three years. He was a running back and a safety.

"They were tougher than a whalebone," recalls Lord of his almamater. "We weren't ranked nationally, but we had growing pains. We were an average football team on the way up."

Lord will direct the offensive line this fall, and he finds his task hardly less difficult than instructing any other team unit.

"It's one of the toughest positions to teach and learn. To drive your head into the hole and coordinate it with timing, power, and finesse is a real challenge."

Unlike many coaches who like to reminisce anecdotes and their finer moments in football, Lord's fondest memories of the game center around the rewards that coaching reaps.

Bob Lord

"As I've gone through football, the best time is when the young men that you've coached return to campus to pay you a visit, send you a Christmas card, deliver news of marriage, or share with you their happiness of becoming a father. These are some of the rewards that coaching doesn't turn up in a pay envelope.

"I was out of football a year and I'm so pleased to get back into it with a long time friend in Dick MacPherson. I have gladly returned to my first love, coaching football and young men."

The typical day for Lord and most any other UMass coach begins at seven in the morning and doesn't get through until about 10:30 in the evening.

His daily chores consist primarily of film analysis (four to five hours). He'll give each film he reviews a thorough breakdown, grading it and charting statistics.

Besides the frequent coaches' meetings throughout the day, Lord will meet with the offensive line prior to an assembly of the entire team. Next comes practice. And later in the evening, more meetings follow.

It's a busy schedule indeed. But Lord assesses it as necessary in order to mold a successful unit. As a new assistant coach he expects nothing short of a winner this fall.

"I didn't say it, but to coin a phrase by the great Vince Lombardi, 'Winning is the only thing'. Now, I don't fully agree with that. But my attitude is such that losing doesn't accomplish much at all.

"I don't think that losing builds character. I think that you can develop character with a winning program. Because when you're winning, you're more able to relate to your people on a positive level.

"And when you're talking on a positive plane, people are more apt to listen to criticism and advice. I'd say a winning football team is one of the cheapest publicities a school can have."

Mike Vespoli - Olympic Veteran

By FRANK ANTOSIEWICZ

About a week ago, another grad student arrived on campus, returning from a jaunt in Europe. Mike Vespoli appeared amid the confusion of a new semester to take over the reigns of the Crew team.

What sets Mike apart from the others, is that he participated in a new innovation in the determination of representatives for the U.S. Olympic Rowing Team. Until December, 1971, the best shell would be picked as the U.S. delegate. The idea that a crew had to spend a great deal of time together on the water in order to succeed had been the major premise. At this time, a new school of thought arose to confront that view. "Why not pick the best rowers individually?" someone asked. So, that is what happened last December, as the United States was divided into six regional areas and a committee formed to decide who to invite to the tryouts.

Over four hundred oarsmen were asked to take part in tests designed to measure strength and endurance. Based upon their scoring, 75 were invited to spend a weekend in May rowing in Connecticut. Then it was narrowed to 25. While this happened in the East, the number narrowed to 20 from the West.

On June 9, the 45 oarsmen arrived at a rowing camp at Dartmouth. During five weeks of intensive testing and competition, the number was whittled to 16. Mike Vespoli, who survived all the cuts, said, "There was great difficulty in eliminating people, since there are so many good rowers. Also there was a great deal of tension for such a long period of time. You never knew whether you would survive the next cut."

For five weeks, the oarsmen rowed twice a day, while also undergoing tests for their physiological make-up. The ergometer, a device which measures work output; blood tests, to test the amount of lactic acid to measure fatigue; and seat racing, a method isolating individual performance in a race; determined the fine line between competing oarsmen.

By the second week of July, Harry Parker, the Olympic coach, picked the sixteen members of the US team. Next, Vespoli said, "We strove to become as fast as we could as a unit." The pressure of being first to try the new method was always in the backs of their minds.

After only three weeks together, the Olympic team entered the German International Regatta, a little nervous, not knowing what to expect in their first race together. The eight man won, while the four man finished third. Vespoli said, "It gave us the confidence, as we knew we had the speed. The successes of that regatta set the tone for the remaininit weeks."

Following this, they went to Rottsburg, Germany, training on the home course of the West Germans for two weeks. On August 5, they raced against New Zealand. The four man shell which included Mike, sprinted the last 100 meters for the win, while the eight man shell trailed New Zealand by two seconds.

Next, came high altitude training in San Monitz, Switzerland. The reason behind this, Vespoli attributed to increasing the oxygen intake. Also it was a change of scenery.

They came down to Munich at the last possible moment to maximize the benefit of the training. Three heats were run on a Sunday morning for the four man shell. They did not qualify for the semi-finals in this heat, but in the reprecharge they clinched one of the three remaining spots by edging Canada. In the semi-finals, they finished third behind East Germany and Russia. So, they went into the finals racing against five shells which had already beaten them. On a slow course, in front of a multitude of 40,000 people crowding the shoreline, they sprinted past New Zealand for fifth place, about four and a half seconds away from a bronze medal. West Germany won the gold.

The eight had won the silver medal in their race, so the new method seemed to have produced a competitive alternative. Since the 1968 Olympics, no U.S. shell had won a medal in international competition. Now, at least the shells could give the others a good race. Also, oarsmen on weak boats have something to strive for, as the Olympians will now be picked according to ability, instead of who they row for.

Namath Grabs Weekly Honors

NEW YORK (AP) - "Anywhere is Joe's one", the newapaper headline read. And anywhere that Joe threw, it was usually long-and for a touchdown.

"I know it sounds dumb," Joe Namath said after he tossed an incredible 496 yards worth of passes and clocked for six touchdowns Sunday to lead the New York Jets to a 44-34 victory over Baltimore, "but I've had better days throwing the ball."

Maybe so, but Namath's explosive performance-four of his touchdown passes went for 65 yards or more-was more than enough to gain him the runaway selection Tuesday as the National Football League's Offensive Player of the Week.

The Namath show outshone fine work by two other nominees, Washington's Larry Brown and Buffalo's O.J. Simpson.

Brown, rushing for 148 yards on 26 carries to pave the way to Washington's 24-10 victory over St. Louis, became the Redskins' all-time ground-gainer with 3,214 yards. And Simpson ripped through the San Francisco defense for 138 yards on 29 rushes to help the Bills upset the 49ers 27-20.

Since the full-fledged arrival of the zone defense, Monday morning quarterbacks insist, Sunday's quarterbacks aren't supposed to throw long. The interceptions will kill you, they say. Stick to the short passing game, they say.

So here's what Namath did.

In the first quarter he unlimbered his arm with a 65-yard scoring pass to Eddie Bell. In the second quarter he unloaded a 67-yard touchdown strike to John Riggins, a 28-yarder to Don Maynard and a mere 10-yarder to Richard Caster.

Then, after a touchdown-less third period, the Namath-to-Caster tandem returned with lightning suddenness for scoring strikes covering 79 and 80 yards.

Colts Coach Don McCafferty called Namath's work "fantastic. Sometimes he picked us apart and sometimes he just threw. There's no way you can adjust to a quarterback like that.

USC No. 1

NEW YORK (AP) - Southern California, Oklahoma and Colorado continued to run 1-2-3 Tuesday in The Associated Press college football poll, while Michigan, Notre Dame and Nebraska showed the biggest gains.

Southern Cal, which replaced preseason choice Nebraska at the top in the first regular season poll, received 28 first-place votes and 940 points from a nationwide panel of sports writers and broadcasters following a 55-20 victory over Illinois.

Oklahoma, which routed Oregon 68-3, received 14 first place votes and 894 points to five first-place votes and 728 points for Colorado, a 38-6 winner over Minnesota.

Tennessee whipped Wake Forest 45-6 and jumped from fifth place to fourth, while idle Ohio State slipped from fourth to fifth. Alabama trounced Kentucky 35-0 and rose one spot to sixth while defending champ Nebraska climbed from ninth to seventh after a 77-7 trampling of Army.

Duds Give No Speed

WASHINGTON (AP) - Outfielder Lou Brock of the St. Louis Cardinals won't be telling the nation's kids over television anymore that he gets his base-stealing speed by eating the candy, Holloway Milk Duds.

Beatrice Foods Co. of Chicago has been prohibited from using deceptive endorsements by athletes and athletic organizations for any of its bakery or confectionery products under terms of a consent order provisionally accepted by the Federal Trade Commission, it was announced today.

The FTC's complaint alleges that Beatrice's advertising creates the false impression that eating candies such as Holloway Milk Duds is necessary to instill, improve and maintain athletic ability and performance.

The complaint also says the ads create the false impression that such a product is endorsed for use by athletes and their organizations, for any of its bakery or confectionery products under terms of a consent order provisionally accepted by the Federal Trade Commission, it was announced today.

Foster Retains Title

LONDON (AP) - Bob Foster knocked out Chris Finnegan with a smashing left and right to the head in the 14th round of a slugging match for Foster's world light heavyweight championship Tuesday night.

The 33-year-old American had begun to look tired when he suddenly ended the fight at 55 seconds of the next-to-last round.

Finnegan went down on his back, and the Britain never looked like he would beat the 10-count.

"Finnegan is the toughest boxer I have met since I became champion," said Foster, who lives in Albuquerque, N.M.

Foster weighed 174-1/4 pounds to 173-3/4 for Finnegan. The class limit is 175.

The Associated Press scorecard gave Foster the first, fourth, eighth, 10th, 11th and 13th rounds, with Finnegan taking the second, fifth, seventh and ninth and 12th. The third and 6th were scored even.

"I sure will give him another go at the title and I'm going to try for more money next time," said Foster.

"Now I'm going to bed-for a long time."

Finnegan said: "I'm tired, thoroughly tired, but I'm ready for the return when he is ready."

Kiah, Coburn Lead Booters Over BC

By DOUG FIDLER

BOSTON--Tom Coburn scored both goals to lead the UMass soccer team to a season-opening 2-0 victory over the Boston College Eagles at Alumni Field last night.

Coburn tallied at 15:05 of the first period when he deflected a cross-pass from Dean Lungu past BC goalie Writer D'Elia.

The Eagles put pressure on the UMass defense in order to tie the game. Jeff Lewin ripped a shot past UMass goaltender John Kiah, only to have the score called back on an offside penalty.

In the second half the Redmond-men kept the ball confined in the Eagle end of the field, just missing on several scoring attempts. They were finally rewarded for their efforts when Coburn smashed a cross-pass from Mike Nugent into the lower left-hand corner.

D'Elia saved 18 shots, while Kiah turned away 12 Eagle offerings. UMass outshot BX 23-14 for the evening. Coach Gerry Redmond was pleased with the initial win. "Considering it was the first time we played on astroturf, and under the floodlights, we played very well indeed," he commented.

"Coburn was outstanding for us, and Kiah in goal was his usual steady self on defense. Bob Merrill, Todd Buck, Dave Oullette and Kurt Syer played very soundly and freshman Gary McKenna came on for us in the second half."

Redmond also added that the play of Mark Tyma, Mike Nugent, Ed Doherty, Vinnie Granonico, and Steve Sarmanti was excellent at halfback. Freshman Luiz Ambar played several minutes in the second period and filled in well.

Tony King, Jeff Hague, Jim Vollinger, Lungu and Coburn all kept pressure on D'Elia throughout the game.

UMass will open its 1972 home season this Saturday morning against Yankee Conference opponent Maine. Game time is 10 A.M.

Canada Dumps Soviets; Series Now Tied

MOSCOW (AP) — Paul Henderson scored a goal with 2:06 left to give Team Canada a 4-3 victory over the Soviet Union Tuesay night and even the eight-game hockey series.

Each team now has won three games and lost three. One game was tied.

With the score tied 3-3 and both teams shorthanded, Toronto's Henderson took the puck into his own zone and pushed it between a pair of Russian defenders. He circled left, picked up the puck and drove it past goalie Vladislav Tretyak for the winning tally as nearly 3,000 Canadian fans in the crowd of 15,000 cheered wildly.

Canada opened the first period scoring when Phil Esposito of Boston got a pass to the right of the soviet goal, whirled and flipped it in.

Alex Yakushev tied it for the Soviets on a break when defenseman Brad Park fell. Gary Bergman tried in vain to cut off the charging Russian but Yakushev beat Tony Esposito of Chicago. With the Canadians shorthanded, Vladimir Petrov broke loose fown the right side, faked goalie Esposito off his feet and drilled the puck into the left side for a 2-1 Soviet lead.

A minute later Serge Savard of Montreal worked the puck free along the boards, centered it to Phil Esposito who fired in his second goal of the night to tie the score.

The second period was scoreless, although the Russians had an attacking advantage. Only the fine goal tending of Esposito saved the Canadians.

In the third minute of the final period, a hustling Rod Gilbert of New York took a pass behind the Soviet net from Jean Ratelle, also of New York, swung around the net, faked and backhanded it in to put the Canadians ahead 3-2.

The hard-charging Soviet team tied the score two minutes later on a power play with Bergman in the penalty box. Alexander Maltsev passed to Yakushev who scored for his second goal of the game.

With only 3:34 left in the game, Bergman tangled behind the Canadian net with Russian Mikhailov and both drew a major penalty.

After Esposito foiled a Soviet scoring attempt, the puck went out to set up Hendersonls Game-winning dash down the ice.

The final game is set for Thursday night.

Pennington-Quarterback Of The Future

By EARLE BARROLL

It's the Twentieth Century and like everything else quarterbacks are being stereotyped.

Coaches drool at the thought of a 6'5, 220 pound signal caller who can withstand the shock of onrushing linemen. They feel their aspirations growing when they spot a kid who can drill the ball through a brick wall from twenty paces.

The last two Heisman Trophy winners have been quarterbacks, Jim Plunkett from Stanford (6'4, 215) and Pat Sullivan of Auburn (6'3, 200). Former UMass Greg Landry of the Detroit Lions and all his 6'3 and 215 pounds are being exploited around the country as the quarterback of the future.

And it goes on and on.

Peil Pennington, the junior signal caller for UMass is such a stereotyped ballplayer. He is a quarterback of the future.

At 6'5 and 215 pounds he has the size. His broad shoulders and sinewy arms lend themselves to distance and smoke when it comes to throwing a football.

It's no wonder then that his mere presence conjures up memories of Landry when he was here at UMass. But Peil wants no part of this. As he says, he's his own man and for UMass football this is more than enough.

In Saturday's game with Maine, Peil was immense. In less than three quarters of playing time, the tall-angular quarterback completed 14 or 25 passes (three were dropped) for 228 yards.

People have been expecting this of him ever since he put on a UMass football uniform, but for Peil the trip has been a long and tough one. And he still has a ways to go.

As his backfield coach George Flood explains, "Peil had been away from the game of football for two years when he started at Maine last year. (UConn was involved in a touchy situation that kept Peil out for that period of time). And just because he was 6'5 and had speed and could run with the ball everyone was expecting him to go right in the excell right off the bat.

"But you have to remember that this was his first varsity college football competition in his life."

The season went on and then came Boston University when after a sensational first half (250 yards in the air) his right shoulder was nearly launched into Commonwealth Ave.

"That injury," says Flood "put him out of the next game and a half and since that time he's been coming on in every game. The Maine game over the weekend was only his fifth since that injury."

Pennington is a quiet guy. Flood calls him "humble". He says the things you like to hear from a quarterback. His shoulder and arm feel fine after the injury. He lauds his line and backfield mates.

But never Peil.

Flood takes care of that. "As a lot, quarterbacks usually put in a lot of time," he says. "Peil is no exception, but he may even be more concerned. He's a great student of the game on and off the field.

"He doesn't lack for dedication. He studies his films not only of past performances, but also of his future opposition. And in my memory he has never missed a practice outside of that major injury (shoulder separation) from the B.U. game."

What does a Peil Pennington mean to a team? Flood puts it simply, "He's an inspiration to his teammates because of his talents."

And that's a lot of inspiration.

Pappas Takes 10th Straight

MONTREAL (AP) - Billy Williams drove in three runs with a single and a home run and Milt Pappas won his 10th straight game with a four-hitter as the Chicago Cubs dumped the Montreal Expos 6-0 in National League baseball Tuesday night.

The Cubs got to Montreal starter Bill Stoneman, 11-14, for four runs in the third inning, breaking up a scoreless tie.

Pappas led off with a single and was sacrificed to second by Don Kessinger. Jose Cardenal then walked and Williams drove in Pappas with a base hit to right. Cardenal scored on Jim Hickman's sacrifice fly.

Ron Santo singled and Rick Monday walked to load the bases before Glenn Beckert's base hit to center scored Williams and Santo.

With two out and Kessinger on base in the fourth, Williams smashed a John Strohayer pitch over the right field fence for his 35th homer.

Scott Drops Sox Back

BOSTON (AP) - George Scott's two-run homer capped a three-run uprising in the eighth inning as the Milwaukee Brewers beat Boston 6-4 Tuesday night and cut the Red Sox' lead to a half-game in the American League East.

The Red Sox remained in front of the Detroit Tigers, who were idle, and 2-1/2 games up on the Baltimore Orioles and New York Yankees, who were tied for third. The Orioles lost to the Cleveland Indians 3-2 Tuesday night while the Yankees did not play.

Brock Davis touched off the Brewers' winning rally in the eighth with a bunt single. Davis stole second and continued to third on a wild throw into center field by Boston catcher Carlton Fisk.

Davis scored on Ellie Rodriguez' sacrifice fly. Joe Lahoud then reached base when first baseman Carl Yastrzemski fumbled his ground ball and Scott followed with a home run into the center field bleachers at Fenway Park, No. 19 the year.

Rick Auerbach gave the Brewers an insurance run in the ninth with his second homer of the season.

The Red Sox scored four runs in the first two innings with the help of the long ball. Yastrzemski hit a two-run homer in the first and pitcher Marty Pattin added a two-run shot in the second.

Johnny Briggs gave the Brewers a run in the fifth with his 19th homer of the year and the Brewers scored their second run in the sixth when Ron Theolbald doubled, went to third on a wild pitch and scored on Rodriguez' single.

Fall Baseball Shifts Gears

Baseball coach Dick Bergquist said yesterday that, with the squad reduced to a workable number, the emphasis will shift from intra-squad scrimmaging to coaching and fundamentals.

About 65 of the original 98 candidates who turned out for the first day of practice remain. Bergquist has divided them into two groups which will become next year's varsity and J.V. squads. He anticipates making many changes in the two units according to what he sees on the field in the final three weeks of practice. About ten players will have to be dropped altogether when the two groups are finalized.

In addition to practice sessions, the fall schedule began on September 16th with a double-header sweep of Eastern Connecticut, 2-0 and 7-2. Mike Flanagan and Tom White combined to shut-out EConn in the opener, and Flanagan was also a stand-out in the second game, banging a three run homer.

Last Saturday they edged the Alumni in what Bergquist described as a "fun game." The Alumni line-up included seven members formerly or currently playing in major league organizations.

Two previously unknown Freshmen candidates have proven to be a pleasant surprise for Bergquist. They are John McManus of Norwood and Steve Winter of Taunton. McManus, returning to school after a military hitch, is a tall righthanded pitcher. Winter, who played last year at Coyle High, is an outfielder.

Infielder Billy MacDonald has been impressive among the returners. He led the J.V. squad last spring in batting. Co-captain Eddie McMahon has looked extremely sharp at shortstop a spot he played well enough last season to earn an All New England All-Star berth. Converted outfielder Ron Beaurivage has played well at first base and Flanagan has been outstanding on the mound. The two were teammates in high school two years ago in Manchester, N.H.

The upcoming schedule includes a home double-header this Saturday afternoon with Sienna College of Albany, N.Y. That will be followed by two twin-bills next weekend. Bergquist is pleased with this concentrated scheduling because it will allow him to give his entire pitching staff some work.

On a final note Bergquist credited Al Grenert and Brian Martin for their assistance in conducting the practice sessions. Grenert will be next season's J.V. coach. Martin, a graduate student, was one of last year's co-captain.

Olver, Barrus Speak Before Senate

By ROBERT L. SCHEIER

Both candidates for the Hampshire-Franklin senatorial district stressed their stands on education in a joint appearance last night before the final session of the current undergraduate student senate.

Republican John D. Barrus, the incumbent, said it was a "sad commentary" on higher education when a student would drop out of college because he felt there were no career openings for him.

Democratic John W. Olver, currently serving his second term as state representative from the second Hampshire District, said he had fought for funding of programs on all state college campuses, including CCEBS (Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black Students).

Barrus also said that both primary and secondary education "should be designed around the student. And not try to make the student fit the system."

Olver, a UMass professor on leave, said UMass had a vital part to play in the area's economic life, calling it the biggest employer in Western Massachusetts, with the exception of General Electric in Pittsfield.

Student senate elections will be held today, and the formal adjournment of the twenty-fourth session of the undergraduate senate will come next Tuesday.

In other action last night, the senate voted to pay approximately $800 of Orchard Hill residential area bills from the Area Grant contingency fund.

It also voted to recommend to the chancellor that all regularly scheduled classes on election day (November 7) be cancelled to allow students to vote.

In a question and answer period, Barrus said he was opposed to "all but therapeutic" abortions, while Olver sad he was in favor of leaving the abortion decision to the individual woman.

Barrus said he had voted against a measure forcing the city of Springfield to comply with the Racial Imbalance Law because he said the penalty for non-compliance would have only hurt school children.

"I would rather jail school committeemen than keep students from getting the special programs this money would pay for," he said.

Rep. Olver said his major areas of concern in the legislature would be continuing investigation of conditions at Monson State Hospital and the Belchertown State School, the lowering of the drinking age from 21 to 18, the environment, and University affairs.

In response to a question about the proposed graduated income tax, Barrus said it wouldn't reduce the tax burden on the middle class and might have an adverse effect on keeping industry in the state.

He said the state would be forced to generate new revenue from either the lower income classes, or from "the higher income people who might decide whether to take their industry out of the state or not."

Olver said tax reform and an economic recovery could ease the state's financial plight. He said the graduated income tax would be the first step in tax reform, and said he favored a lowering of the state property tax.

He also said the state needed a Commercial and Industrial Development Corporation to plan and provide for development by providing low-cost capital to companies locating in the state.

White House Denies Viet Peace Rumors

WASHINGTON (AP) - Presidential adviser Henry A. Kissinger returned Wednesday night from an unusual two-day secret meeting with North Vietnamese negotiators as the White House denied a story that a peace agreement had been reached.

"There's no substance to that particular story," Press Secretary Ronald L. Ziegler told reporters at the Western White House. He referred to a story by RKO Broadcast News that Kissinger's sessions in Paris had produced agreement on nearly all points for a Vietnam cease-fire.

Kissinger flew into Andrews Air Force Base near Washington and declined to talk with reporters about his meetings with Hanoi negotiators Le Duc Tho and Xuan Thuy. "I can't say anything," he responded to a question.

While he was en route from Paris, the New York stock market jumped 10 points in response to the RKO report by newsman Clifford Evans that a peace agreement had been reached in Paris.

Evans' story said that all issues had been resolved except the future of South Vietnamese President Nguyen Van Thieu. "That is expected to be resolved by the resignation of Thieu, who will be replaced by a three-party coalition government," Evans reported.

In California, Ziegler earlier had refused to discuss Evans' story saying the United States and North Vietnam had agreed not to comment on the substance of the discussions.

However, Ziegler denied a related report that Nixon had planned to go on national television Wednesday night to report an agreement.

Further, administration sources said there was no foundation to the reports that an agreement was reached during the longest of the 18 secret meetings Kissinger has had with the North Vietnamese.

The optimistic expressions that sparked the stock-market rally were fueled in part by the extension of the Kissinger meetings, which originally had been announced for only one day.

In addition, the White House itself caused some more speculation when it announced the secret meetings would go into a second day, by pointing to a Kissinger statement earlier this month that the North Vietnamese apparently were negotiating

Project 10 Eaters Fifth Year

By IMELDA ROJAK

Project 10 is entering its fifth year with an expanded academic program. Housed in Pierpont dormitory, the Project is an experiment in "living and learning."

On entering Pierpont's lobby, the first thing visible is a profusion of posters. Many announce course times and places, Project 10 meetings, freshmen surveys and colloquia. Signs advertise Zen photography, Zen music and Zen theater, courses and the Human Sexuality, and Bridge colloquia.

This year Project 10 has started an experimental academic program, which exempts fifty freshmen and ten sophomores from University core requirements. Each person accepted into the program was given an advisor. Together they make a study plan for the next three to five semesters. The student may wish to do anything from independent study to taking regular University courses. The plan is then approved or disapproved by a Project 10 faculty advisory board.

During the time a person is in the experimental program, he or she keeps a portfolio which includes comments from faculty and peers, grades from any graded on-campus courses taken, and any other record of achievement. The student also sees his advisor regularly.

People in the program are also required to take at least three modes of inquiry courses, one in each of the three academic divisions; science, social science, and the humanities. The purpose of the courses is to introduce to the student the way a problem is approached and solved in each field.

When the student and advisor feel they have completed the plan of study, the portfolio is turned over to the faculty advisory board. If the board accepts the portfolio, the student is then awarded 60 credits, equivalent to junior status.

A student in the program, Nancy Fitzgerald, commented that there are no specific number of courses to be taken.

"I have much more academic freedom than I would otherwise," she said. "I got so used to hasseling to get a course I wanted that I walked all over campus to add a certain course. I finally got the course when I remembered all I had to do was audit the course and do any outside work on my own."

The students were interviewed and chosen during freshman orientation. One of the people on the selection committee, Joanne Yaffe, said that the qualities that were sought after were "some sort of self-initiative and a tolerance for ambiguity."

The program will have a second half, but, according to Ms. Yaffe, "It's not clearly defined yet."

Some of the faculty in Pierpont teach elsewhere in the University, but this year the Project has three full time faculty members. Living in the dorm are Walter Gern who teaches English, Joan Chandler, who does Anthropology, and Klaus Shultz of the Physics department. There are also some undergraduates teaching under faculty supervision.

The Project 10 Handbook has a long list of resource people available to help Project 10 members. There are 11 faculty advisors, 13 teaching fellows, and 10 graduate residents. Then there are the resident fellows in charge of academic counseling, administration, media, peer sex education, social and cultural affairs. There's also a kitchen coordinator and treasurer, as well as the corridor counselors and government liasons (with the Southwest Assembly). Besides the Experimental Program, there are about 50 three credit courses offered by Project 10, many of which are in Pierpont. Some courses are sections of regular University courses. Some are special interest seminars; for example, "Death and Rebirth," "Experimental Living," and "Seminar in Sex Roles." The Project and Orchard Hill offer some classes jointly, such as "Law in a Radical Perspective" and "Marxism."

About 20 to thirty one credit colloquia are also offered. These may be taught by undergraduates with faculty supervision.

The success of the first year of the Experimental Academic program will probably determine the amount of people who will be admitted to it next year. But anyone in the dormitory and some who live elsewhere can take Project 10 courses, which have now been offered for five years.

Back In The Cow College Days

By BOB CALLAHAN

Ah, the good old days. Travel back in time, kiddies, to the days when this big university was a small cow college and our former Ombudsman Ellsworth Barnard was an undergraduate writing letters to the Massachusetts Collegian advocating changing the name of Massachusetts Agricultural College to Massachusetts State College.

The year was 1928 and the entering freshman class boasted 183 students. A member of the class of 28 nicknamed "Dutch" would later go down in history as being the first ombudsman of a place called the University of Massachusetts with an enrollment of 24,000 students.

Today being Student Senate Election day, let's travel back to the year 1928, when tug of wars were held at the campus pond, and see what our noble student governing body was like.

According to the Massachusetts Collegian, then a weekly comprising four pages, the Senate was "made up of men in whose intelligence, idealism and fairness the student body can place perfect trust."

In those days, only men were eligible for a seat in the senate and those choosing them were men; as well. Although women in the U.S. were granted the right to vote in 1921, the coeds of the small cow college were denied that right. In 1928, the age old question was brought up by John R. Kay of the class of 1929, "should co-eds vote for Senate members?" The resulting vote was strongly negative and would have a present day co-ed shouting, "male chauvinist pigs!"

Of the Senate, the Collegian of May 2, 1928 said, "Since the Senate is a legislative and executive, and not an honorary group, it represents as many varieties of interest, activity, and opinion as possible," in addition to the prior qualifications, mentioned above.

Most of those elected in that year would be described today as "jocks." Seventy percent, five of the seven elected, belonged to various athletic teams. The other two senators were Collegian editors.

Being elected to the Senate was termed, "one of the highest honors conferred upon Mass. Agricultural College undergraduates," by the Collegian in an editorial. They called for the student body to "elect a balanced senate, one in which every possible activity is represented."

As you can see, today's Senate has changed drastically from the days of Mass. Aggie. The increase in enrollment, has brought about a larger senate than the one of the days of "Dutch" Barnard. Eighty one seats are up for grabs, quite a difference compared to 1928. Thirty seven are running for 21 commuter seats, sixty seven are seeking 51 seats as representatives from dorms, frats and sororities and the newly created Third World delegation has 15 seats being sought by 16 candidates.

We've come a long way from the days of Mass. Aggie.

Kissinger made the statement after his trip to Moscow and Paris and in the wake of a new Viet Cong statement on its plan to establish a postwar government in Saigon.

Government officials said at the time that there was little new in the Viet Cong plan. And William Porter, the chief U.S. peace negotiator in Paris, stated publicly he saw nothing hopeful in the proposal.

In discussing the situation Wednesday, government sources said they knew of nothing to change that assessment, although they acknowledged Kissinger's decision to stay an extra day in Paris was at least interesting and possibly significant.

The two days of talks were cloaked in total secrecy. First word of the meeting came from a White House announcement Tuesday. The White House later said the meeting was being extended an additional day.

The extension of the meeting to two days roused a flurry of speculation here but there was no word from any knowledgeable source as to what may have been discussed or why an extra day was needed this time.

Speculation centered on the Viet Cong plan for a tripartite provisional government to replace the regime of President Nguyen Van Thieu in Saigon.

This has been the principal topic of the fruitless debate in the weekly, semipublic meeting of the four peace delegations.

The Americans and South Vietnamese have rejected the plan.

The Communists have insisted that unless the United States stops supporting Thieu, ceases its aerial attacks in North and South Vietnam and ends its mining of ports in the North, the war will go on.

The United States and South Vietnam have argued that the Communists are trying to win at the negotiating table what they have been unable to gain on the battlefield. They have called for an internationally supervised ceasefire throughout Indochina. President Nixon has declared that U.S. military action will go on until the ceasefire is begun and U.S. prisoners of war are released.

Observers were looking to the 161st plenary session of the peace talks Thursday for any indication of progress in the secret meetings.

Faculty Ponders Collective Bargaining

By ROBERT L. SCHEIER

UMass faculty could be unionizing and turning to collective bargaining in dealing with the administration, but it may take a long time and no one is sure just what form it will take.

That's the consensus of representatives of the three teacher's unions vying to represent the campus' 1500 faculty members in the event they unionize. They are the National Education Association (NEA), American Association of University Professors (AAUP), and the American Federation of Teachers (AFT).

The representatives also say that when and if the faculty unionizes, they would concentrate more on their say in university governance and working conditions rather than specific pay scales.

On another point--the possibility of a faculty trustee-the union representatives also agree. They don't want one.

Unionization would be a lengthy process because the union that will represent the faculty must be chosen in an election run by the state.

To request the election, a group must receive signatures of at least 30 per cent of the faculty, and to be named the bargaining unit must receive over 50 per cent of the vote.

And finally, the commission would have to hold hearings and decide exactly who would make up the bargaining unit--for instance, whether teaching assistants, librarians, etc. would be included, in the vote to choose an agent.

All of this could make it as much as two or three years before a bargaining agent is chosen from among the groups.

Of the three groups, the NEA, through its newly formed affiliate, the Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP) is the most active. It is also the only one to currently have a full-time representative working on the UMass campus. Dr. Dyril Solomons, a professor of physical chemistry who is a special consultant to the M.S.P.

He says the NEA provides the MSP, the local chapter, with legal advice, research services, and funds through its state chapter-the Massachusetts Teachers Association.

According to Dr. Solomons, the MSP was formed two months ago by 43 faculty members, but presently has no formal members because it has not started to collect dues yet.

He said the UMass-Amherst faculty is not that concerned about salary, but is more concerned with course loads, class size, curriculum and grading, and faculty say in the governing process.

If the union did negotiate over pay scales, he said, it would be to set certain minimum salary and fringe benefits, criterion rather than specific wage scales.

Currently, he said, each faculty member requests any salary hike above a certain minimum within his department.

He downplayed the importance of a faculty-trustee as a means of increasing faculty say in the university. The campus currently has a student trustee on the board.

The bargaining unit could serve just as well in representing the faculty before the trustees as a faculty trustee, he said, as well as being a spokesman for the faculty against the administration.

He said that while the resignation of Chancellor Oswald Tippo last fall (reportedly over a budget dispute with UMass president Robert C. Wood) had stirred some faculty fears, the "bread and butter" issue was money.

"There is the inflation problem on a world-wide level, and the money crunch is a problem," he said.

The AAUP chapter on campus currently has the largest enrollment of the three--about 300. Prof. Joseph D. Burroughs, head of the UMass AAUP chapter, says the association distributed preference forms to the faculty last spring.

He said about 25 per cent of the faculty have returned them so far, and of those about 50 per cent have indicated support of the AAUP, with 35 per cent preferred no collective bargaining unit yet.

"Faculty unionization is part of a nationwide trend and not really due to local factors," Burroughs said.

He also rejected the idea of a faculty trustee, adding a university-wide committee on university governance was working on proposals which he said would give the faculty at least as great a voice as a faculty trustee.

Prof. Henry G. Jacob, head of the AFT chapter at UMass also said the unionization was a nationwide trend, but added that the faculty were concerned about having a stronger voice in governance.

"The faculty-senate currently operates in only an advisory role, and often its recommendations are pigeonholed or lost. With collective bargaining, there would be a way to check up on them," he said.

He would not comment on the number of members the AFT has on campus, but said the group had been stronger before the school won fiscal autonomy in 1962.

Professor Stanley H. Young, currently head of the representation committee of the campus AAUP chapter, says many of the issues in unionization are professional instead of economic.

"Collective bargaining would negotiate issue by issue," he said. The governance problem, he said, was more an issue of how decisions are made than what those specific decisions are.

Prof. Burroughs, who was the faculty representative on the board of trustees last year, says he feels many of the faculty fears about erosion of the quality of the Amherst campus that arose after Chancellor Tippo's resignation have ebbed.

"I think there was a lack of communication last year," he said, "but I think that President Wood is trying his best to be even-handed."

Rep. Olver Urges Sargent To Act On Belchertown Conditions

By ROBERT MEDEIROS

NORTHAMPTON - State Rep. John W. Olver, D-Amherst, has urged Gov. Francis W. Sargent to take immediate action in correcting conditions at the Belchertown State School for the retarded.

The Democratic lawmaker said yesterday in a letter to the Republican governor that conditions "remain a disgrace" at the school despite two and one-half years of efforts by the Belchertown-Monson Investigating Commission.

The joint legislative commission stated in their March, 1971 report: "We are totally dissatisfied with the manner in which Belchertown is being administered. We are deeply impressed by the Department's (Mental Health) indifference to change."

Olver, who is a member of the commission, is attempting to unseat John Barrus, R--Goshen, for the state Senate seat in the Franklin-Hampshire District.

"The number of direct care staff alloted to Belchertown State School numbers only 50 per cent of that necessary to meet recommended American Association for Mental Deficiency standards," Olver stated.

He said the present 13 teachers cannot provide the type of education for 1,000 residents equal to that afforded by the public school system.

"The infirmary and nursery which house a large number of multiply handicapped have totally inadequate elevator facilities in violation of public health and safety standards." Olver continued, "No private institution would be allowed to operate under the named conditions."

Last February, a group of parents of Belchertown residents filed a class-action suit in federal court in Boston charging that the Department of Mental Health has been negligent in the care of residents of the school.

The Amherst Democrat said the return to community life of nearly a third of the residents of Belchertown in recent years has aggravated the need for direct care and personnel.

"Yet the recommendation of your Office of Administration and Finance," Olver wrote Sargent, "did not inlude the direct care workers and domestic aides requested by the state school when this year's budget was drafted."

"Project Pulse" To Seek Student Opinion

By BARBARA VOORHEES

"Students bitch about what happens on this campus after it happens. We hope to provide a service which can give an indication of student opinion before things happen" said Larry Benedict, Director of Project Pulse, newly founded student survey system, in an interview yesterday.

Project Pulse, now in its planning-testing stages, will hold it first survey, "Student Opinion on the post-registration course change system," within the next two weeks.

Student employees will poll 200-250 randomly (computer) selected students by telephone. Results will be analyzed through computer and scanner and a report made up. "We hope to develop a mail system also for those students without phones," said Benedict.

Any student, faculty member, or organization on campus can submit an issue for survey to Project Pulse. The issue will be discussed and its worthiness decided upon by the Pulse policy council, comprised of students, administrators and technical advisors.

The council will have control over the system. It's duty will be to insure the integrity of the project, insure the openness of the project and the public nature of the project. The Policy Council will determine which of the requests submitted to it will be acted upon and in what order. Finally the council has been charged with insuring that any data collected will be public and available to anyone needing or desiring it.

"There are three criteria for an issue," said Bendict. "Its applicability, its usefulness and its timeliness." All survey results will be given to the MDC and copies can be obtained by anyone at the Project Pulse office, 231 Whitmore.

The Modular Course on Public Alternative Schools sponsored by the National Alternative Schools Program will hold its first session on Tuesday morning, October 3. See Phil DeTurk or Roy Nichols today or tomorrow in Rm 227 (School of Ed) for room number and information. The session on Tuesday, October 3, will feature Bob Mackin, Newt Clark, and Roy Nichols in "Three Teachers in Search of A School."

The "Westover Revisited" meeting will be held tonight at 7:00 in Campus Center Room 163, not last night as was erroneously reported in yesterday's Collegian.

POWs Refuse Government Ride Home

MOSCOW (AP)-Three U.S. airmen freed by North Vietnam turned down an American government offer Wednesday of a bed for the night, medical attention and transport home.

They told U.S. Charge d'Affaires Adolph Dubs during a tense 20-minute confrontation at the Moscow airport that they wanted to go home with the escort of antiwar activists who arranged their release.

Lts. Mark Gartley and Norris Charles of the Navy and Maj. Edward Elias of the Air Force reached Moscow late Wednesday on a long flight from Peking. They were released from a POW camp Sept. 17 with the understanding they would take civilian aircraft to America.

Gartley told Dubs, "We'd better proceed in this way for the safe release of the other POWs."

Elias added, "I feel the same way, and I don't want to jeopardize the guys we left behind. If we don't carry out our plans, we'll be failing in respect to those we left behind."

The pilots and their accompaniment of antiwar advocates were scheduled to leave Moscow for New York on Thursday morning with a stopover in Copenhagen, Denmark.

When the pilots arrived and were led through a service entrance into the airport customs hall it appeared doubtful Dubs would even have a chance to extend the government's offer of help.

Blocking his way were David Dellinger, the Rev. William Sloane Coffin and Richard Falk, of the Committee of Liaison with Families of Prisoners detained in North Vietnam.

In an unlighted corner behind them, Cora Weiss, another committee member, shielded the pilots who stood bewildered in the swirl of newsmen, customs officials and curious passengers in transit.

After some discussion it was decided to arrange the meeting in an Aeroflot office at the terminal.

Aeroflot is the Soviet airline.

Dubs told them he would make the ambassador's residence available to them for the night, said the embassy doctor was on hand to treat them if needed, and said an Air Force medical evacuation plane would be ready in Copenhagen to fly them to New York.

Each man in turn refused. They said they would spend the night in a Moscow hotel, were in good health and preferred to fly home on commercial aircraft.

Afterward, at an impromptu news conference, the escort delegation said they considered Dubs' behavior "threatening."

Asked to explain, Coffin said Dubs had "strongly recommended they take the medivac plane from Copenhagen."

Did Dubs threaten the pilots?

"No, not actually," Coffin said.

"They don't understand anything," Coffin added hastily, apparently referring to the American diplomatic corps.

Mrs. George Ann Fulton and their 2-year-old daughter, Andrea, are shown with a photograph of Lt. Richard Fulton, captured American pilot. Mrs. Fulton said she didn't think it was proper for her to comment on remarks attributed to her husband, who told newsmen in Hanoi that he had no complaints about his treatment, but felt the U.S. military had misled him in what to expect of his captors. Senate Votes Soc. Security Amendment

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Senate voted 76 to 5 Wednesday to permit persons retired under Social Security to earn up to $3,000 a year without loss of benefits.

The proposal was sponsored by Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield of Montana and adopted as an amendment to the big Social Security-welfare bill.

Under the law now, a person receiving Social Security payments can earn up to $1,680 with no loss of benefits.

The House, in passing the bill last year, raised the ceiling to $2,000 in line with President Nixon's recommendation.

Backers of the Senate bill said the Mansfield amendment would cost $1.7 billion more than present law and, in general, would aid retired persons who already have the highest incomes. They opposed the amendment.

Earlier the Senate rejected on a voice vote a proposal of Sen. Barry Goldwater, R—Ariz., to eliminate the earnings test entirely.

Sen. Wallace F. Bennett, R—Utah, senior Republican on the Finance Committee said in opposing this amendment it would cost $2.5 billion and that 800,000 relatively well-off persons would get most of this.

The two votes came quickly after the Senate began its floor debate on the $15.2-billion bill.

However, it was agreed that the test on the most disputed section of the legislation-the reform program for welfare families-would be put over until next week.

Optimism Rises Over World Money System

WASHINGTON (AP) - Optimism over prospects for reform of the world's money system rose steeply Wednesday when France posted a one-year target for agreement on new currency-exchange rates for the non-Communist countries.

But disagreement quickly surfaced, even among the European Common Market countries, over what should finally replace the dollar as the new standard of value.

French Finance Minister Valery Giscard d'Estaing told governors of the 124-nation International Monetary Fund that gold should be "the impartial indicator" of value, rather than the so called paper gold that the United States favors-the IMF's SDRs, or special drawing rights.

The Netherlands Finance Minister, R.J. Nelissen, challenged the French view, saying: "In my opinion, gold should not be the pivot....Any creation of international reserves in the future system should not depend on gold."

Giscard d'Estaing suggested the finance ministers should reach final agreement on a "stable but adaptable" exchange rate mechanism at the IMF annual meeting in Nairobi, Kenya, next September.

This would be the first of three stages, the Frenchman said. It would be followed by restoration of free convertibility of all currencies-including the U.S. dollar, whose convertibility into gold was suspended by President Nixon on August 15, 1971-and finally, in the suggested third stage, by agreement on the new standard of value.

The Frenchman noted that until recently many predicted the world would divide into separate economic blocs "and that the era of a universal code was a thing of the past." But he said statements made in the past two days, including the comprehensive U.S. reform proposals presented by Treasury Secretary George P. Shultz, have improved the outlook.

Kennedy Assures Doctors On Proposed Health Plan

NEW YORK (AP) — Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., sought to assure a group of family physicians Wednesday that his proposed national health insurance plan would not mean socialized medicine or a meddling in their practice.

"I do not want to build a British health care system in the United States," Kennedy told 3,000 delegates at a scientific assembly of the American Academy of Family Physicians.

"I do not want socialized medicine in America. I believe in maintaining the free enterprise system in this country and in American medicine."

However, Kennedy said he deemed it the role of the federal government to "assure that no American who needs health care is prevented from getting good care because he can't afford it, or because there aren't enough doctors, or because facilities aren't available..."

The Massachusetts senator, chairman of the Senate health subcommittee, drew applause when he declared he would guarantee that "the federal government must not make medical judgments or interfere in the clinical decisions between a doctor and his patient.

Afterwards, Kennedy told newsmen he considered his speech important because his positions in the sponsorship of his bill have been quite clear but "have been distorted by organized medicine."

Marcos Tells Nation To Stand In Line

MANILA (AP)-President Ferdinand E. Marcos announced more reforms Wednesday, telling his people to start standing in line, to drive properly, behave in public, and not be so noisy.

Marcos' programs also includes a "friendly persuasion" approach to long-haired youth.

As Marcos' imposition of martial law entered its fifth day, he could also point to an all-out crackdown on illegal possession of firearms, the promise of stiff penalties for crimes against tourists, an apparently successful roundup of "subversives," a works program for the unemployed, sweeping tax and land reforms, action against corrupt or inefficient judges, and reforms of banking laws and sugar and rice marketing organizations.

Press Secretary Francisco S. Tatad read out presidential directives which said that educational teams of Reserve Officer Training Corps cadets will teach the citizenry proper driving habits and correct public behavior.

Tatad said motorists will begin to observe all traffic regulations in a city where previously it seemed the only requirements for driving were a horn and an accelerator.

Shoppers in the new society will learn to stand in line "the way they do in other cities," Tatad said. He addded the educational teams will teach the public to put litter in the proper receptacles.

He said the armed forces are conducting the program of "friendly persuasion" against long-haired youth. Tatad had announced earlier in the week that long hair was all right. He wears a mod style himself.

The ROTC educational teams also will conduct door-to-door campaigns in an effort to cut down noise "in the streets, homes and public places."

The publishers of newspapers and owners of radio and television stations already have been told that if they wish to resume operations they, too, must get in line.

Banned are gossip columns, society pages, offensive and political advertising and sensational crime reporting, long a trademark of what was once the freest press in Asia.

Newspapers are permitted only "straight, factual and objective reporting" and no editorial opinion or commentary.

Prices in the markets have not risen and the government has issued a set of maximum prices for a wide range of essential foodstuffs.

Tatad also announced the armed forces are intensifying a drive against "war lords" and the illegal possession of firearms, both endemic to the Philippines since it was granted independence by the United States 26 years ago.

Defense Secretary Juan Ponce Enrile will impose stiff penalties for crimes committed against foreign visitors, Tatad said.

The move obviously was aimed at luring visitors into the country to promote the tourism industry.

In an interview, Marcos, 55, now in the third year of his seond four-year term, said only 10 per cent of the subversives and others wanted by the military escaped from last week's dragnet.

Phone Rate Increase Denied

BOSTON (AP) - The state Department of Public Utilities Wednesday turned down the New England Telephone Co.'s request for an emergency $61 million rate increase.

The decision announced by DPU Chairman John R. Verani came suddenly following a day-long hearing marked by a number of procedural disputes and outbursts from members of the public opposing the rate increase.

Verani, announcing the decision of the seven-member Public Utilities Commission, which he chairs, said the telephone company had failed to show that an emergency exists to justify the rate hike.

The company filed for the $61 million increase after the DPU postponed for 10 months a $122 million hike submitted by the firm in July.

In testimony Wednesday, witnesses for the phone company said the current rate of return on the company's business in Massachusetts was so low as to be unconstitutionally confiscatory.

The telephone company had "the responsibility for showing the burden of proof in this case," Verani said in his oral decision.

"The company has not sustained that burden. The commission rejects the definition of emergency used by the company."

Verani said the commission had heard no testimony that the telephone company was finding it difficult to sell new stock to investors or to pay dividends. He also noted that the company's third quarter earnings declared recently were up.

The commission rejected arguments by the company's attorneys that the firm's current rate of return on business done in Massachusetts fell below legal minimums set by the state Supreme Court and the DPU itself in a rate case settlement in January. In that earlier decision, the firm was awarded a $66 million rate hike.

Verani said the rate of return established at that time may no longer be appropriate due to changes in market conditions and other variables.

The minimum rate of return set by the Supreme Court was 8.6 per cent, said company lawyer Edward D. Hanify, and the rate of return set by the DPU in January was 8.82 per cent.

He said testimony presented by the firm's witnesses showed that the company is now earning at a rate of between 6.31 per cent and 6.5 per cent.

"With every month that goes by, there is an unconstitutional confiscation of revenues of $5 million," Hanify claimed.

Following the announcement of the decision, he formally objected to the ruling as "precipient."

The attorney said there had been no formal declaration that the hearing was closed and no opportunity for him to present final arguments on the issues involved.

Verani said hearings would be scheduled at a future date on the full $122 million rate increase and would involve a complete reexamination of issues such as the proper rate of return.

Wednesday's proceedings opened in confusion following two changes in the hearing place. Attorneys for both the state Consumers Council, which opposed the rate increase, and the telephone company asked that the hearings be postponed because the changes violated legal requirements for proper notice. Verani rejected the request.

The morning session of the hearing was interrupted several times when spokesmen for a group called Center for United Labor Action objected loudly that the hearings should be held after working hours when "working people" would be able to attend. Dave Carver of Cambridge, a spokesman, charged that the DPU and the telephone company "all conspired to keep this hearing away from the working people."

He continued to protest repeatedly until Verani threatened to have him ejected from the hearing room.

Three Die In Belfast

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Outbreaks of shooting Tuesday and Wednesday added three deaths to the toll of Northern Ireland's violence, and guerrilla bombs tore through public buildings in the province.

British troops claimed they captured a senior officer in the outlawed Irish Republican Army. The guerrilla was not identified but was said to be the adjutant of the IRA Provisional wing's 1st Battalion operating from the Anderstontown area of Belfast.

The latest victim of the sectarian violence was a youth found slumped on a sidewalk in the capital's Flush Lane. He had been shot in the head, a sign that he was killed by one of the assassination squads mounted by both Protestant and Roman Catholic extremists.

The death raised Northern Ireland's fatality toll to 577 in three years of bloodshed that has continued despite continued peace efforts, including a conference which ended Wednesday in England.

It was a day of explosions and bomb attempts in Northern Ireland.

A massive explosion wrecked the City Hall in Armagh. Two armed men planted two suitcases in the entrance hall while the nearby garage staff was held at gunpoint.

The blast came 20 minutes later, blowing the front of the building into the street. The caretaker gave the alarm as he saw the raiders leave. All 16 of the staff managed to leave the building before the explosion. There were no reports of any injuries.

In Belfast, the guerrilla bombers wrecked an electrical warehouse in York Street, not far from the city center. An army spokesman said two armed men planted the bomb and gave the staff an hour's warning. The blast went off 45 minutes later. Nobody was reported injured. Army experts said the bomb contained 35 pounds of explosives.

A three-day peace conference in Darlington, England, ended with a British pledge to come up with swift suggestions for ending the bloodshed.

William Whitelaw, Britain's administrator in the North, said the projected discussion paper "will not offer some clear solution; it will set out the options and basic problems as defined at this con ference."

U.S. Command Reports Raids On North

SAIGON (AP) - The U.S. Command reported heavy new air raids Wednesday on North Vietnam, sparking fresh claims of many civilian casualties by Radio Hanoi.

A U.S. communique said American jets flew more than 300 strikes Tuesday north and south of Hanoi, knocking out two MIG 21 fighters on the ground at Yen Bai air base and bombing roads, bridges, military barracks and supply depots.

Radio Hanoi claimed two schools were bombed and many homes were destroyed, causing heavy civilian casualties.

U.S. B52 bombers were diverted across the Cambodian border for the second straight day to raid North Vietnamese and Viet Cong base camps that usually serve as staging areas for attacks on Saigon and its surrounding provinces.

Very little ground fighting was reported in South Vietnam, where military analysts believe the North Vietnamese are regrouping and resupplying for the next phase of their offensive possibly in October.

The $21-million deepwater port at Da Nang, dredged by the Americans in 1965, is scheduled to be turned over to the South Vietnamese civilian port authority on Saturday as part of the U.S. withdrawal program.

Spokesmen indicated the drastic reduction in American troop strength eliminated the need for huge shipments of U.S. military goods through Da Nang.

Nixon Explains "Hiding"

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Apparently stung by Democratic challenges to come out and campaign more, President Nixon said Wednesday he must spend time in Washington to ward off potential tax-boosting programs of the Democratic-controlled Congress.

Nixon's opponent, George S. McGovern, has made no secret of his desire to entice the President into the arena of partisan debate. But Nixon continues to limit himself to quickie campaign outings.

In statements prepared in connection with fund-raising visits to San Francisco and Los Angeles, Nixon said:

"I would welcome the opportunity to take the case for this administration directly to the American people. But my first responsibility is to do my job as president of the United States....

"At the present time, there are pending in Congress a number of huge spending proposals which, if enacted into law, would inevitably lead to a tax increase. The best way I can serve the American people is to stay in Washington, when I consider it necessary, to fight those proposals-to veto them if they are passed and to enlist enough support in the Congress to sustain my vetoes."

Nixon's statements were released in the middle of a three-day campaign swing, his most ambitious to date, in search primarily of the 86 electoral votes held by two states--New York and California.

Before leaving New York, Nixon said he didn't simply want victory but rather "a victory for America-that's what we're working for."

Nixon was appearing at a luncheon in San Francisco and a $1,000-a-plate dinner in Los Angeles.

Campaign '72

While Nixon was flying westward from New York, the White House released a statement in which he called for all nations and all civilized people "to act in concert to remove the threat of terrorism from the world."

Endorsing "in the strongest possible terms" Secretary of State William P. Roger's United Nations proposals to combat terrorism, Nixon's policy statement said also he has told a Cabinet-level committee to move vigorously to find ways to eliminate terrorism.

The President plugged in his fund-raising dinner speech Tuesday night for "the support of a clear majority of the American people so that we can do those things that America needs to have done for it."

With an overwhelming mandate from the voters, Nixon said he can "carry forward in exciting, new programs, on the domestic fronts that are just as important as those we have been able to carry forward on the international front."

He recited his foreign-policy initiatives, including his trips to Peking and Moscow, and declared: "We have changed the world, and the world will be better for it." But he asked for support "so that we can finish the job, so that we can continue the work we have begun."

The President, after staying overnight in the Century Plaza Hotel at Los Angeles, is scheduled to address the National Cancer Conference before flying back to Washington Thursday.

McG Staff Claims Supporter Build-up

WASHINGTON (AP) — Campaign aides of Democratic presidential nominee George McGovern claimed Wednesday they have signed up more than 4 million new Democratic voters in nationwide registration drives.

"The McGovern campaign is more than halfway toward its goal of registering 8 million new Democrats," they said.

Campaign director Gary Hart said new Democratic registrants are outnumbering new Republicans by about two to one.

Hart disputed polls which indicate a large number of young Democrats might cross party lines and vote for President Nixon Nov. 7, saying there would be little point in new voters registering as Democrats if they planned to vote GOP.

Hart credited Rep. Frank Thompson, D-N.J.-who quit the McGovern campaign in a huff several weeks ago-with doing much of the basic spadework in the voter-registration drive. He said the National Labor Committee for McGovern-Shriver also participated heavily in the drive.

Howard Samuel, an official of the AFL -CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers who is executive director of the McGovern Labor Committee, said union officials working for McGovern are concentrating on working families.

"We think the more union people we register, the more McGovern voters we're going to get," said Samuel.

Samuel discounted also the impact of nine AFL -CIO construction union presidents who endorsed Nixon this week, saying they represented only about 40 per cent of some 3 million AFL -CIO building tradesmen. He said state and local McGovern labor committees were manned some 25 per cent by construction union leaders.

Speaking at the same news conference with Hart and Samuel, McGovern's national voter-registration director, Ann Wexler, said in addition a major drive for absentee voters was in the works.

Hart said he expected the McGovern campaign to reach its goal of 8 million new Democratic registered voters before registration books close in the next month or so.

Report Gives Grim Economic Outlook

WASHINGTON (AP) — Either Richard Nixon or George McGovern, as president during the next few years, would have to accept sizable tax increases or slash planned spending to avoid big deficits, a private economic group has concluded.

This would be true even if the economy recovered to the full employment level by 1974, according to the study, commissioned by the privately financed American Enterprise Institute for Public Policy Research.

The report is sharply cirtical also of the sharing of federal revenues with states and cities. Congress is on the point of finally enacting a $30-billion, five-year revenue sharing program.

The report says, "The federal government may be in the process of beggaring itself to relieve many state and local governments from having to finance outlays that may never be needed."

Projecting through 1978 the budget effects of programs espoused by both presidential candidates, the study observes:

"The picture that emerges is a rather grim one for the Nixon administration."

"This outlook also presents Sen. McGovern with a bleak starting point for his budget decisions."

The economists who made the study, headed by David J. Ott of Clark University, say the fiscal crunch would continue through 1977. They add:

"To balance McGovern's spending plans with revenues would require tax increases, including those the candidate himself has proposed, ranging from 24 to 37 per cent higher than the projected revenues the existing system would have produced.

"To balance the Nixon budget in 1975-77 would require tax increases on the order of 2 to 7 per cent of such revenues; thereafter tax cuts would be possible."

For Nixon to achieve his aim of a budget balanced under full employment conditions and at the same time fund existing programs and new ones he has proposed would require $21 billion more taxes in 1975, $13 billion in 1976 and $6 billion in 1977, the report says.

Raising such sums through the income tax would require hikes of 11 per cent in 1975, 6 per cent in 1976 and 3 per cent in 1977, it figures.

McGovern already has proposed reforms that he says would raise taxes an estimated $22 billion in 1975 by closing what he calls loopholes.

The economists express doubt that the yield would be that large, but accept the figure as a basis of their projection.

Even with this increased yield, the report says, projections of the McGovern proposals show deficits of $20 billion in 1975, $11 billion in 1976, $3 billion in 1977, and surpluses thereafter.

To cover the deficits through tax increases, it says, surtaxes of 8 per cent in 1975, 4 per cent in 1976 and 1 per cent in 1977 would be needed in addition to the present McGovern proposals.

Of the sharing of federal revenues with the states and local governments, supported by both candidates, the report says:

"The federal government is apparently in the process of impoverishing itself while putting the states and local governments as a group in a position of relative affluence."

Beginning in early 1971, the report says, the state and local government sector has been running increasing surpluses, now at the annual rate of about $15 billion.

It adds there has been a "marked lessening of the fiscal strain this sector has experienced over the past decade or so," even though individual units still may be in trouble.

On the spending side, the projections show McGovern's programs costing $84.5 billion more than Nixon's by 1975, $107.7 billion more by 1978. The report notes these increases would not necessarily be inflationary-if they were covered by taxes.

It says McGovern overestimated by $9 billion the savings his proposed defense cuts could make by 1975. The report puts the reduction at $21 billion instead of $30 billion.

A major addition to the Nixon program, the study says, would be the universal health-care system McGovern co-sponsored with Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass. This would cost $62.8 billion in 1975 and $80.3 billion in 1978, with more than half coming from general revenues, the rest from increased payroll taxes, the report said.

The American Enterprise Institute describes itself as a publicly supported research and educational organization.

Bicyclists To Stage Protest Ride

This man is going to ride in protest. Are you? (Photo by Alan Chapman)

By PAM PIMPAO

Approximately one hundred and fifty bicyclists and bicycle enthusiasts will be pedaling from Pittsfield to Boston on Sept. 30th and Oct. 1st and 2nd as a protest against pollution and a rally for better bicycle laws and roads.

"Pedal Against Pollution" is a program designed to bring attention to the increasing problems of bicyclists and has the support of Senator Brooke, Senator Kennedy, Governor Sargent, John McGlennon of the Environmental Protection Agency, Dr. Paul Dudley White, heart specialist and member of the Committee for Safe Bicycling, Inc., and other State House leaders. Senator Brooke has given office space, staff and equipment to the "Pedal Against Pollution" organization and will welcome the riders at the Boston City Hall Plaza.

The cyclists will be entering Amherst at about 3:00 P.M. Saturday afternoon, after a short rest period, the group will continue to the Student Union. Bill Manburg, the student representing the "Pedal Against Pollution" program at UMass, has gotten rooms for the bicyclists at the Campus Center Hotel and they'll be offered supper at the Hatch.

After supper, there will be a workshop for any students interested in learning about bicycle safety laws, bicycle health, bike touring, racing, and recent improvements and perhaps the Olympics at Munich.

John Allis of the U.S. Olympic Bike Team will be leading the original group from Park Square, Pittsfield and bike groups from Springfield and Amherst will join the riders as they pedal through each city or town. Mayor Palczynski of Westfield has challenged "any other mayor in Massachusetts to keep up" with him in the Pittsfield to Boston trip.

The main goals of "Pedal Against Pollution" is to bring attention to the problems that have been caused by the rapidly expanding bicycle population. There is approximately one bicycle for every four persons in the United States, yet this increase has not been met with a similar increase in available bike ways nor by updating of local, state, and federal laws designed to improve conditions for bicycling. Improvement of bike ways would mean fewer pedestrians being run over by speeding bicyclists, and fewer speeding bicyclists being run over by speeding motorists.

Some states have been taking steps in the area of bike law improvement, notably Oregon which ruled that 1% of all gasoline tax be spent on improving bicycle transportation, but most states have not.

The planned route starts at Pittsfield at 8:30 A.M. It follows Route 9 East through Northampton to Amherst and UMass. Sunday, Oct. 1st, the departure is at 8:30 A.M. from Amherst Common, back on Route 9 East through Worcester to Shrewsbury: exit off Route 9 onto Route 20 East following 20 to Marlborough High School. (People participating in the ride are encouraged to bring sleeping bags.)

Monday, Oct. 2nd, 8:00, departure from Marlborough High School, Route 20 East to Watertown Square; Route 16 East (Mt. Auburn St.) to Massachusetts Avenue, cross over Charles River to Boylston St.; left on Boylston to Charles St.; left on Charles (between Boston Garden and Boston Public Garden) to Beacon St.; right on Beacon to Tremont St., left on Tremont to Boston City Hall Plaza; There will be a reception at 12:00 with a speech by Senator Brooke.

There are planned stops along the way, where the riders may rest and have some refreshments. The schedule is based on an average speed of 10 M.P.H. Cyclists are free to join the group at any point along the route and ride for as long or as briefly as they wish.

Four Brown House Senate Candidates Debate

By MARIA McNAMARA

The four candidates for two Student Senate seats from Brown House debated Tuesday before an audience of 200. The candidates are Les Murray, John Bohn, Mark Cerasuelo and Skip Casper, who is running for reelection. Suzanne Gentes of the House Council acted as moderator.

Casper opened by emphasizing the Senate role in fostering concern for the student and his problems. He pointed out the responsibility of the senator to see that student funds are fairly and correctly distributed. "Making sure where the money goes is proper; how it is used is proper, is essential," he said. While citing the need for improved communications between student and senator, Casper admitted to his failure in that respect last year. He proposed as a means of correcting the failing a series of monthly newsletters to all residents concerning the goals and achievements of the Senate, as well as encouraging comments or complaints to be brought directly to him for attention. Commenting briefly on the M-Lot situation, Casper proposed "excessive measures for excessive problems". He brought up the possibility of a law suit if too much damage is incurred on the lot, which is state property.

Bohn also spoke on M-Lot. In a talk with William Lambert, physical plant director, he said he was informed that the state has no plans for paving the mudhole. Because of a funds shortage, the project, costing in the vicinity of $35,000, along with plans to pave a number of footpaths leading into the Sylvan Area was dropped.

On other matters Bohn also proposed monthly newsletters to keep up student awareness of Senate proceedings. He listed among his qualifications for the office his experience working with the Massachusetts Department of Education, where he said he helped initiate a program that now allows a number of high school students membership on the State Board of Education.

Using the debate attendance as a prime example, Murray knocked student apathy in the dorm. This he blamed on a lack of communication on the part of Casper, saying, "No one knows what Skip is doing except for what they read in the Collegian." Murray proposed to remedy the situation by stationing himself in the lounge during specified hours each week. This, he said, along with weekly summary reports would help the student opinion to become a force in the Senate, instead of the opinion of the senator himself.

Cerasuolo, the last speaker, has adopted as his platform that of the Socialist Workers Party. Listing the main objectives of the party, he included opposition to U.S. involvement in Indo-China, opposition to a capitalistic society and abolishment of sex discrimination. He stressed the need for students to become more aware of the world problems and not to shut themselves up within the confines of the university. Political awareness he deemed essential for the students and he encouraged the University funding of all radical political groups as well as student control of academic affairs. Cerasuolo also told of the need for child care centers here on campus and more involvement with the surrounding community.

The presentations were followed by a question period. On the subject of the proposed Senate realignment, only Casper approved of the measure as it now stands. Cerasuolo opposed the plan on the grounds that it is a paternalistic measure and also 15 seats will never accurately represent the views of the entire Third World organization. Bohn called it representation due to race, creed and color, while the rest of the campus is represented by dorm area. Finally Murray voiced his doubt over the matter of the 14 per cent arrangement. He said that figure does not represent the true size of minority groups and he suggested that the situation be looked into further.

Elections for senate posts will be held this evening in the dorms.

Conspiracy Charges Kept Alive By Vermont Judge

MONTPELIER, Vt. (AP) — The chief U.S. District Court judge for Vermont extended at least until early November the life of a civil rights lawsuit which charges conspiracy on the part of more than half the nation's attorneys general.

Judge James S. Holden issued a pre-trial order Wednesday in the suit brought by Florida multi-millionaire businessman Glenn W. Turner setting Oct. 30 as the deadline for briefs on motions to quash, strike and dismiss the suit.

He also set Nov. 17 as the date for oral arguments on Turner's request for a three-judge panel to rule on the constitutionality of a Vermont regualtion and its supporting statute that ruled pyramid or multi-level sales techniques such as used by Turner's companies, as unfair business practices.

The care and detail into which Judge Holden went in handling the first session of a pre-trial conference in the ten count suit appeared to catch some of the 18 assistant attorneys generally present by surprise.

Many had planned a one-day stay in Vermont, but were forced to remain for a Wednesday morning in-chambers conference during which procedures for handling legal briefs on the four motions to immediately end the case were worked out.

Turner has asked the court, through his attorneys, to award punitive and compensatory damages totalling more than $500 million.

Two counts of the action charged that the attorneys general of 26 states conspired against Turner and his companies during meetings held in Phoenix, Ariz., and Puerto Rico.

Atty. John A. Burgess, representing Turner, told the court Tuesday, the "totality of the conspiracy can best be summed up as a decision to get Glenn Turner."

The Council of Better Business Bureaus, based in Washington, was alleged in two counts to have conspired against three of Turner's companies, which have joined with him as plaintiffs, and to have openly downgraded the companies' products.

The plaintiff companies include Turner Enterprises, Inc., described as a holding company; Koscott Interplanetary, Inc., which sells a line of cosmetics, and Dare to be Great, Inc., which handles motivational courses.

Damages amounting to $200 million were being sought from the council.

Another $200 million in damages was being sought from the attorneys general who were charged in three counts with common law interference with contract rights of the plaintiffs, malicious prosecution and interference with interstate commerce.

The first three counts of the suit were aimed specifically at Vermont and the regulation used to rule against the pyramid sales techniques of Turner's companies.

In pyramid sales, a person purchases a franchise to sell a product or service and the right to sell additional franchises for profit to other persons. The rights to sell the franchise would necessarily grow in number because each new franchise purchaser gains the right for further sales.

During arguments Tuesday in support of a motion to quash, strike and dismiss the case, Iowa Assistant Attorney General Douglas Carlson characterized the technique as a "fraud upon the people."

He said even if attorneys general or members of their staffs had attending meetings during which such techniques were discussed, it had only been in furtherance of their sworn duties to upheld laws of their sovereign states.

Carlson characterized such meetings or exchanges of information as similar to exchanging information on such problems as organized interstate crime.

Representatives of the defendants also claimed they could not be sued because attorneys general had judicial immunity.

Burgess, arguing for Turner, claimed the defendants had no special right to conspire if it was for unlawful purposes, in this case to deny the civil right to conduct a business.

He also told Judge Holden the federal civil rights acts were so broad as to now allow judicial or prosecutorial immunity to stand in the way.

The list of defendants, in addition to Vermont, its attorney general, and the Council of Better Business Bureaus, included the attorneys general of Alabama, Arkansas, California, Connecticut, Delaware, Idaho, Illinois, Indians, Iowa, Kansas, Maine and Massachusetts.

Also included were the chief law enforcement officers of the states of Michigan, Missouri, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, North Carolina, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Texas, Virginia, Washington, West Virginia and Wisconsin.

A Place To Hang Half A Hat

HOWELL, Mich. (AP) — Twenty-three-year-old Larry Toner wanted a split-level house, but what he wound up with was a split house.

Because of a dispute between Toner and his builder, the builder had the house sawed in half. One half is sitting on the foundation and the other half has been pulled about 15 feet away.

Toner said the house, a tri-level design shaped like a "T", was separated with a power saw where the two wings came together.

Toner and his wife, Donna, 22, were married last June and had hoped to be living in their new home by August. They had special plans drawn up for the house to be built on a lot in a rural area near Howell, about 30 miles west of Detroit.

The house was designed to have three elevations, Toner said, one at ground level, one four steps above and the other five steps below.

"When the builder had the lower level dug," he said, "it came out nine steps below the ground level. You just can't have a tri-level home like that."

Toner said he had a "no deviation" contract with his builder, but contended the plans weren't followed. He said the builder offered to fill the lower level with sand until it was at the proper depth.

But a consulting engineer, whom Toner said he hired at his own expense, said the basement floor might crack in the future if it's poured over the sand base.

Toner said he offered to put a certain amount of the builder's fee in escrow for a year so that if the floor cracked, he'd be assured it would be fixed at the builder's expense.

"But he refused," Toner said. Instead, Toner said, the builder ordered a house mover last week to cut the house in two, push steel beams under it and haul the house away.

Toner went to court and obtained an order barring the builder and his crew from the site.

The builder - Lyle Burk of Brighton - was not available for comment.

But his attorney, Arthur Heikkinen of Howell, said he believes the builder planned to haul the house off Toner's lot in an effort to recover the money he has invested in the building.

Toner, who is not living in the house, said he believes it is beyond repair.

"I wouldn't want it, even if it could be put back together again," he said. "I'd always be expecting the roof to fall on my head."

Meanwhile, Toner has taken some white paint and labeled the sections "His" and "Hers".

Victim Would Have Been Indicted

BOSTON (AP) — A Rhode Island prison escapee who officials believe was the victim of an underworld execution would have been indicted for murder Wednesday, if he had lived, federal agents said.

Prosecutors said John G. Robichaud, 32, would have been the first federal murder defendant named under a new U.S. explosives law. The charge would have been in connection with a Feb. 23 car bombing that killed a Detroit woman, they said.

Robichaud was found shot to death Monday in a field near Somerville.

Law enforcement officials in Massachusetts and Rhode Island said Robichaud was killed by underworld criminals, but the officials disagreed on the motive.

Middlesex County Dist. Atty. John Droney said the dead man came to the Bay State to "carry out an execution," but was killed by the "very men he was hunting."

Robichaud "had help" in escaping from Rhode Island's Adult Correctional Institute in Cranston last Wednesday—"there was a purpose and plan to his escape," Droney said.

But Col. Walter Stone, Rhode Island state police superintendent, said Robichaud had attracted too much attention by police to his associates and was eliminated "to relieve the heat."

Three convicted murderers, still at large Wednesday, escaped from the prison with Robichaud, who had been convicted for armed robbery.

In the Detroit bombing, Mae Woodhead, wife of a key witness against Robichaud in a Boston criminal case, suffered fatal injuries when she tried to start her car, which had been wired with dynamite.

The bomb was meant for her husband, William, scheduled to testify against Robichaud in Boston the day the explosion occurred, said Prosecutors Laurence Leff and Clyde Pritchard of the Justice Department's Organized Crime Strike Force in Detroit.

"Our investigation showed that Robichaud placed the bomb in the Woodheads' car on Monday," Pritchard said. "The car sat in the garage for three days."

The prosecutors said 15 witnesses were brought before federal grand juries in Detroit and Boston in their investigation.

Robichaud's indictment would have been based on the new law, which provides for a possible death penalty for anyone who transports explosives across state lines with the intent of murder.

Robichaud failed to appear at his Boston trial in February. Three months later he was arrested in Pawtucket, R.I., where police found him recovering from six gunshot wounds.

Boston Gets School Funds; But Needs Plan

BOSTON (AP) — A superior court judge Wednesday ordered that the state release $52 million withheld from Boston under the school Racial Imbalance Act, but gave the city six weeks to come up with a short-term plan for improving racial balance in its schools.

In an 80-page decision, Judge Robert Sullivan sharply criticized both state and city officials for their actions in the long-standing imbalance dispute.

And he said that despite claims of its critics, the 1965 acts does not require forced busing. "The fact is that the proper implementation of the terms of this state's Racial Imbalance Act will foreclose any possibility of forced busing becoming a reality here in the future," he wrote.

Sullivan's decision followed by three weeks a similar decision by the state Supreme Court releasing $16.7 million that had been withheld from Springfield under the imbalance act. In that decision, the high court refused to enter directly into the development of plans to relieve imbalance, saying that was the job of state and local officials.

Wednesday's decision drew mixed reactions from state and city officials. Boston Mayor Kevin H. White said he was "quite naturally pleased" with the release of funds-averting threatened major financial trouble for the city-but said the judge's timetable for solutions "may be overly severe."

But White called for "serious thought" to develop a replacement for the imbalance law that would involve the entire metropolitan area.

"There can be no permanent solution to Boston's problems that does not involve the suburbs," White said.

School Committeeman John J. Kerrigan, an outspoken opponent of busing, said that if the decision means Boston must begin forced busing of children into "unsafe areas", he will push for an appeal to the state supreme court.

And two Boston representatives, Raymond L. Flynn, and James F. Hart, said they are considering court action to require the state to pay Boston an extra $1.2 million. They said it has cost Boston that much in interest charges to borrow money needed to keep the schools open.

Sullivan ruled that the state Board of Education had "acted arbitrarily, in abuse of its discretion, and in a manner not consistent with the public interest" when it voted in September, 1971, to withhold state aid under the imbalance act.

He noted that its action came less than a month after the board had approved a Boston plan for alleviating imbalance. But shortly afterward, "chaotic" events accompanied opening of Boston's schools, especially the new Lee school, and as a result the school committee voted to modify its earlier plan, Sullivan noted.

The state board, acting on the basis of news reports of those events, voted to withhold the funds, Sullivan said. He called the vote "extreme action" not justified by the circumstances.

"Certainly the board knew or should have known that by its drastic and dramatic vote to withhold an amount now determined to be nearly $52 million, it not only jeopardized the program for racial balancing and equal educational opportunity within the Boston schools, but is actually imperilled the entire public-education system for nearly 100,000 boys and girls, non-white and white, within the city of Boston," Sullivan said.

While his decision upheld the contention of Boston officials, Sullivan also criticized the school committee for what he called "an unfortunate pattern of reluctance and lethargy" in progressing toward a solution of the imbalance programs. But he said it was up to the state board to prove the city had failed to comply with the law.

Sullivan ordered that the school committee, with state assistance, "develop a plan of short-term measures...toward the end of achieving maximum progress in the reduction of racial imbalance in the public schools of the city of Boston by June 20, 1973."

His timetable calls for the state to make recommendations by Oct. 6, for the city to prepare its plan by Nov. 6, and for the state board either to approve Boston's plan or substitute its own by Nov. 6.

Sullivan ordered that a special court master be named to keep the court informed on progress in executing the short-term plans.

He said that next June the court will hold hearings, then establish a final schedule for "the accomplishment of complete racial balance within the Boston schools."

Sullivan also ordered that the school committee by Jan. 1, 1973, eliminate racial imbalance in the Lee school and in all other schools constructed under the Racial Imbalance Law's incentive program. That program provides 65 per cent state construction aid rather than the 50 per cent normally allowed.

Powered By Rumors, Stock Market Goes Up

NEW YORK (AP) — Fueled by rumors of progress toward peace in Vietnam, and by good economic news, the stock market Wednesday scored its first major advance since Labor Day.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks closed up 10.69 at 947.25. Advances led declines on the Big Board, 1,042 to 393 with 1,751 issues exchanged in moderate trading. Volume was 14.63 million shares, up from 13.15 million Tuesday. The Dow Jones sticker was running three minutes behind trades at the close.

"We had reached an oversold condition," said Larry Wachtel of Bache & Co. "What the market needed was something to hang its hat on in the way of dramatics."

The extension of presidential advisor Henry A. Kissinger's peace negotiations with the North Vietnamese in Paris provided the dramatics, Wachtel said.

The Kissinger's talk also sparked various peace-related rumors which made the rounds of Wall Street.

Another analyst, Charles Lewis of Treves & Co., said, "There's a feeling that something is about to pop from Paris."

The good economic news was a 2.2 per cent rise in leading economic indicators for August, announced by the Commerce Department. The rise was the best recorded since March.

The New York Stock Exchange index, which includes some 1,400 common stocks, was up .83 to 60.14. At the American Exchange, the price change index was up .11 to 26.08.

Most-active on the Big Board was Gulf Oil, up 1/8 to 23-1/2, after a morning block trade of 100,000 shares at 23.

Polaroid, moving against the trend, fell 1-3/4 to 112 and was off more than 5 points in early trading.

The company said it could not explain the decline, but analysts said increased competition in cameras from Berkey Photo and in film from Pavelle Corp. might be cutting into private projections of Polaroid's profits.

DuPont, which had fallen 8 points in two days after predicting flat third-quarter earnings, bounced back to 166, up 1/2.

On the American Exchange, Igloo Corp. gained 5-3/8 to 22-1/4 after a delayed opening. Coca-Cola Bottling Co. of New York said Tuesday it would take over Igloo in a $39-million stock transaction.

Watergate Checks From Republicans

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Attorney General Richard G. Kleindienst has acknowledged for the first time that the FBI has traced four checks from Republican sources to the bank account of one of five men indicted in the Watergate break-in.

Kleindienst said at a news conference Tuesday that the FBI's investigation into bugging of the Washington Democratic party headquarters "encompassed the flow" of the four checks from the Republican sources into the Miami bank account of Bernard L. Barker, one of the defendants in the case.

The attorney general mentioned no names other than Barker.

Trouble Giving Away 25 million

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) — At a time when inflation and the rising cost of living have many people scratching to make ends meet, the State of new York is having trouble giving away more than $2.5 million.

Tax Commissioner Norman Gallman said Wesnesday that, for example, the state still is looking for one of the five $100,000 second-prize winners in the "summer special" lottery drawing Sept. 20 which guaranteed at least $1 million to the winner.

Gallman said the missing winner bought a ticket bearing the number 8186082 from a vendor in the subway station at Sixth Avenue and 32nd Street, New York City, but the vendor, Elias Gyftopoulos, is not sure who bought it. He thinks the ticket may have been one purchased by a group of young people.

Gyftopoulos stands to claim a $1,000 incentive prize if the winning ticket turns up.

The other four $100,000 winners and the million-dollar grand prize winner will be hosted at a luncheon in New York City Oct. 6 where the Tax Department will present them with their checks.

As of Aug. 24, the state Tax Department's lottery division reported that $2,643,950, representing 20,326 unclaimed lottery pirzes, remains in the state's treasury.

Ernest T. Bird, lottery division director, said the regulations require that the prizes remain available for a 12-month priod after the drawing in which they were awarded. That is, a person holding a winning lottery ticket has up to one year from the date of the drawing in which to claim his prize.

After the one-year limit has expired, however, the money still is available to the lottery winner through the state's abandoned property division.

Under the original lottery system, a ticket purchaser signed his name and address at the time he bought the ticket and locating prize winners was no problem, Bird said.

But the new weekly lottery, using a numbered ticket system, provides no way for the state to determine who bought the tickets.

In some cases, Bird theorized, people simply forgot about claiming the cash, such as in the case of a small prize, while in other cases they might have forgotten to check the winning number or lost or destroyed the tickets before verifying whether or not they were a winner.

Bird said most of the unclaimed prizes are small ones and no one has passed up a claim on a top prize.

Westover Revisited

The current legal status of more than 1200 people who were arrested at Westover Air Force Base last spring and who entered not guilty pleas will be one of the major topics considered at tonight's meeting entitled "Westover Revisited?" in Room 163, Campus Center.

These people were arrested last spring during a six-week period of protest over the mining of Haiphong Harbor. Not one single incident of violence occurred during the demonstrations.

Court action on the cases of those arrested is due soon. Pertinent information regarding the legal status of those involved will become available at this meeting. But more than this will be discussed.

The future of anti-war demonstrations and peace activities will be considered. Specific questions will be in the offing also: Should actions at Westover continue? If so, in what form? What alternatives are there?

All those who are concerned about continued war efforts, rights for non-violent civil disobedience, and peace should attend this meeting. Not only could useful information and ideas be exchanged, but the seedlings of a new pace movement could be planted.

Can You Spare $2000?

Sidney Omarr told me to do something different yesterday, so I did something no one ever does: I read the Collegian. On the op-ed page, there was a most interesting letter entitled, "Silly Statistics." The letter examined the nature and amounts of gifts and loans to the two major Presidential candidates which were in access of $2000. The conclusion reached in the letter was that "these figures seem to refute McGovern's claim that he, not Nixon, is the candidate of the little man." In other words, Nixon's $2000 men are either littler or stingier than McGovern's $2000 men.

My curiosity aroused, I put a call to Olsen. Jimmy, I said, I want you to talk to the man in the street. Find out if he gave $2000 to either candidate. Olsen is a good man, and by four o'clock his report was on my desk, with the initials J.O. at the bottom.

Chief: I went to interview the man on the street, but he got run over by a car. So I interviewed the men and women on the sidewalk.

The first person I talked to was a pimp. He said he only gave that kind of money to the police. I researched the matter at the Metropolis Public Library. Policeman is not an elective office, and neither McGovern nor Nixon was ever a cop.

The second guy I asked told me he dealt heroin. Noting this, I asked if he had evern given $2000 to a candidate for public office. He told me the only candidate to whom he had ever given that kind of money was President Thieu.

At that point I thought perhaps I should try a different street. I tried Blueview Terrace, first stopping at a house numbered 1313. The inhabitant identified himself as Chester A. Riley, who works at a shipyard. When I asked Mr. Riley if he gave $2000 contributions to political candidates, he burst into tears and showed me his budget. After explaining in great detail how he couldn't live on what he earned, Riley said good-bye. Just then his teen-age son Junior walked in, and told Riley he needed $200 for an abortion. The last thing I heard Riley say was, "What a revolting development this is."

A few blocks away, a factory whistle blew for lunch. I ran over there and interviewed a group of fifteen factory workers. Not one of them ever gave anybody $2000 for anything, although one of them complained it cost him that much to marry off his oldest daughter.

I concluded my survey by asking a number of local merchants if they were inclined to give $2000 for political candidates. The typical reaction was "I don't even pay the Mafia that kind of money." None of them gave that much money to politicians.

There was a hippie in the bakery where I finished my survey. He told me how to spell his name, and asked when my story would be published. I told him it was just a survey, so he asked what the survey was about. I figured he qualified as "the little man," so I asked him if he knew anything about the money Nixon and McGovern were spending. He answered, "Oh yeah, man, I sent in my three dollars."

From this informal survey I conclude that there is no way the little man is going to give $2000 to anyone who is running for public office.

When Jimmy Olsen can't turn up a single common man who gave $2000 to either candidate, the conclusion is inescapable: the common man does not have $2000 to give to either Nixon or McGovern. Satisfied with Olsen's research, I returned to the letter.

I reread it carefully. The writer of the letter jumps ahead of himself a bit, but he does, to be fair, present one unavoidable fact: Of all the money given to Nixon or McGovern since April 7, McGovern has averaged more money for every bid contribution than Nixon has. Cynics may scoff, saying that Nixon collected a huge warchest before April 7, that Nixon has siphoned off some campaign contributions into a Mexican bank, that no one has yet discovered whether or not the Watergate bugging was financed by the Committee To Re-elect The President. Whether cynics scoff or not (and they always do), none of this has anything to do with the little man, as the author of the letter wishes us to believe. What can one infer from this?

The first imference I would make is that the writer of the letter supports Richard Nixon's bid for re-election. This, as we all know, is entirely within his constitutional rights. In a time when civil liberties are endangered, it is a courageous thing to attempt to exercise one's constitutional rights. The gentleman deserved to be applauded for his refusal to be bullied by those who wish to elect George McGovern President. When the curtain closes behind him on election day, we can all take pride in knowing that a fellow American stands up for what he believes.

We should all be heartened to know that this gentleman is exercising his rights. He exercises his right to free speech when he writes a letter to the editor. For this he should be applauded.

Otherwise, his letter is a little silly, relying as it does on statistics to prove something that those statistics simply don't prove. His logic teacher would be ashamed. Hoa Binh.

Munich-Lod-London

In Munich, they came with machine guns in the dark hours before dawn. Their faces, expressing the content of their wretched soul, were covered by masks. Their victims, awakened by that hauntingly familiar knock on the door, were given no warning, no opportunity to defend themselves.

To Lod Airport, they sent suicide mercenaries to perpetrate their exterminatory designs. The twenty seven who stood in the paths of the machine guns and hand grenades were gunned down like flies.

In London, and in Embassies around the world, they chose not to face their victims. Confrontation like those in Munich and Lod were determined to be too risky. Sending murderous devices through the mail doesn't require putting one's life on the line.

Those who had no chance of fighting back will be mourned, by a nation which has been granted, by history, with many occasions to mourn. But that nation shall not confine itself to mourning. Prayers and cries of "Never Again" will not end the carnage which has been repeatedly visited upon the nation of mourners.

But there are those who do not mourn. To them, the victims were mere expedients in the cause of the "liberation" of Palestine. Those who were eliminated were not to be considered innocent; they, along with the rest of the Zionist "usurpers", would be targeted and rooted out.

They who find no reason to mourn also find no reason to stop their killings. Parcels in the mail, bombs hurled into a schoolbus, Airline hijacking, and other valiant acts are perceived to be a means to demoralize a people into submission. The stepping up of the terror to permeate the lives of their victims is their means of demanding surrender. But surrender they will not get, no matter how many bombs, booby traps, machine guns, and other persuasives they use. The nation of mourners has had enough of the mourning. "Never again", once lip-service, is now a call to action.

The smokescreen has been cast aside. The gullible and weak-kneed are now given the opportunity to see things for what they truly are. Yesterday they were looked upon as mere "victims of circumstance", who were not to be condemned for their excesses. Today they can see the bloody truth. PFLP, Fatah, PLO, "Black September" and other outfits have revealed to the soft minded what the smokescreen of slick propaganda once hid: pure, unadulterated murder. Murder of those who never had warning, who never had the chance to retaliate, who had their hands tied behind their backs, whose crime was that of being born on a land which was considered to be Palestine.

Those who wish to honor the unarmed victims of terrorism are urged to attend the Memorial Service in the Student Union tonite. Come to honor, come to remember, come to protest. But don't just come to mourn.

Letters To The Editor

Referendum Plea

To the Editor:

There seems to be a lot of confusion on the issue of renaming the Redmen. I don't think it is being kept in the open. There are too many people who haven't had a chance to voice their opinions.

I, for one, believe some people are being too damn picky in their attack, and I find it hard to believe they can't find a more important issue to spend their arguing time on.

I, as an athlete, would like to see the University keep its traditional name. Most everyone I know also agrees. It seems to me we have a vast majority over the ones who want to see the name changed. I am, as my friends are, open-minded to the situation, and see the other people's point of view, but I don't feel we are misusing the name "Redmen."

I believe a concensus would show that the majority of concerned students favor no change at all. They are allowing others to make up their minds for them. I feel a poll is necessary, which could easily be conducted at the dining areas. If a vote is needed (and I realize that not all care) the concerned people should have the right to cast their ballots, before the issue is closed by a small committee representing 22,000 students! Should we let a long standing tradition be cast away without our direct consent?

Transit Talk

To the Editor:

In response to the article in Monday's Collegian entitled "Transit Service Gets Grant," by Susan Hogan, I would like to clarify a few points. First, the operations portion of the demonstration project mentioned is now planned for February to December, 1973. Secondly, the decisions as to who will be allowed to ride the busses has not yet been made. Finally, there is no assurance or indication of additional Federal assistance after the demonstration period ends.

The entire project is still very much in the planning stage, so inquiries as to routes, stops, and timetables should be held until at least November 15th, when it should be ready for public release.

Morgans?

To the Editor:

What's in a name? Today we pick a new name for our teams. How about MORGANS? The Morgan is our State Horse. The breed sprung from a Mass. horse. UMass raises prize Morgans – U.S. Panez, a UMass bred Morgan is an all-time champion stud. Imagine, a Morgan horse for team mascot. And – our athletes could be real jocks.

Must Be DC

To the Editor:

Why is it that everyone on this campus is sick? A good fifty per cent of the people I know have been afflicted with strep, pneumonia, staph, trench mouth, and/or colds. Since the most likely place for people to contract this crap is the Dining Commons, it seems to me that someone from the Board of Health should look into the situation there. Dirty silverware is one thing, but when people are dropping like flies, I think it's time to act.

Loneliness

To The Editor:

Have you ever wondered what it would be like to sit in one room all day long with little or nothing to do and few if any people to talk to? If you ever did wonder about this, you would probably end up saying to yourself, "I wouldn't want to be in that place too long." Well Northampton State Hospital is that type of place for some. The hospital patient is very often a victim of boredom.

The Northampton Volunteer program was set up to help relieve some of the loneliness of the hospital and also help residents of the hospital and outsiders to meet and make friends. Though the volunteer goes only two hours a week, this time is quite often the most precious two hours the patient has.

It's not very hard to play cards nor is it very hard to talk to someone you like, but for the resident in the Northampton State Hospital these small activities are one of the few means he has of relieving the loneliness.

If you like to talk or maybe just play cards or checkers or chess or anything then why not give a few hours to someone who will really enjoy them? If you're interested in this type of program then look through today's paper and get further information about Northampton Volunteers. If you are in a hurry then look in the Collegian Notices every Thursday.

Editorial Points

The other day, someone was remarking on the beautiful view from the Top Of The Campus. We reprint his remark verbatim, "On a clear day you can see Phillips Street."

Rose Colored Glasses?

To The Editor:

Concerning the Rose-Colored Glasses issue-I am a freshman who would like to express an opinion. I feel that the counselors who angrily wrote to the paper a few days ago were well within their rights. Having not attended the summer program yourself, you are obviously not qualified to make judgments.

I personally feel that the summer orientation program was handled well. We were given countless opportunities to see various places on campus, to discuss any problems we might be anticipating and to get to know people. At many of the discussion meetings I attended bad points about university living were brought out and those leading the discussions, in no way, tried to rationalize or cover up for these bad points. I fell that the counselors were fair, helpful, and friendly and I enjoyed the three days I spent here this summer.

Before I finish, however, I would like to make one more point concerning freshman in general. We are not the innocent babes that everyone on campus makes us out to be. We have resourcefulness, brains, a certain amount of experience, and do not forget, pride. Even if our summer orientation program had not fully prepared us for all aspects of campus life, I am sure that we would have managed to adjust without staggering difficulties. One of the worst things about being a freshman here at the university (and especially the first few weeks you're here) is that upper classmen will not let you forget that you are a freshman, that you are new and that you are unaware of the "ins and outs" of the place. I, for one, would have found it much more pleasant to simply have been treated as another person, another student here to get an education and some living experience rather than to be treated like a frightened puppy cowering in the corner of the John Quincy Adams Tower.

Stone That Smashes Unity

To The Editor:

Should the Third World have 15 seats in the Student Senate? The question is important and white students should understand the basis of the demand. There are those who would have us believe it to be a racist demand. What is racism? Who benefits from it? Why should white students fight racism?

Racism is not inate in the mind. Racist ideology does not fall from the sky. Racism is not a metaphysical feeling. Racism is the rationalization for the slaughter and exploitation of a nationality or race. Racism was the ruling class rationalization for its genocidal slaughter of the Indian peoples. Racism was the rationalization of the barbarous capitalist enterprise of trading human beings into slavery. Today the ruling class nets billions of dollars in extra profits both from direct super-exploitation of Black-people and from the destructive competition between Black and white workers. Racism is used by the ruling class to divide the working class and as such racism robs not only the Black worker but also the white worker. Thus white workers in the South are paid much less for comparable work than those in the North. Concretely here at UMass racism is evident in the inadequate representation of nationally oppressed students at all levels of power. As such it has prevented a strong unity among the students.

The political power of students can best be realized by uniting all students around common goals of quality education at a price students can afford. To obtain this goal we need lobbies in Boston and Washington. We need a Union of Massachusetts Students which can fight for students rights not only on campus but also in the legislature. Racism is the largest stumbling block in the way of this student union. It is in the interest of all students to keep tuition down, to keep rents low, and to have a high quality education. To the extent that white students fight racism is the extent of unity we will have on campus and therefore the power we will have. The demand in question is essential to forming a strong student union. Giving adequate voice to nationally oppressed students aids the development of Black-white student power and a union of students. As chairman of the YOUNG WORKERS LIBERATION LEAGUE I call for the support of the bill and extension of it's logic to all aspects of student power. Racism is not the tip of an iceberg but rather it is the stone that smashes student unity.

Four Burlington Teachers Arrested

BURLINGTON, Mass. (AP) — Four officers of the Burlington Teachers Association Wednesday were sentenced to seven days in the Middlesex County Jail after being found guilty of contempt of court for ignoring a strike ban.

Judge William E. Hays convicted the union leaders Tuesday. They were Jay Rutkowski, union president; James Long, president-elect; Chester McLaughlin, treasurer; and Louis A. Intoppa, secretary.

Hays denied a defense motion for a stay of sentence pending appeal.

An attorney for the Burlington School Committee, David Berman, had asked the court for 10-day jail sentences, and said, "a longer sentence is justified."

He said the teacher strike and picketing has cost the town $6,000 for extra police pay and for legal counsel.

Judge Hays scored the defendants for "seeking the benefits of collective bargaining without complying with the intent of the act which made a strike unlawful."

The judge said the collective bargaining law for public employes "was put on the books in 1965 and was a clear step forward for labor. It forbade a strike and provides remedies and appeals."

The strike of 470 teachers who declined to work without a contract began Sept. 20. It forced the closing of senior and junior high schools, and affected 13,500 pupils. The core of the dispute centers on wages.

Attorneys for the state Labor Relations Board asked Middlesex Superior Court Tuesday to require the Burlington School Committee to negotiate with the teachers.

A hearing is scheduled Friday before Judge Joseph S. Mitchell, Jr.

The state agency Monday ordered both sides in the dispute to begin talks, and named Harvard Prof. Archibald Cox as mediator.

But the school board contended it did not come under the jurisdiction of the Labor Relations Board. The group finally conferred with Cox and the teachers Tuesday night.

Cox said the session was "productive" and another was set for Thursday afternoon.

However, acting Superintendent Thomas Michael said before the Tuesday session, "we will attend tonight's meeting with the understanding the school committee is not waiving its jurisdiction."

SW Colloquia Suggestions Sought

By LINDA CRAVEN

This week a list of suggested colloquia is being circulated around Southwest, requesting students to indicate which ones, if any, would possibly interest them.

The list also includes a questionnaire, asking students if they would sign up for a colloquium if one were offered and also if they would like to teach one.

The list explained that a colloquium is a one-credit course which offers "an alternative to the lecture and classroom courses of the University." The colloquia also allows for "student to student education and an array of topics not usually found in the classroom," it said.

The list also cited a sixteen hour per colloquium minimum amount of time to be spent in the classroom, indicating the course could meet for two hours a week for eight weeks of a reasonable fascimile.

"Each colloquium offers one credit of Pass for successful completion." For unsuccessful completion, No Record of the colloquia is made.

The qustionnaire also urged students to offer their services tutoring students in their dorm on various subjects in which they are proficient.

The deadline for submitting colloquia proposals is October 1. They should be turned into floor representatives or to the Southwest Academic Affairs Office, located in John Adams lobby.

The subject matter of the colloquia is unlimited. The following list includes many suggestions:

Nobel Prize Not To Beg Given

OSLO, Norway (AP) — The Nobel Peace Prize will not be awarded this year, the 19th omission since the prizes began in 1901.

The five-man Nobel committee of the Norwegian parliament, announcing Wednesday that the prize would not be given, did not give any reason.

But the general view in Oslo was that the committee was unable to find a worthy candidate. The prize money, about $100,000, will be kept in the Nobel fund. The prize was last omitted in 1967.

The committee never discloses the names of the candidates, but at least one of the people proposed as a candidate was Dr. Elise Ottesen-Jensen, a Swedish family planning expert.

Other known proposed candidates were the antiwar priests Philip and Daniel Berrigan, and Archbishop Dom Helder Camara of Brazil.

In 1971 the prize went to Chancellor Willy Brandt of West Germany who was cited for his efforts at East-West reconciliation.

American winners in the postwar period were Norman Borlaug in 1970, Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., in 1964, George C. Marshall in 1953, and Emily G. Balch and John R. Mott in 1946.

The prize was established in the will of Alfred Nobel, the Swedish inventor of dynamite.

Student Volunteers Needed

A College Student Companion Therapy Program was established at the Veterans Administration Hospital, Northampton, Mass., in 1966. It was started with the realization that people with mental and emotional problems needed an understanding person to talk with in order to learn to meet and deal with people outside the hospital.

The patients are not much different from anyone else you may meet on the street. They are found to be coherent and generally quite reasonable. Many of the patients have problems which are often not apparent to the occasional visitor. Some patients are at the hospital because of an inability to keep a job, others because they cannot control their emotions in certain situations, and still others because they could not tolerate the misery of being alone in the world.

This program needs volunteers. It's only one night a week, but it means everything to the patients visited. Essentially the student is asked just to be with the patient–as a friend–to show the patient there is someone who cares about him and believes in him as an individual.

Students interested in participating in this program, should call either Jean at 546-8423 or Peggy at 546-8426.

Room To Move

Third Year Helping You

Room To Move is situated in the Student Union, down the hall from the Hatch. For the third year, Room To Move is open to students and other members of the University Community, providing friendly counseling and referrals, relevant drug education, and drug analysis.

Though in the past Room To Move has been known primarily as a drug drop-in center, the scope of the program is now much broadened to include dealing with other non-drug related problems as well. In drug-related areas, Room To Move is developing a program in conjunction with other local services for people involved with heroin usage. In addition to this new program, crisis intervention (psychedelics and barbiturates), and general drug counseling are being continued.

Drug analysis is again in operation–drugs can be analyzed qualitatively and quantitatively in a relatively short time (3-4 days) with a minimum of hassle and anonymously. Come into the center to pick up an analysis envelope and to learn the simple procedure. This service is invaluable to keep people from being poisoned or overdosed.

Drug education can be done on a personal level–relevant articles are available in the center as well as a knowledgable staff–or various drug ecucation workshops can be provided for classes, student groups and dorm members. Workshops can be scheduled with E. T. Mellor. The topics range from psychedelics to barbiturates to movement to fantasy.

One way in which the center has changed is that we can no longer serve as a crash site for passers-through and street people. Due to reduced staff and a heavy schedule, Room To Move is closed from midnight to 10 A.M. on all evenings except Friday and Saturday. An on-call number is available by dialing 545-0400 on these weekday nights for emergencies. On the weekends, Room To Move is open all night to handle emergency crises.

Room To Move hopes to become more of a two-way idea exchange site, as we need assistance from the community. If you are able to provide an occasional bed or floor space for a traveler; if you get sick or have a bad reaction to a certain drug; if you know personally of good or 'bad' area doctors, drug treatment places or other referrals; we would like to have your information to pass on to those who need it. In this way we can best serve each other and our community.

Finally, Room To Move has been aware of a large increase in the use of quaaludes and similar down drugs on campus over a period of months. We have handled many overdoses and cannot stress enough the serious risks one takes when more than two or three quaaludes have been ingested, especially when one has been drinking. Some individuals have built up incredible tolerance levels and can take as many as ten to twenty in a relatively short time, and we must remind the community that little research has been done on what the lethal dose of quaalude might be. With barbiturates, tolerance are built up so that the individual must take more to achieve the same effect–but the lethal dose remains constant for each individual regardless of the tolerance level. Quaalude is a barbiturate like drug and one cannot discount the possibility that it will act similiarly. If you are with someone who has taken quaalude with or without liquor and is unresponsive ('incoherent) to coversation and/or comatose, get him to the Infirmary immediately. Time may be crucial.

Room To Move is open 10 A.M. to 12 midnight, Monday through Thursday, Friday and Saturday, 24 hours, and Sunday from 7-12 P.M. If we can help you or you us, or if you just want to meet us, drop-in. We welcome you!!

Foreign Nationals, Note

Foreign nationals faced with the obligation to sign the Massachusetts oath statement are advised by the Foreign Student Office to take full advantage of the grace period - until November 15 - before signing the statement, and to check with the Foreign Student Office (Whitmore 239) or with Attorney Richard Hovland (Campus Center) around November 15 for further guidance if they are still unclear about the outcome of the issue.

Many foreign governments (e.g. Canada, Germany) are sensitive about their citizens' performing acts which express or imply loyalty to a government other than their own. Regardless of the substantive content to the oath, or lack of it, and its American constitutionality as recently determined by the U.S. Supreme Court, such governments may, on learning of such signature, refuse to renew passports of their nationals or otherwise revoke to such nationals their full rights of citizenship.

The question of an alternative text to the oath for foreign nationals, or a blanket exemption for them, is currently being raised with the Commonwealth Attorney General.

"Encounter" Cal Massey

The noted Black Musician, Cal Massey will be featured as the season's first "Encounter", an informal, rap session, tomorrow, Friday, September 28th at 4:00 P.M. in the Colonial Lounge, Student Union. Later in the evening Mr. Massey will lead his revue in a performance in the Campus Center Auditorium at 8 marking the first event of this season's Third World Cultural Series which is under the auspices of the Fine Arts Council in conjunction with the Third World Alliance.

Cal Massey, though not a terribly familiar name to many interested in jazz, is one of the most important figures in great Black Music. He has been in the background, so to speak, composing some of the finest music to come out of the Black experience and his tunes have been played and recorded by some of the truly "greats" of jazz including John Coltrane, Dizzy Gillespie, Archie Shepp and Charlie Parker.

Massey has served as arranger for Archie Shepp for many years and is a distinguished artist in his own right, and will lead his seventeen-piece band in a varied program of songs and dances!

The "Encounters" were organized last season by the Fine Arts Council as an adjunct to its series of visiting artists.

The purpose of the informal sessions which take the shape of rap sessions, master classes, lecture demonstrations or open rehearsals is primarily to create an open, informal atmosphere between the artist and the audiences.

The Council is attempting to break the barriers down which exists between artists and their audiences and to provide a setting for talk or explanation of the artist's approach to his chosen field. The sessions normally will take place in the Colonial Lounge on the day of the performance and are open to all without charge. Please come and learn more about Great Black Music from one of its finest and most distinguished artists.....Cal Massey.

Volunteers Needed For Children's Video Theater

A Learning Experience entitled Special Problems in Education: Children's Video Theater is being offered by the Media Center at the School of Education. The project seeks to engage children in the process of television communication by having them create, produce, and broadcast their own programs via cable television channels. Two workshops for 5th and 6th grade children will be established, one in Marks Meadow School, the other in a Holyoke school. About one 15-20 minute production per month is our goal.

School of Education students will become part of a team working with the children and their teachers on a regular basis twice a week. They will instruct the children in the technical use of portable television equipment and provide guidance in the development of the programs. Children working in the Amherst component will have the additional opportunity of using the equipment in our TV studio. Each workshop will be comprised of 12-15 children.

Some special interest or talent such as art, creative dramatics, poetry, music, etc. would be valuable though not required. Those interested in the Holyoke component should have a strong leaning toward the language arts.

Actual meeting days each week have yet to be decided with the participating schools, but this information will be available shortly. It is understood that signing up for the minimum number of modules implies a commitment to see at least one production through to its completion. (One hundred to three hundred modules may be earned.) We are most interested, however, in people who are willing to make a long-term commitment so as to help the children grow and improve their communications skills from one production to another.

For further information, call John LeBaron at 545-1598 or Louise Kanus at 545-1598 or 253-9432.

Memorial Service Tonight

By DOV GORDON

A memorial service will be held this evening for those who were murdered at Lod, Munich, and London. The service will begin at nine o'clock in the Cape Cod Lounge. An Israeli graduate student at UMass who was formerly on the Israeli Olympics team will lead the traditional Kaddish prayer. He was in Munich this year when the tragedy occurred and was a friend of those who died. The service is being organized by Concerned Jewish Students, a new organization in the five college area. Many students had expressed the feeling that something should be done in this area to mark these tragic events.

Concerned Jewish Students (CJS) is one of the new grass roots organizations which was started on the UMass campus. Last year UMass students formed Student Struggle for Soviet Jewry in Western Mass. Those organizing CJS felt that a group should be formed to deal with the additional concerns of the world Jewish community. A joint meeting of the two groups will be held this Sunday evening in the Norfolk room at 7:30.

LOUDSPEAKER THEORY & DESIGN

Aimed at both the beginner and the advanced student, this course spends the bulk of its lecture and demonstration time explaining the principle of directly reflectant sound, as exemplified by the Bose 901 speaker system.

The Bose's unique solutions to the familiar problems of woofers, tweeters and crossovers (the 901 uses nine small speakers, all of them reproducing the full audio range), speaker resonances (closely spaced speakers cause inaudible resonances), acoustical variations (the Bose comes with its own equalizer) all will be discussed.

The student is exposed in succession to each of the speakers in one of the Bose 901 systems (the complete Bose 901, at $476, includes two speaker systems and an equalizer) and the student is given an opportunity to examine the difference each speaker makes.

Music is played to acquaint the student with the life-like sound of the Bose 901, and the student is free to compare that sound with that of any other speaker in the store.

Program Hopefuls Being Interviewed

A search committee which is composed of both students and staff is presently conducting interviews of candidates for the position of Program Advisor in the Student Activities Office. These interviews will be taking place on campus starting September 28 and continuing through October 5. During these interviews it is hoped that as many students as possible will have the opportunity to meet and talk with these candidates. School of Ed Task Force Created

The UMass School of Education recently established a ten-member Governance Task Force to formulate a structure of governance which will effectively guide the School of Education. Established in August by the Dean and Provost at the suggestion of a three-man task force dealing with school issues and negotiations, the Task Force hopes to provide a flexible, efficient framework for planning school policy while assuring all groups have clear channels to express their views.

The group defines its role as one to provide a mechanism for all viewpoints to be heard and to act as a device for the School of Education to review its governance procedures. The group plans to build an efficient framework in which issues can be solved and policy debated by working under the following assumptions:

1. That most of us want to move beyond the mistrust of the present time.
2. That a new look at structures implies community willingness to become involved in the process.

They plan to gather data in the following manner:

1. Through the use of one or two measurement instruments;
2. Through written suggestions from all people within the School of Education;
3. Through open hearings.

The Governance Task Force is asking for the support of the community and its willingness to explore governance issues openly. For that reason, the group has set up the following timetable:

October 2 - All suggestions, proposals, and statements are due in the Governance Task Force Office. (Room 104, School of Education.)

October 4 - Open hearing, 11:00 a.m. to 1:00 p.m. in Room 128.

October 5 - Open hearing, 1:00 p.m. to 3:00 p.m. in Room 128.

October 24 - The Task Force will submit initial proposal for open discussion. (Marks Meadow Auditorium, 9:15 a.m. - 11:15 a.m.)

October 31 - Task Force will review comments, make appropriate revisions and present a final written proposal to the School of Education.

Members of the Governance Task Force are Anne Leiberman, chairperson; David Schimmel, Ellen Pendergast, Allan Blackmer, Lois Fischer, Juan Caban, Dean Alfange, Jr., Ron Fitzgerald, Bernice Miller, and Fred Finch.

More information may be obtained in the Governance Task Force Office in Room 104 of the School of Education or by calling 545-0268.

Amherst College Will Present Musical 'Oliver'

AMHERST, Mass.–The Amherst College Masquers will present the musical "Oliver!" this weekend. Performances will be given at 8:30 p.m. Friday (September 29) through Monday (October 4), with an additional Saturday matinee at 2:30 p.m.

"Oliver!" based on Charles Dickens' immortal novel "Oliver Twist," is a story of a hapless English waif's adventures in the London of a century ago. Remade as a musical by Lionel Bart, "Oliver!" enjoyed a record run both in London's West End and here on Broadway. This exuberant musical, recently made into a successful film, features such familiar songs as "Consider Yourself" and "Food, Glorious Food."

For this special production, the Masquers have enlisted the help of several area children. The lead character, ten-year old Oliver, will be played in alternating performances by Greg McRae and Dennis Gallaudet, both of nearby Easthampton. Fagan, the fatherly pickpocket, will be played by Amherst College senior Geoffrey Keller. The remainder of the cast includes students from Hampshire, Mount Holyoke and Smith Colleges.

"Oliver!" is the closing production of Kirby Theater's Fall Festival of Plays, all produced by the Amherst College Summer Theater under the direction of Professor of Dramatic Arts Walter Boughton.

All seats are reserved and are $2 each. Ticket information and reservations are obtained by calling or visiting the Kirby Theater Box Office, open from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m., daily, and until 9 p.m. on performance days. Kirby Theater is located just south of the intersection of Routes 9 and 116 in Amherst.

Painter Pollock To Be Featured on TV Show

The first full-length biography of American abstract painter Jackson Pollock will be discussed when the author, B.H. Friedman, meets with "Book Beat" host Robert Cromie today at 6:30 p.m. on Channel 57.

In Jackson Pollock: Energy Made Visible, art historian Friedman has painted a passionate and understanding portrait of a great artist whose life took on the qualities of myth even before his untimely death in 1956 at the age of 43.

Friedman traces Pollock's emergence from the Wyoming farm family which improbably produced five artists; through the heavy drinking begun in his teens and influenced by his prominent art teacher, Thomas Hart Benton; and through the years of bitter poverty that preceded his own success.

While writing of Pollock's dramatic and often traumatic personal life, Friedman illuminates the development of the artist's popular "drop technique," and its relationship to the abstract expressionist mode of painting that began to blossom during the same period.

Pollock is also sketched in relationship to other art world notables including his wife Lee Krasner, and painters Willem de Kooning, Philip Guston and Franz Kline.

Friedman begins his biography of Pollock with a poignant flashback to his own first meeting with the artist--who, drunk and near the end of his tether, is insulting the author's irreproachable art collection.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

☆ By SYDNEY OMARR ☆

Sagittarius is an advocate of fair play. Natives of this zodiacal sign generally are loyal, fond of learning, do plenty of traveling and can fall in love on a foreign shore. Sagittarius makes money with Capricorn, is physically drawn to Aries and often marries Gemini. Sagittarius should exercise caution in dealing with Pisces and Virgo, should be encouraged in contacts with Aries, Leo, Aquarius and Libra. The planet associated with Sagittarius is Jupiter, the number is 3. Sagittarius is the ninth sign.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Where you were footloose and fancy-free, you now have responsibility. Take care with what you say and write. Your words are apt to be analyzed, perhaps misinterpreted. Don't make promises unless you can deliver.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Money situation could depend on condition which is not close to home. Means you will have to write, to open lines of communication. Expand horizons. Don't be petty in any sense. Scorpio and Leo are in picture.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Your ability to make quick changes, adjustments come to force. Cycle is high. Mature judgment is a requisite. You handle more responsibility. Mate, partner confides money problem. You can win. Stick to plan that is original.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Some restrictions are for your own benefit. Know it and don't fight the inevitable. Ride with your tide. Taurus and Libra play prominent roles. Area of movement is smaller than usual. Use material at hand.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Some friends apply heavy handed methods. See beneath surface indications. Avoid fooling yourself. Refuse to be pressed into emotional corner. Give yourself breathing room. Basic wish can be fulfilled.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You are given opportunity to channel creative forces. Professional superior interveres in your behalf. Capricorn plays important role. Outline ambitions, goals. You can achieve if you know where you're going.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Philosophical concepts come to fore. You are able to spread influence. Write, publicize and advertise. Add to knowledge. Share aspirations; learn by teaching. What appears to be opposition may actually aid your cause.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Admiration and envy may accompany each other. Relative could be involved. Close neighbors play roles, too. Fresh view is necessary, especially where money and legal documents enter picture. Act accordingly.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Lie low. Permit mate, partner to seize initiative. Accent is on public relations, financial arrangements. Hunch pays dividends. One who taught you in past could make reappearance. Be receptive.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Guard health. Avoid extremes. Study Sagittarius message. Build on solid foundation. Eschew shortcuts. Patience now pays dividends. Element of timing is in your favor. You are due for pleasant surprise.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): What you desire and what is necessary--these may conflict. Key is willingness to make changes. Don't feel you are wedded to status quo. Young person has problem. Know it and be willing to discuss it.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Quest for security could be dreary. You require change of scenery. Probe deep for answers. Be analytical. Gemini and Virgo individuals could be helpful. Fix electrical appliances. Brighten surroundings.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are active, dynamic, original, a natural leader. In October you may travel. You will have greater opportunity for self-expression. Sagittarian could play important role. Recent emotional bruise will heal.

Cheyunski Named AP's Defensive Player

(AP) - Jim Cheyunski, a powerful lad who doesn't think twice about roaming his violent world with a cast on one hand, always figured he'd need 15 tackles, three interceptions and oh, say at least two fumble recoveries to get any national recognition.

Last Sunday all Cheyunski did was make 11 unassisted tackels and assist on seven others from his position as middle linebacker for the New England Patriots. To his way of thinking, that wasn't bad for a day's work, but he didn't expect many to notice.

So, on Wednesday, Cheyunski, a 6-1, 226 pound veteran of five years in the National Football League, admitted he was "quite surprised" when told he'd been selected as The Associated Press' Defensive Player of the Week in the National Football League.

Cheyunski was honored for his contributions last Sunday against Atlanta when the Patriots rallied with two fourth quarter touchdowns to record a 21-20 upset victory. "I thought before the game that the team seemed to be down," Cheyunski said. "A win like this will get everybody keyed up again."

The former Syracuse University standout performed his violent tasks last week with a cast protecting his broken right hand, an injury suffered in the Patriots' final pre-season exhibition.

"I'm learning to live with it," he said of the cast, adding he would switch to a lighter leather and steel cast for this Sunday's game against Washington.

Cheyunski has tried to convince team doctors to ditch the cast entirely, believing his hand is so badly broken "it's going to need surgery after the season" anyway. "I was leery at first, but after a few minutes I sort of forgot about it," he said of his experiences against Atlanta.

Cheyunski's line coach, John Myers, said his pupil is having the "best season of his career" while Patriots Coach John Mazur said his middle linebacker "did an outstanding job" against Atlanta.

"They're one hell of a football team," Mazur said of Atlanta. "We're a young one just trying to make our mark. We've got to play with extra hustle and enthusiasm just to stay in the game and Jim typifies that enthusiasm".

Also nominated for the honor were linebacker Dick Butkus of the Chicago Bears and defensive end Verlon Biggs of Washington.

Butkus was in on 15 tackles that helped the Bears pull out a 13-13 tie against the heavily favored Los Angeles Rams. Biggs blocked a field goal attempt which Mike Bass scooped up and returned for a touchdown. Among his tackles, Biggs sacked St. Louis quarterbacks twice in the Redskins' 24-10 victory.

MDC Staff vs. Harvard in the Big One Saturday

In what promises to be the sporting event of the century, the Daily Collegian staff will take on the staff of the Harvard Crimson in touch football at 9:30 AM this Saturday.

The Collegian will be led by coach Bill Ballou, a veteran of grid wars at Northbridge High. Ballou is a protege of the Mike Holovak "three yards and a cloud of dust" school of coaching and has promised that "We'll really stick it to those Ivies."

Calling signals for the Collegian will be Earle "The Pearl" Barroll, out of Brockton. Barroll, a strong armed passer, is still talked about in hushed tones throughout the restrooms of Brockton High.

Marty Kelley, who has more moves as a receiver than he has clinches as a writer, and Dan Kamal, famed for many moves both on and off the field, will be Barroll's chief targets.

Ken Sulin, at 6'9" and 120 lbs. is the team specialist in executing the famed "Statue of Liberty" play. Helping Sulin out will be Al "Goliath" Chapman, known as a picture runner.

Coach Ballou has been talking to Bill Manburg, ex-tackle for the Wellesley Walruses, in an attempt to coax this line star out of retirement but Manburg has been holding out for less money and a telephone lock to be named later.

This starry array also boasts a strong bench, and will need it to support all the weight that will be on it Saturday. Game time is 9:30 AM, on the fields next to Harvard Stadium, and good tickets are still available.

McAshan Named by AP

ATLANTA (AP) - "I think it's great. I really don't know what to say," said Georgia Tech quarterback Eddie McAshan after being told he had been named college football's Back of the Week by The Associated Press.

McAshan, the 6-foot-2, 182-pounder who guided the Yellow Jackets to an inspiring 21-16 upset victory over Michigan State Saturday, was selected for the honor Wednesday.

"I'd say it was my best game over-all. I've had better games statistically but playing Michigan State, up there...It has to be my best," said the modest 21-year-old.

McAshan, a senior from Gainesville, Fla., has had a somewhat stormy career at Tech, ranging from outstanding performances to times when he drew boos from hometowns fans. For Saturday's play, however, he drew nothing but raves.

"This game was his finest hour as a Georgia Tech quarterback," said Coach Bill Fulcher.

And opposing Coach Duffy Daugherty of Michigan State said, "We stayed shocked all day" after McAshan rifled a 77-yard touchdown bomb on Tech's first play from scrimmage.

The first black signal-caller to play on a major college team in the South proceeded to hit 16 of 26 passes for 239 yards and two touchdowns in his finest hour.

Last year against Michigan State, although Tech won 10-0, McAshan was zero for 10 in the passing department.

Kelly Calls It!

UMass 17, Harvard 10

By MARTY KELLEY

Bring on the John's and the Ivy tower!!!!

Yes the young rebels from Amherst hike down to one of the infernos of Eastern football this weekend to engage in a rare type of challenge that not only will touch the lives of some sixty football players very dearly, but the outcome may also open the eyelids of an apathetic campus to the fact that Mac's Boys aren't kidding.

"This is the type of challenge our young men need," says a confident Dick MacPherson. "If we're to challenge anyone in New England this year we've got to go to Soldier's Field and do a job on them (Harvard Crimson). It's going to be one exciting football weekend in Cambridge".

But what Mac really doesn't know or realize is the fact that it's going to be more interesting than it will be exciting. Just how good is the young band of hustlers and hulks who literally remantled the UMaine Juggernaut this past weekend. Without a doubt with the ultimate of pressure and the rest of psychological forces that inhibit a football game, there's no question, the eyes of the Ivies and the retinas of the Holy Crosses and the BC's will be focussed on Cambridge. This one is going to be a biggy.

As I look in eager anticipation for this fiasco, I want to go on record to myself for apologizing to Peil Pennington. I seriously thought that Peil left his shoulder back at Nickerson Field last year. I didn't think that Landry's protege would ever come back from that costly shoulder separation against a distraught Terrier defense that watched helplessly as the big guy from New Canaan, Ct., riddled the hosts for over 230 yards via the air in the first half alone.

Well, Peil, after viewing the Maine exhibit all I can say is, nice to have you back. But there was a time last weekend where it looked like BU revisited when Peil staggered slowly to his feet after bringing the whole state of Maine down to the one foot line. The worst of it was a slight headache (when it looked as though the season hung in effigy with a felled Pennington) which the Patriotic Pennington shrugged off with a "hell, it should have been a touchdown".

OK, Peil, now go get your Excedrin, you deserved it. He did and promptly sat out most of the second half in favor of "Trap". Oh, by the way, that's youthful Mark Tripucka for those of you who don't understand the UMass "jockular" lingo.

Pennington will be a key as well as getting Metallo wide but defense is the name of the game and that will tell the tale of the Harvard upset. But before I begin to praise these seven sophs on defense, I've got to expose a very bad habit that a friend of mine has not been able to shake during his very productive career at Massachusetts. His willingness to can the habit, and believe me it's a nasty one, will be a major key in (I guess) the Minuteman's assertion to the number two slot in New England.

The culprit in the hot seat is wide receiver Steve Schubert. Now I don't know whether it's psychological or not but Steve has a tendency to beat the pack down the sideline only to precariously dislodge himself from the ball at the goaline. He did it against BC last year that could have broken the game wide open, he performed the feat with relative consistency against Cornell, and was up to his usual against Maine.

But still Steve is rated one of the best in New England at wide receiver and as coach Mac said yesterday, "I'm more than happy to have him out there".

So am I Mac, but you and I both know that our "Stevie" has a habit that has to be chopped before gametime Saturday. The Ivies won't give him a second chance.

I'm sure Schubert will come through in fine form against the big guys. As Mac said, "I don't mind him dropping em' when we're way ahed, he'll save the touchdowns for the big games. Let's hope so.

And now the defense. Save a little for Harvard will you fellas.

When you look at Paul Hanse, Bobby Parrott, and John Healy you wonder if they shave. That's how young they look. (Don't worry about Earl Brown, he's got the best burns on the club and believe me he does look mean.) But if youth has anything to say about the way they play forget it. They've matured. Parrott and Healy are perhaps the best athletes on the team and Paul has been waiting for a pro backfield to retire (Keating, O'Neil) for his shot. And Earl gave Jack his basketball and he's happy, Mac's happy, and from an odd turn of events coach Larry Pasquale has assembled a renegade backfield that could be the final whistle for Harvard.

Defense will be the key, Crazy Winslow and Steamroller Edwards will have a field dav and my man Steve will get to the end zone a lot quicker than the Harvard defense.

With a 17-10 win over the John's and the Ivy tower successfully scaled old Metawampe will wish his Minutemen the best for they'll now chase the Eagles and with a new name a new tradition will be founded without Metawampe's blessing.

Chisox Slipping As Wilbur Loses Again

CHICAGO (AP) - John Mayberry slammed a two-run homer in the first and scored after his third-inning triple to launch the Kansas City Royals to a 4-2 victory Wednesday, virtually dousing the Chicago White Sox' pennant hopes in the American League West.

Mayberry, who also cracked a pair of singles in a four-for-four batting day was the biggest nemesis to Wood, 24-16, last a winner Sept. 10.

Roger Nelson, 10-6, held the Sox scoreless until the ninth after Dick Allen doubled across Jim Lyttle in the first inning. Iyttle doubled in the ninth and scored on Carlos May's triple.

Mayberry's 24th homer followed a walk to Paul Schaal in the first. With two out in the third, Mayberry tripled and scored on Lou Piniella's single. Piniella stole second and scored on Carl Taylor's single for a 4-1 Kansas City lead.

Wilbur Wood failed a sixth time in his quest for his 25th victory, the Sox dropped 4-1/2 games behind the division-leading Oakland A's who were scheduled to play a twi-night doubleheader against Minnesota at Oakland.

The White Sox now have six games remaining, all on the road.

Detroit's Mickey Stanley is out sliding into the glove of Carlton Fisk in a game between the Tigers and the Red Sox last week. Likewise, the Tigers keep sliding in and out of a first place tie with the Red Sox. It'll be up to the Sox to put the Tigers out of the race once and for all when they meet in Detroit next week.

Red Sox Hold 1st

By BOB ESTELLE

Yesterday, in Boston, the Red Sox hung tough and beat the Milwaukee Brewers 7-5 in a wild, exciting game. Reliever Bill Lee won the game as Ken Brett took the loss.

The scoring started in the bottom of the second when Brett issued walks to Reggi Smith and Carlton Fisk. Dwight Evans singled in Smith and, after a walk to Doug Griffin, Fisk scored on Lynn McGlothen's ground out.

The top of the third, however, was a disaster area for the Bosox. With one out, McGlothen walked Ron Thebald, Ellie Rodriguez reached on an infield hit, Joe Lahoud walked, and after Theobald scored on George Scott's ground out force play, Johnny Briggs put one into the bullpen in right-center to make the score 4-2.

The Red Sox showed what they are made of in the fifth and sixth innings by scoring a total of five runs to ice the game. In the fifth, Tommy Harper walked, Luis Aparcio singled, and Carl Yastrzemski singled home Harper before Reggie Smith doubled off the left field wall to score Aparicio and Yaz. The two in the sixth came on a triple by Aparicio which scored Griffin and Lee, both of whom had singled.

The Brewers managed to score one more run in the ninth inning. With one out, Rick Auerback singled to left. A walk to pinch hitter John Felske prompted Sox manager Eddie Kasco to replace Lee with Bob Bolin who gave up a run scoring single to pinch hitter Dave May. This worried the Fenway Faithful. But the Faithful weren't disappointed as Bolin got Rodriguez to end the game with a double play ground ball to Aparicio.

Louis Wants 1 +

BOSTON (AP) - Luis Aparicio, confident of playing in the world series once again, gave the old folks another boost Wednesday in sparking the Boston Red Sox to a vital 7-5 victory over the lowly but pesky Milwaukee Brewers.

Now 38 and completing his 17th season in the major leagues, Aparcio collected three hits, including a decisive two-run triple, as the Red Sox came from behind to preserve their lead in the tight American League East.

"I feel good, just the same as always at this stage of the season," the slick little shortstop said. "Maybe I get a couple of hours extra sleep now and then, but what the heck-I have all winter to rest."

Manager Steals Show

By BILL BALLOU

Dick MacPherson revealed the name of the true hero of Saturday's 37-0 triumph over Maine at the Varsity M club luncheon yesterday and it wasn't Peil Pennington. And it wasn't Paul Metallo. And it wasn't Ed McAleney.

It was Dick Page.

Last week Page had such a tough time finding highlights from the Cornell scrimmage that he told MacPherson he would have to do the film himself if the Maine results were as bad. Mac, scared of nothing that wears a helmet but no Cecil B. DeMille, was going to have no part of this movie business. Thus, a 37-0 shutout over Maine and a very easy time for Dick Page.

This edition of the Munchclub was supposed to feature MacPherson and a few of his men to rehash Maine and give everyone a good idea of what to expect from Harvard. This they did. But the show stealer yesterday was not MacPherson, or Tom Mullen, or even frosh coach Bill Maxwell, but that Gunga Din of the gridiron, the team's manager.

Richard Moulon was this guy's name and his routine would have done justice to Henny Youngman. He told how he became a manager: "I read about an opening for a manager in the Collegian, and the next day I went down and saw coach Kelley (then the freshman football coach) and talked to him for a while. I got the job. No one else applied."

He told one on MacPherson: "During practice one of the jobs of the managers is to blow an airhorn at a set time to let the players know it's time for them to go somewhere else. It's a great job. Yesterday Coach MacPherson even got to blow the horn himself."

And to close out he let the audience in on THE great moment in a manager's life; "It's when I get to run out on the field after the kickoff and pick up the kicking tee."

It was almost a great day for the Collegian too. I almost won the door prize. The guy sitting across from me (Gerry Redmond) was only one digit away from the winning number...It's the closest I ever came.

Healy and McAleney Named

John Healy was named sophomore of the week in the Yankee Conference and teammate Ed McAleney, also a sophomore, was named to the ECAC team of the week as a result of their performances in UMass' opening 37-0 victory over Maine on Saturday.

Healy, a 6'1 defensive back from Westborough, Mass., intercepted two passes from Maine quarterback Rick Porter, with his first theft early in the third quarter setting up Paul Metallo one yard touchdown plunge.

Healy was the top receiver on last year's freshman team, but was converted to the defensive secondary during spring practice. He is also a catcher on the varsity baseball team.

McAleney, a 6'4 240 pound defensive end from So. Portland, Maine where he was a high school all-American, led the UMass pass rush that virtually shut off the Maine air routes and anchored the line against the run that held Maine to 44 yards.

McAleney also set up a Metallo one-yard burst in the fourth quarter when he literally took the ball out of Prior's hands on the Black Bear 20 yard line.

Team Canada Protests

MOSCOW (AP) - The final game of the hockey series between Team Canada and Russia could be cancelled if a dispute over referees which arose Wednesday is not settled, a Canadian spokesman announced.

Canadian Coach Harry Sinden termed the situation "serious" and added "There could be no eighth game."

Canada and Russia are tied with three victories each and one game tied with the final match of the series scheduled for Thursday night.

The problem came up Wednesday when Sinden and assistant coach John Ferguson and director Alan Eagleson were summoned to a meeting with Soviet officials. Sinden said the Russians were discussing the problem themselves and a decision may be announced Wednesday night.

Eagleson said the Canadians will not accept two West German referees for the crucial final game and left the Russians to make up their minds.

Following Sunday's game officiated by the two West Germans, Josef Ompalla and Franz Baader, the Canadians called the referees "incompetent" and requested they not be assigned to any further games.

Women Eligible For Varsity

NEW YORK (AP) - Women will be allowed to participate in varsity athletics at the discretion of member schools, the Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference voted Wednesday at its 36th annual schedule making convention.

The ECAC also approved post-season tournaments in soccer, basketball and football for schools in divisions two and three on a regional basis with four teams competing in each region.

What a Way to Grow!

DETROIT (AP) — Sanshiro Miyamoto was willing to go to any lengths to be a Detroit policeman, but in the end he couldn't go far enough.

Miyamoto, who put himself through near-medieval tortures trying to stretch his frame to the minimum 5-feet-7 required by the Police Department, has given up about one-quarter inch from his goal.

Miyamoto, 30, began his program last April and spent over five months being pulled by his heels by his wife with his hands tied to a wall, sleeping in traction and a neck brace, and being bonked on the head with a board-again by his obedient wife-in hopes of raising a substantial bump.

All it got him was about 1-3/4 inches, a backache, a headache and a decision to stick with his tool and die trade.

"F Robby" Trade Damned O's

After the 1965 season the Cincinnati Reds committed an act of evil by banishing their prize possession Frank Robinson to a supposedly inferior American League. It was his hell in baseball land after a poor season.

Cincinnati most likely had a short memory. For in 1961 Robinson was a savior to the Reds, leading them to their first National League pennant since God knows when. He was the N.L.'s MUP that year.

But let it be said that justice was done. The Reds have been repenting for their sin, ever since the deportation. Though possessing a great deal of talent during the post-Ribonson years, they've only nailed down one crown since '61--that in 1970 (I'll get back to the '70 revival later).

Meanwhile F. Robby saw no satan in his fateful shipment to the A.L. In fact he became the molding force in the Baltimore success story.

Robinson, the American League MVP and Triple Crown winner of 1966, led the Orioles to a championship and a series sweep over Koufax, Drysdale, and the Dodgers.

The next two years were disaster. As Baltimore pitching went sour, the Orioles just couldn't seem to groom a contender.

But Baltimore restored its authority over the next two seasons as did Frank Robinson. The Birds won the flag in '69, only to bow in the World Series to the Miracle Mets.

However, the best was yet to come. And the sweet Robinson revenge did come a year later when the Orioles got into the series with--Guess Who? The Big Red Machine, the new nickname given to his former mates.

Let it be said that justice was duplicated against the sinful RedLegs as the Orioles demolished them in five games. The Red Revival was crushed with bird seed.

But this story doesn't have a happy ending. For Frank Robinson was wronged again. He helped Baltimore to another championship, but didn't fare too well in the series as Pittsburgh won in seven games.

That probably didn't have much to do with what happened. But for reasons that still seem puzzling to this day, the Orioles no longer had a need for Robinson--the super star who had contributed to four pennants during his six years. He was traded to the LA Dodgers for a handful of unknowns.

It now becomes apparent that the Orioles, just as the Reds were before them, are now dammed for their grave sin. Baltimore is obviously not the same ball club. Their heart and soul is gone.

Not even the best pitching staff that baseball has ever seen, can bless them with a pennant in their early post-Robinson years. Right now in the home stretch, they're struggling to stay in contention in a crazy American League Eastern Division.

The Oriole doom becomes more crystal clear everyday now. Baltimore hats have experienced a sad famine all year--Perhaps Mr. Robinson could have at least salvaged a civision crown for them. But without Robinson, the BoSox or the Tigers, not the Orioles, are the logical heirs to the throne.

Let it be said that justice will be done to the Orioles this year. And about the worst thing that could happen to them in the near future (and don't bet against it) would be to win another American League Championship.

Total justice would come to pass if in that World Series, the Orioles would b outclassed by the National League challenger with Robinson wielding a deadly bat.

But in order for that to happen, either the Dodgers would have to put together a supernatural year, or trade him to Pittsburgh.

Fac-Sen OK's Ed. School P/F Another Year

Faculty Senator James Matlack, left, asked Chancellor Bromery about the use of the loyalty oath and its effect on the University. Bromery said that his power was limited, since the University was a state institution. (MDC photos by Kevin Mack)

By JIM DEMPSEY

The Faculty Senate granted the School of Education approval yesterday to continue to assess the pass/fail grading system.

This would extend the study of this method for one more year and also provide for an evaluation of other grading alternatives available, including the credit/no record method. This would involve a thorough review of non-traditiol grading practices used by other universities.

At their first official meeting of the year, the Faculty-Senate also passed a motion to establish an Ad Hoc Committee to study the practice of on-campus recruitment. The Committee's task will be to recommend policies governing these student recruitment practices. Three faculty members, two undergraduate students, and one graduate student will be appointed to the Committee, whose report is expected by mid-December.

Earlier in the meeting Chancellor William Bromery revealed that results of a summer investigation to determine the effect of on-campus recruitment, should be known within a few weeks.

The Chancellor went on to speak of his hope for a University Health Plan. The feasibility of such a plan is expected to be looked into by a professional health planner. He did however, acknowledge the fact that funds could be a limiting factor - because of this year's budget cuts.

The School of Education was granted Senate approval to continue with its system of pass/fail grading. This would extend the study of this system into its second year and also provide for an assessment of other grading alternatives available, including the credit/no record method.

In other business...several of the Student Senate's intentions for the next few weeks were outlined by President Larry Ladd. The Senate will be working for the establishment of a Committee on Service Departments to set up a fee structure for faculty members for use of certain campus facilities. Currently, such services as the Campus Center, the Collegian, WMUA and others are provided for and paid for solely by students.

A report dealing with the elimination of the Rhetoric requirement will soon be released, by the Academic Affairs Committee of the Student Senate.

Another important issue to be discussed will be the greater participation of students in personnel decisions.

Finally, in early October there will be two meetings - one of them with Governor Sargent - of the UMass Trustees to discuss the University budget, tuition, and tenure. Rumors indicate that there may be a bureaucratic shakeup, with Sargent presenting several reform recommendations.

Faculty Senator James Matlack questioned the continued use of the loyalty oath, hoping that an effort will be made to bring to people's attention "the kind of damage that oath does to the free process of a university." He stressed his desire to have the issue brought before the Massachusetts Legislature for action.

Chancellor Bromery pointed out that his power in this matter is strictly limited, since it is the Attorney General who orders the use of the loyalty oath.

The issue of tenure also came up during yesterday's meeting. A report by the Tenure and Grievance Committee will be presented in two weeks, regarding policies regulating tenure in the future. It will not represent radical departures from past practices but there will be some important changes.

Senate Election Results

Editor's Note: These are the complete results from last night's Student Senate Elections. The only ones not called in were Fraternities, Sororities, and JFK Middle. All others not reported are places where no one filed nomination papers, and there will be a special election for them as soon as possible. An asterisk (*) next to a Senator elect's name indicates that he/she is an incumbent. The new UMass team name is 'Minutemen'.

Program Council Planning Ahead

By BUFFY SPENCER

The Campus Center Program Council is sponsoring a variety of activities this year in the Campus Center-Student Union complex. The Council is funded by the Campus Center tax. One of the main objectives of the organization, according to president Paul Carchidi, is getting students to use the Campus Center and the Student Union.

Anyone can become a member of the Program Council simply by going to the committee meetings. The meetings are held bi-weekly and are listed in the Collegian. Students are welcome to initiate their own programs through the Council if there is a group, speaker, or movie they would like to see.

The Council's Homecoming plans include the Black theatre group: Black on Black, on Friday night, and rock concert in the Student Union Ballroom on Saturday night. A contract with the Boston group Swallow should be completed soon for the concert. Presently the social committee is trying to get the Cage back for monthly rock concerts.

On Octobec18th the Council will be sponsoring Gahan Wilson, cartoonist for Playboy and the National Lampoon, speaking and showing an exhibit of some of his unpublished material.

The Program Council, working with the DVP, has made tentative arrangements for sponsoring a talk by Norman Mailer. They are also working on presenting the Boston cast of Godspell here for one night in April or May.

The movie committee of the Program Council is currently presenting four film series. These are the Director's Series, the Science Fiction-Horror Series, the Erotic Arts series, and the Popular Features Series. The latter seeks to bring nearly all current, popular films to UMass.

Other committees include an art committee which is responsible for print sales and Student Union art exhibits, a recreation committee which runs the chess, bridge, and table tennis clubs, and a special events committee. The Program Council also runs the music listening room in the Campus Center and the Crafts Center in the Student Union.

Work Study Improves

By MARK VOGLER

Despite a slight decrease in the number of students employed and a reduction in the funds alotted, the Work Study Program here at the University continues to function smoothly-perhaps much better than in past years Whitmore Administration Sources claim.

"No, we're not doing anything different," Gerry Miller, Financial Aid Staff Assistant, said in an interview late this week.

"Basically we are doing the same type of thing that we've done with work study people in the past. But thanks to a questionnaire that we distributed last spring, we are more able to match up the student with his capabilities and interests. Because of this, the number of students that we've mismatched has been drastically reduced."

Miller credits the questionnaire for eliminating several administrative problems. By reviewing questionnaires during the spring and over the summer, the Financial Aid Staff avoids staging 500 interviews during the first three weeks of the academic year.

The students also get the benefit of starting work right away. And the departments are contacted ahead of time, thus allowing them to know in advance how many students they will be employing.

While Miller admits that the questionnaire that was put into effect last spring does make administrative matters much easier, he pointed out that the primary objective of its useage was to assign students to jobs that are more appealing to them.

"We look at the student first to see if he can get some benefit out of his job. Preferably we like to put a student in an area in which he has worked before, or something connected to his major, or hopefully something that would match up with his background.

"Pleasing the students is one of the goals that I'm trying to see through. And surprisingly, I've only made a mistake in very few cases. I am going to come back with this questionnaire and attempt to compare results some time this year."

Miller stated that there were more students eligible for Work Study than the program's funds could support.

"Yes, there are about a thousand more people who could qualify for Work Study. My only regret is that we can't employ more. Our policy is to employ as many people as our funds will allow."

Christian Forum In N.H. To Be Held This Weekend

The First Annual Five-College Fall Weekend will be held this weekend at the Monadnock Bible Conference Center in Jaffrey, N.H. About ninety students from the Five-College area will participate in a three day schedule of worship, teaching, interaction, and seminars dealing with issues and problems facing the modern Christian. Recreational activities will include climbing and hiking on Mt. Monadnock and other outdoor events.

Dick Purnell, from Trinity Evangelical Divinity School in Deerfield, Illinois, will be the main speaker at the conference. Mr. Purnell has worked on the staff of Campus Crusade for Christ since 1961 at Harvard University, colleges in California and Arizona, and several locations in Asia. Also on the program will be John Fittz, UMass director of Campus Crusade for Christ.

The UMass contingent will leave from the Baptist Church (across from the Newman Center) at 5 P.M. today. Anyone desiring further information about the conference should call 549-0629.

In the story in Rents and Fees in Wednesday's Collegian Bob Allen clarified his statement that the Woman Janitors in Sylvan carry a full work load, and are only prohibited from doing heavy physical work.

Marathon Sets A Goal For New Ideas

By PAT ROBERTS

"A platform for exchanging and discussing new, pertinent and innovative ideas in the field of education" will be the objective of the School of Education Marathon of this fall. This is according to Chuck Schwahn, Coordinator of this fall's Marathon.

There will be many different varieties of learning experiences available for anyone wishing to attend. Among these are workshops, seminars, lectures, group discussions, simulations and film festivals.

All School of Education classes will be suspended for the extent of the Marathon. Any student of the University of Massachusetts may receive credit in the form of modules upon attendance at events of his choice.

Past Marathons have attracted participants from across the United States as well as from many foreign countries to the UMass campus.

The Marathon has grown from a one day, 10-hour schedule to a full week, 60-hour schedule of events with attendance figures reaching 5000 people. Five to twelve different experiences are usually scheduled at any one time, with the program beginning early in the morning and continuing into the late evening.

The dates for this event have been set for November 13-17. A preliminary schedule will be available as of October 25.

As stated by Schwahn, "the School of Education is committed to community service and the Marathon is one important expression of that commitment." For more specific and detailed information, you should contact Chuck Schwahn, Marathon Coordinator, School of Education, University of Massachusetts, Phone: (413) 545-1585.

Police Report Recommends Training, Expansion

By BRIAN COYNE

The Amherst Police Department released a study yesterday outlining a plan to improve the department and calling for the implementation of such measures as the construction of a new police facility, expansion of the size of the force, and the establishment of an in-service training center.

The study was made by John H. Herder Associates of Hamden, Connecticut, and was funded by grants of $9,000 from the federal government and $1,000 from the Town of Amherst. The stated goals of this project were: 1) the improvement of the service offered by the department; 2) the development of a more flexible response through optimum use of specialization within the department; 3) the planning of an ordered growth in manpower and specialized training to allow greater manpower utilization.

To quote the report on its purpose, "The felt need at the time was for a plan to help the department meet the challenges of a growing community dominated by educational institutions. A plan was needed to avoid what otherwise might be simply traditional solutions - solutions applicable perhaps to another place and another time but not necessarily meaningful in Amherst."

Two major products resulted from the report. One was the findings and suggestions of a Law Enforcement Study Committee composed of members of the Amherst community and the other being "A Plan for Police Service in Amherst," stimulated by the discussions of the committee and based on a management survey of the department taken during the study. The report emphasizes the need for a new type of police officer. Creative and continuing in-service training is considered the foundation of a new perspective.

The Law Enforcement Study Committee was instituted by the Amherst Town Manager to help in the study. It was composed of ten Amherst citizens representing the cross-section of students, racial and ethnic groups, members of the academic community and community leaders one finds in the town.

The areas the committee focused on were the size and composition of the police department, recruitment of policemen, the training and education they receive and the arrest procedures and due process.

The committee discussed the inclusion of more minority group members within the force and the need of expanding the number of policemen. On recruiting policies, one member said, "The democratization of the police force will be aided by drawing recruits from all sectors of the population."

To improve arrest procedures, the group offered the possibilities of unique local laws and the establishment of a hometown court designed specifically for the problems encountered in a college town. The subject of police discretion also came up for discussion.

Committee members touched on the importance of an education beyond the level of high school for the police and the inclusion of training in psychology, human relations and adolescent behavior. The resources of the university were mentioned as open for department use.

As a final recommendation, the committee felt there should be a place where citizen complaints can be aired, possibly a civilian review board.

The relationship between the campus and town police departments came under consideration in the report. The feeling of the report was that it appeared likely that under the direction of the new security director, David Johnston, the campus police department will move away from the close relationship it has enjoyed with the Town police in the past. The report expressed its regret at this development.

When asked about this at the press conference yesterday, both Amherst Chief of Police Francis Hart and Johnston denied this was happening.

Alternatives suggested in the report were the consolidation of campus and town forces of possibly a joint headquarters facility.

Again, the report urged the utilization by the Town force of the law enforcement courses given at the university.

A summary of the recommendations made by the report follows:

1. Continued maintenance of close relationship between university security force and the Town police.
2. Increase manpower to eighteen patrolmen. There are presently fifteen patrolmen.
3. Broaden scope of duties of the Chief of Police to include full-time direction of the department and public relations.
4. Assign the Deupty Chief to position of "Night Chief" on the evening shift.
5. Broaden scope of duties of the lieutenant to include day-to-day administration of departmental activities.
6. Continue to use sergeants as "street supervisors"
7. Introduce timed complaint record card.
8. Seperate the dispatch function from the reception function and relocate the dispatcher away from the public area of headquarters.
9. Begin planning for a new police headquarters.
10. Expand role of auxiliary policemen in patrol and traffic assignments.
11. Establish community service officer program.
12. Establish the position of police agent. He would be a professional officer with both police experience and a college education. He would be used in police jobs of a very sensitive nature requiring imagination and responsibility.
13. Establish in-service training center.
14. Continue development of a program budget.
15. Begin planning a computerized police information center. The computer at UMass runs twenty-four hours a day and could be open for department use periodically.

5 Villages Seen For Amherst

By STEVE SECHE

The Select Committee on Goals last night called for the Establishment of five villages with open buffer zones between them all connected by a free or low cost bus system in order to control the direction of the future growth and development of the Town of Amherst.

The preliminary recommendations for the use of Amherst's land and resources were presented at an open meeting last night in Mahar Auditorium by the three task forces created by the Amherst Board of selectmen.

In order to moderate growth within the Town of Amherst which would improve the qualitative aspects of the town, five seperate villages would be established: North Amherst, Cushman, East Amherst, South Amherst and Hampshire Village.

Development outside of the perimeter of these designated areas would be discouraged "by whatever means possible", most likely, through a revision of the Town's present zoning laws. The resulting picture shows the five villages, and Amherst itself, serving as the commercial and civic focal points, separated by open land.

The preservation of these buffer zones between villages, as well as other selected sites, was the goal of task force two, which recommended that the Town "should adopt an active program of preservation and acquisition in order to save unprotected space."

Specifically, the task force felt it was especially important to preserve "some working farms and orchards"; the Holyoke Range to the south, as well as other open lands. To implement this program, the task force recommended that the Town "actively purchase developable land between villages", towards an eventual goal of conservation land, small parks, picnic facilities, and nature trails.

The committee recognized that the "village" concept, which it fully endorsed, might lead to "some higher densities in the villages than townspeople are presently used to", but according to their studies, "the alternative is suburban sprawl".

The final task force, on Traffic and Transportation, recommended a study of the feasibility of "either free or very low cost bus transportation" serving Amherst and the surrounding areas.

It was recommended that the Town maintain a liasion with the University in this field, particularly since the Department of Transportation has just recently granted UMass $750,000 to develop an experimental, free bus service for the town.

Further plans by this committee were in the field of pedestrian malls, new parking garages, and an "enhancement of the town Common and adjacent commercial areas by progressive reduction in number and/or visibility of auto traffic in the immediate area."

Following the presentation of each of the task forces recommendations, questions were accepted from the very small audience which had filtered in to Mahar for the meeting.

WMPIRG Calls For Undergrad Town Meeting

Student organizers of the Western Mass. Public Interest Research Group (WMPIRG) have announced that a "town" meeting for undergraduate students to establish a planning group here at the University will be held Thursday, October 6 in the Commonwealth Room of the Student Union.

According to the WMPIRG By-Laws, students at each of the participating schools (Mount Holyoke, Hampshire, Williams, and Springfield Colleges besides the University) must organize a local board whose primary functions will include developing research projects, recruiting and organizing students to undertake these projects or to do their own, arranging for faculty to participate, guiding and arranging credit for student projects, educating the University Community in public interest affairs, and, most importantly, electing representatives from its membership to serve on the WMPIRG Board of Directors.

The Board of Directors (WMPIRG is a non-profit corporation) will formulate policy, direct the hired professional staff, encourage students at other institutions to organize groups, and allocate other resources. Representation on the Board from the various schools is provided for on a proportional basis according to enrollment. The University is entitled to fill four slots on the Board and each of the other four schools are entitled to one seat each.

Up to this point affairs have been handled by student volunteers who had expressed an interest in establishing and supporting WMPIRG at the University. The corporation itself has been managed by an interim Board of Directors who will relinquish their positions as soon as elections have been held on the various campuses.

This Thursdays meeting will be open to all in the University community and chaired by a neutral party. Undergraduate students who wish to have a voice in the operation and future of WMPIRG are encouraged to attend and to run for any of the positions that will be determined that evening.

In The Nation And The World

Japan And China Establish Normal Ties

PEKING (AP)-China is ready to establish diplomatic relations with Japan, opening the door to a new era and ending 78 years of hostility between East Asia's most populous nations.

Premier Chou En-Lai announced the decision Thursday night at a banquet rounding off his summit talks with Kakuei Tanaka, the Japanese prime minister who dared to step into negotiations his predecessors had shunned.

"We are going to end the abnormal state of affairs which has existed up to now," Chou said.

Agreements by Peking and Tokyo ends their state of war and goes beyond the relationship of consultation set up by Chou and President Nixon last February. There still are no formal diplomatic relations between Washington and Peking. The Nixon administration continues to deal with diplomats representing Chiang Kai-shek-an archcriminal in the eyes of the Communist government that ousted him from the mainland in 1949. But the United States has made it clear it considers Taiwan to be part of China.

A communique Friday may specify just how Japan proposes to treat Taiwan. The expectations is that this statement by Chou and Tanaka will rupture the diplomatic relations with Taiwan that Japan has maintained for 22 years.

Taiwan is crucial to a Tokyo-Peking understanding. Japan ruled the island for many years beginning in 1894, after a defeat of China in war. Japan has about $4 billion invested there and is the island's major trading partner.

The success of the Chou-Tanaka negotiations had been forecast Wednesday when Mao Tse-tung received the Japanese leader for an hour's tete-a-tete. Then, Thursday night, Tanaka tendered Chou a glittering banquet in the Hall of the People.

Tanaka said that normal relations are only the first step, and that he will try his best to continue the trend of rapprochement.

Chou said: "The termination of the state of war and the normalization of relations between China and Japan-the realization of the long cherished wishes of the Chinese and Japanese peoples-will open anew chapter in the relations between the two countries and make a positive contribution to the relaxation of tension in Asia and to safeguarding the world peace."

He noted that China and Japan have fundamentally different social systems.

"However, he added, "the fruitful talks between our two sides prove that, so long as both sides have confidence, problems between two countries can be solved through consultation on an equal footing."

Tanaka, 54, is the first Japanese prime minister to set foot on mainland China since World War II, when the allies including Chiang Kai-shek defeated Japan.

Examine Crime Increase

WASHINGTON (AP)-Serious crime in the nation was up 1 per cent for the first six months of this year compared to the same period in 1971, the Justice Department announced Thursday.

It was the smallest rate of increase reported by the FBI since it began issuing quarterly reports 12 years ago, the department said.

Atty. Gen. Richard G. Kleindienst said the increase rate for the January-June period was 1 per cent for both violent and property crimes. During the same period in 1971, the overall crime increase was 7 per cent over the previous year period, with violent crime up 11 per cent and property crime up 6 per cent, he said.

The figures giving the percentages of increase or decrease in crime for the six months, compared to the same period the previous year, were in the FBI's uniform Crime Report, which is compiled by voluntary reports from 5,606 local, county and state law enforcement agencies.

Sen. George McGovern, Democratic presidential candidate, said in a statement that the statistics tell only part of the story, that for every reported crime there are two that are unreported.

Kleindienst said in a speech prepared for Thursday night delivery in Los Angeles that the spreaing use of data processing is increasing the reporting of crimes.

The FBI report divides serious crime into two categories-violent, which includes murder, forcible rape, robbery and aggravated assault; and property, which includes burglary, larceny over $50 and auto theft.

Three Weary POWs Finally Come Home

COPENHAGEN (AP)-Three American pilots released from North Vietnam prison camps flew home Thursday night and one said the American people must bear the "responsibility" for bringing the remaining 400 men out of captivity.

Relaxed after a lunch on steak and schnapps and a visit to a royal palace changing of the guard, Lt. j.g. Mark Gartley, Lt. j.g. Norris Charles and Maj. Edward Elias left Copenhagen for New York after their first hours outside the Communist world. They had arrived in Denmark on Thursday morning from Moscow en route home from Peking and Hanoi with their antiwar chaperones.

A Defense Department spokesman in Washington said arrangements had been made for a team of military officials, including physicians, to meet the pilots upon their arrival at Kennedy Airport in New York.

The remark about responsibility came from Charles. It was the toughest, most politically oriented statement to come out of an airport news conference but none of the three pilots would endorse a U.S. presidential candidate or offer criticism or support for American tactics in Vietnam.

"It was my belief and the belief of the men with whom I lived in Hanoi," said Charles, "that if the war is terminated their return home will be certain. I have committed myself to do everything in my power to work for their return home."

Addressing himself to Americans, Charles said: "I pondered the question who can help me or is responsible for bringing these men home. It dawned upon me that it was you, the American people. If you really want to end the war you can do it.

"I and some of the men I left have a great deal of faith and hope in you, the American people. I call on you to help me in helping to bring these men home."

Charles had been in prisoner of war camps for nearly a year.

Army Belatedly Clears 167 Blacks

WASHINGTON (AP) — After 66 years, the Army Thursday cleared the records of 167 black soldiers dishonorably discharged for a frontier shooting in Brownsville, Tex. that resulted in what the Army says is the only documented case of mass punishment in its history.

Declaring it a gross injustice, Secretary of the Army Robert F. Froehlke ordered the discharges changed to honorable for the 167 members of the 1st Battalion, 25th Infantry, an all-Negro unit.

President Theodore Roosevelt ordered the men punished in 1906 for their "conspiracy of silence" in refusing to testify against their fellow soldiers during investigation of the shooting.

Officials said no attempt will be made to determine if any of the men are still alive and noted that the action rules out any back pay and allowances for their descendants.

A Pentagon spokesman said that while Froehlke's action won't do the men any good now, the "secretary felt the record should be cleared and did so."

An Army spokesman said the case was brought to Froehlke's attention during a review of administrative and judicial policies.

The spokesman said this is believed to be the only documented case of its kind, in which an entire company was punished.

According to history books, at about midnight, Aug. 13, 1906, some 16 to 20 armed men rode on horseback through the streets of Brownsville, firing into the homes of whites. One resident was killed and several others injured.

The shooting followed a fight between a black soldier of the 1st Battalion and a white merchant, which resulted in the town being placed off-limits for the battalion, quartered in nearby Ft. Brown.

The incident drew national attention and President Roosevelt ordered an investigation.

The townspeople claimed the riders were black troops from Ft. Brown, but a series of military inquiries and a county grand jury failed to establish the identity of any of the men involved. No soldier would give evidence against his comrade.

Finally, all members of Companies B, C and D of the 1st Battalion were assembled on the parade ground at Ft. Brown. Those guilty were told to forward and identify themselves or all would be discharged without honor.

No one moved. And on Nov. 5, 1906, Roosevelt ordered 167 privates and non-commissioned officers "discharged without honor from the Army" and "forever debarred from re-enlisting in the Army or Navy" because of the "conspiracy of silence."

Conn. Asks Marshall For Stay On Abortion Law

WASHINGTON (AP) — Connecticut today asked Justice Thurgood Marshall to stay a federal court ruling that the state's new abortion law is unconstitutional.

"The state of Connecticut is now left without any laws to protect the lives of its unborn children at any stage of their development," said the plea filed in the Supreme Court.

Furthermore, the state is now left without any laws to prevent 'back alley' abortions. Without a stay the state will therefore suffer irreparable injury.

Marshall took no immediate action on the application to block the ruling by a federal district court in Hartford until Connecticut appeals formally to the Supreme Court.

The law was passed by the Connecticut General Assmbly last May 23 in a special session called after an 1860 abortion statute was declared unconstitutional in April. An appeal from that ruling is pending before the Supreme Court.

The justices are scheduled to hold oral arguments on Georgia and Texas abortion laws Oct. 11 or 12.

Nations Cool To Sharing

WASHINGTON (AP)— A plan to transfer wealth from the rich to poor nations through the international monetary system is failing to gain much enthusiasm from the world's top financial officials.

The idea is being pushed by developing nations at the annual meeting of the International Monetary Fund, but the industrial nations have generally shown coolness to the plan.

The United States is one of those countries which is expressing reluctance, fearing that such a proposal could present great monetary problems later on.

The plan revolves around a central idea: giving the poor nations more of the new international reserve assets created by the IMF than their economies would normally justify.

Thus, with more reserves on hand, the developing countries figure they could attract more development, having the national wealth to finance it.

Since 1970, the IMF has created, under international rules, a new kind of money out of thin air-Special Drawing Rights or SDRs or "paper gold". These are distributed to countries according to the size of their economies-the rich always getting more than the poor.

As the finance ministers discuss monetary reform, they are talking about expanding the role of paper gold to make it the standard of value for all of the currencies of the world.

With this in mind, the developing countries see it as an opportune time to change the formula for distributing this new kind of international money so that they can get a bigger share.

The strongest supporters of the idea among the industrial countries are Great Britain and Belgium. France also has expressed its support for the concept, but it fears that it may mean that too many SDRs would be created.

West Germany is against the proposal. Its finance minister, Helmut Schmidt, told reporters, "One should not mix up development aid with the mechanics of a new monetary system."

The proposal, with the support by the British and Belgians along with the push given by the developing countries, means it will be a prime topic for discussion in monetary negotiations during the next year.

Municipal Officials Welcome Revenue Sharing Principle

NEW YORK (AP) - The short-term impact of revenue sharing will be minimal, city officials say, but they welcome the principle of having the federal government help cities carry the burden that large numbers of poorer residents put on city finances.

Final congressional approval is expected next week for the $30 billion, five-year revenue-sharing bill, which will provide the first major federal aid to cities that can be used for operating expenses in basic services like police, fire and recreation programs. President Nixon has backed the bill which city officials first began pushing for six years ago.

Cities and other local governments would get about $3.5 billion and states about $1.7 billion this year. The Treasury Department is ready to mail checks for the first half of that in October.

But the money, which increases slightly in each of the five years, won't have an enormous impact in the first year. In 12 of 28 large cities, the amount from revenue sharing is less than the increase in operating expenditures between 1969 and 1970 or between 1970 and 1971, including New York, San Francisco, Boston, Baltimore, Detroit, Milwaukee, Philadelphia, St. Louis, Atlanta, Phoenix, Houston and Columbus, Ohio.

The revenue sharing money in cities is restricted to use in areas of public safety, environmental protection, public transportation, recreation, social services for the poor and aged, financial administration and libraries.

Most city officials had no specifically targeted where they would spend the money since the exact dollar amounts for cities were only determined Wednesday night.

Moon Landrieu, mayor of New Orleans which will get $14.7 million, said the money would go mostly into basic municipal services and some capital projects.

"It will offset a $7 million deficit next year and prevent substantial cutbacks in already inadequate services," Landrieu said, "but in the long run it would give us breathing room for development of solutions and of growth in our tax base."

McG Promises Urban Program

WASHINGTON (AP) — Backed by 29 big-city mayors, Sen. George McGovern Thursday pledged a sweeping program of urban help including an "emergency" boost of $4 billion in revenue sharing.

At a news conference in which he introduced two new campaign teams of metropolitan officials, McGovern declared the election "will determine the fate of American cities for the next two decades."

The South Dakotan attacked the Nixon administration's records on schools, housing, transportation, and crime while denouncing in even stronger terms "the unconscionable policy of deliberately putting people out of work."

McGovern was accompanied by 10 mayors whom he had signed up for his "Urban Policy Panel" and "Mayors for McGovern" groups he said were still counting enlistments with 29 already on board.

Mayor John Lindsay of New York said McGovern offers "a knowledgeable and meaningful approach" to urban ills whereas "the administration, in its rhetoric, continues to exploit fear."

Kevin White of Boston, Kenneth Gibson of Newark, N.J., Thomas Luken of Cincinnati and Roman S. Gribbs of Detroit were among the other mayors voicing their support of the Democratic nominee. Richard Daley of Chicago and Joseph Alioto of San Francisco were named as other leaders of the groups although they were not present.

McGovern said his administration "as one of its first acts" would look to the urban policy panel, headed by Gibson, for the nation's first long-range urban development plan.

But he is already committed, he noted, to a massive redirection of federal funds from war spending to a domestic program that includes 15 billion for schools and $1.5 billion in the fight against drugs.

And while he hailed the recent congressional compromise on revenue sharing as "a very welcome step," McGovern said "I would increase that program another $4 billion in emergency fiscal relief to cities."

He said defense cuts plus loophole-closing tax reforms would finance the urban schemes without "increasing by $1 the tax of anyone on a salary."

McGovern said the administration, "despite the talk of law and order" had permitted a 30-percent increase in serious crime in the last three years and "some 350,000 drug addicts still roam the streets."

He said that a somewhat optimistic statistical report released by the FBI late Thursday had been "sanitized" and shows only that "We're getting worse more slowly."

McGovern left the news conference for his retreat on Maryland's eastern shore, with no further campaign planned until next week.

Nixon Makes 3.8 Million In Two Days Campaigning

LOS ANGELES (AP) - President Nixon, has political treasury more than $3.8 million the richer for two days of campaigning, said Thursday that history may mark the U.S.-Soviet agreement to cooperate in medicine as a "great turning point" in man's struggle against cancer and other disease.

Nixon set aside outright campaigning to tell the National Cancer Conference that agreements on arms control, space and trade may claim the headlines, "but I know and you know that there is no battle more important than the one you're waging."

Then the President headed back to Washington, to get a personal report from Henry A. Kissinger, his national security adviser, on two days of talks with North Vietnamese negotiators in Paris.

Before Nixon flew back to the Capital, the White House issued a statement in his name turning back to politics with the claim of "Steady progress toward the new prosperity" in California and nationally.

Since Tuesday night Nixon had been on a campaign mission that took him to New York, San Francisco and Los Angeles, with $1,000 fund-raising affairs the main event in each city.

Nixon campaigners said they raised more than $1.5 million at the New York dinner, $600,000 in San Francisco and Los Angeles. The million in Los Angeles. The President remarked Wednesday night on that showing as "the biggest dinner in the whole history of American politics."

In his statement Thursday on the economy, Nixon said "Californians can take satisfaction in our steady progress toward the new prosperity - progress in which they share fully."

California is Nixon's home stae and, with 45 electoral votes, the biggest single prize in the presidential election. Sen. George McGovern, the Democratic presidential nominee, has said victory in California is imperative to his election hopes.

Campaign '72

Sarge Wants Two Party State

BOSTON (AP) - Gov. Francis W. Sargent, members of his staff and other party leaders briefed Republican Party candidates in Boston Thursday in an effort, the governor said, "to restore this state to a two-party state."

Sargent told a news conference that the day-long session had attracted "over 100" GOP candidates for offices, most of them running for seats in the overwhelmingly Democratic state legislature.

Democrats currently maintain a two-thirds majority in both houses of the legislature, giving them enough votes to override the governor's veto of any piece of legislation.

The Thursday session included sessions on public relations, campaign financing and scheduling for the Republican hopefuls.

"It is important that we work as hard as we can to restore this state to a two-party state," Sargent told newsmen as some 50 of the GOP nominees looked on. "For too long it's been a one-party state."

The governor "pledged" to campaign across the state on behalf of local candidates.

"Obviously it's going to be an uphill fight, because we're so vastly outnumbered," Sargent said. Democrats hold a 2-to-1 edge in voter registration over Republicans in Massachusetts.

He predicted that "we're going to pick up a substantial number of seats in both the House and Senate," helped by a large vote for both President Nixon and Republican Sen. Edward W. Brooke.

Republicans, however, are contesting only 167 of the 280 seats in the legislature.

Republican leaders at the session included the minority leaders of both Houses, Sen. John F. Parker, R—Taunton, and Rep. Francis W. Hatch Jr., R-Beverly, and Lt. Gov. Donald R. Dwight.

Sargent said his contribution to the local campaigns would include what he described as a "substantial but modest" infusion of funds from his personal campaign war-chest. Sargent, who does not face reelection for two years, has attracted considerable attention with his successful off-year fund raising efforts.

Nixon Stand- In Sought By Dems

LANSING, Mich. (AP) Republican Gov. William Milliken, an occasional stand-in for President Nixon on the campaign trail, has been asked to devote his time, money and friends to the election effort of Democrat George McGovern.

The surprise request was made in a form letter received by the governor from the McGovern state campaign headquarters in Detroit bearing the signature of McGovern's state campaign director, Carl Wagner.

McGovern needs Milliken's money, the form letter said, "if we are to compete with the extravagantly financed Republican campaign."

It asks Milliken to work for McGovern on the precinct and neighborhood level.

Deadline Set On Vt. Suit

MONTPELIER, Vt. (AP) — U.S. District Court Judge James S. Holden has set Oct. 30 as the deadline for all legal briefs on motions to dismiss a federal civil rights lawsuit that alleges 26 state attorneys general conspired unlawfully against a Florida businessman.

The suit was filed by Glenn W. Turner and three of his companies, Turner Enterprises, Inc.; Koscott Interplanetary, Inc.; and Dare to be Great, Inc., all of Florida.

Turner asked the court to award more than $500 million in punitive and compensatory damages from the attorneys general and the Council of Better Business Bureaus, based in Washington.

Judge Holden also set Nov. 17 for oral arguments on a request by Turner's attorneys to convene a three-judge panel for the purpose of ruling on the constitutionality of a Vermont regulation which bans as unfair business practices pyramid, multi-level or chain distributorship sales techniques.

Barrus Aims At Low School Costs

By MDC STAFF

NORTHAMPTON--State Sen. John D. Barrus, R-Goshen, says he is filing legislation designed to aid communities from the overwhelming costs of school construction.

"Both of these bills were filed by me in the past," said Barrus, "and because these offer to communities an opportunity to realize substantial savings in costs of school classrooms, I am refilling them this year."

Barrus is a candidate for reelection in the Franklin-Hampshire District against State Rep. John W. Olver, D-Amherst.

The first piece of legislation provides for the Dept. of Education to have available to school districts basic plans for chool house construction.

"It seems to make sense to relieve the property taxpayer of excessive costs in architect fees and ultimately excessive construction costs," he said.

The Republican lawmaker said yesterday that the second bill provides for reimbursement for renovations and reconstruction of buildings other than schools for the purpose of utilizing them in educational programs.

"There are abandoned factory buildings, sound in construction and conveniently located in many communities across this state which could very well be converted at minimal cost," he said.

"If many communities await approval for new construction, both at the state level and at either regional or local levels, many young people will go through the educational programs without the benefits which could be provided with this opportunity for communities to save both money and time," he said.

The Amherst College Observatory will hold an open house tomorrow evening or Sunday, whichever evening first offers a clear sky.

The viewing through the Observatory's Clark 18" refractor telescope will begin at 7:30 p.m. In addition to deep sky objects, the planet Jupiter and its moons will be observed.

The Observatory is located in Amherst on Snell Street near its intersection with Woodside Avenue.

The service has materials to be read, and faculty, alumni and employers to help in duscussion and study.

Since the career Planning and Placement Service staff is small and frequently overburdened with advance appointments, ask at the counter of Room 239 Whitemore for suggested reading prior to a delayed appointment with a career advisor.

Court Denies Candidate's Appeal

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) — U.S. District Court Judge Hugh Bownes today denied a motion that Carmen Chimento of Nashua be allowed to file as an independent candidate for governor of New Hampshire even though he hasn't met the state's residency qualifications. Chimento, who has lived in the state only three years, seeks to overturn the state's constitutional requirement that governors live in the state seven years before they can assume office.

"Mr. Chimento may be a serious candidate, but there is no evidence that his candidacy is taken seriously by the New Hampshire voters," Bownes said.

Chimento finished last in a three-way race for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination in the Sept. 12 primary. He received 1,030 votes. Roger Crowley, the winner, had 29,326.

On Wednesday, the deadline for filing petitions for candidacy on the Nov. 7 ballot, Chimento was 167 petitions short of the 1,000 required by the secretary of state.

Chimento, 42, an electronics engineer in Burlington, Mass., lived in Pittston, Pa., before moving to New Hampshire.

Bownes' decision upheld an opinion by Atty. Gen. Warren Rudman that Chimento's name be kept off the ballot.

Corpses And You

While more students than in past years turned out to vote in yesterday's Student Senate election, most stayed away from the polls in droves.

While it might be admitted that some of the people running for the Senate weren't ones to stir tired and apathetic blood, others could raise a two-day old corpse. They didn't get many votes either. And only one incumbent was defeated.

There are a lot of two-day old corpses elected by the voters in Massachusetts who won't be stirred from their coffins if somebody doesn't declare judgment day, and that somebody can be (maybe has to be?) us.

If we don't do it here, at the most responsive institution in the country (not a compliment, just the best of a bad bunch) what the hell are we going to do when we have to deal with the real world? Vote for the incumbent congressman because we're too disinterested (lazy, apathetic?) to find out what he, and his opponents are like? Or perhaps not even vote at all?

Look who we would be disappointing. The press, the liberals, our parents, the future?

Don't vote, don't complain laws might make sense.

Four more years or four more months? Or how does making history sound to you?

Give ROTC Credit

R.O.T.C. should remain on campus and its courses should become accredited.

If this does not happen, we will have become hypocrites, espousing innovation and pedagogical reform for all but denying it to some.

Consider:

That Plato, who founded the first university, gave neither credit nor diploma to his students for learning;

This learning should not be isolated from life;

That any experience in life from which one learns should be considered a learning experience, regardless of whether or not it takes place in a classroom;

That students (read: livers) are today shackled by artificial separations called credit hours.

Any attempts to break down this arbitrary and logically false system - in which some arbitrary authority designates some learning experiences as credit-worthy and some as not - should be encouraged. One way of doing this is by accredidating every learning experience.

Giving credit to all learning experiences in and out of the classroom raises several questions:

What should a degree mean? A degree should do one of two things. It should give legitimacy to a college experience by acknowledging that a student has learned a certain quantity, and, for those students who wish it or require it, a degree should indicate that a student has demonstrated competency in a field that requires expertise so that the student may compete for employment. (The present system, of course, neither documents learning nor requires demonstrations of competency.) A student should have the option of deciding what kind or what combination of degrees he or she wants.

Should credit be given for those learning experiences that are considered by some to be "immoral"? Absolutely! the border between the moral and the immoral is a relative and shifting one. The question is what a valid learning experience is. Giving credit to a person who has committed murder does not condone the murder. Denying credit to that person does not prevent the murder. Human beings are, in general, motivated by far deeper concerns than credit.

if the University is, in the words of Chancellor Bromery, to reach a "wider society", antiquated disciplines and academic boundaries must be expanded, not limited.

Drilling on a R.O.T.C. field is not an academic subject, but it is a learning experience. To deny R.O.T.C. credit is not being moral; it is being arrogant and anti-intellectual.

Signs Of The Times

A few weeks ago the world entered a new era of international relations. When the 20th Olympiad was taken over by politics and terrorism, the world was shown a mirror image of its political self and all the candy coating was melted away by the heat of the now obvious political crisis that exists in the Middle East. All the energy that has been building up since the Six Day War has finally come to a head, as we can see by the actions of the Arab terrorists throughout the world, and the retalliatory Israeli raids, one of which killed over 200 people last week. However, the most important fruit of the turmoil passed by this week almost unnoticed, nor at least taken with too few grains of salt, as the Russians proceeded to airlift tons of war supplies including ground-to-air missles into Syria. This is the first action Russia has taken in the Mid-East since they were thrown out of Egypt.

I'm completely convinced that the balance of world peace is absolutely dependent upon the status of the Middle-East conflict and that, with the events of the past two weeks, the stage is set for the beginning of the most critical era in the history of man since the days of Jesus Christ. With this crisis we can see that we are into the latter days in the history of the world as we know it, a period which culminates with the return of Jesus and the Judgement of man.

It would be very obvious to one who is familiar with the book of Revelations and other prophecies of the Bible, that several of the signs which make up the blueprint for the latter days have already been fulfilled and that, with the movement of Russian military might into Syria, one more page has been turned. I'm referring especially to the fourth sign in Revelation which speaks of the movement of an army from the north (Russia is directly north of Israel) upon the people of Israel. It's written that Russia will make a lightening-like charge through the Mid-East, Egypt, and down into Africa conquering the African Arabs and black nations in Africa. What finally stops Russia is bad news from the north and east. The news from the east is that China enters the war with an army of 200,000,000 (which China has today) staged on the banks of the Euphrates River. The news from the north would of course be of a European alliance. Out of this alliance will grow the new world confederation under the Antichrist, which is spoken of in the seventh sign. We have the makings of this alliance already with the rapid growth of the Common Market.

None of these signs would have any meaning if the first three relevations weren't fulfilled, but the first two have and the completion of the third, the rebuilding of The temple of God in Jerusalem, is only a matter of time. The first sign is that Israel will become a nation again. The second is that they, the Jews, will return to old Jerusalem. That sign was fulfilled by the results of the Six Day War. They haven't controlled Jerusalem since 600 B.C. when they were taken to Babylon. The third sign, the rebuilding of the old temple, is now possible because the documents giving the exact methodology of cutting the stones have been recovered from the Wailing Wall where they were buried for centuries.

So the stage is set and history rolls on. We're the generation that will see it all. It's our obligation to see the events as they happen, to understand them as they were put down for us in the Bible, and not to be fooled by the Antichrist, and the many false prophets who will roam the land in the latter days.

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE GRADUATE STUDENT SENATE

Last Wednesday night the Undergraduate Senate did something very right. They did it badly, without taking the opportunity to understand or to educate themselves but they did it.

After fourteen years the Undergraduate Senate finally realized that the operation and ownership of the Student/Union Campus Center is a major part of Student Government and not a cnore to be abandoned to some lost committee. The Student Union/Campus Center represents the student body's largest capital asset and poses tremendous possibilities as a model for student governance of other self liquidating projects. It is well worth some attention.

The student voice in running the Campus Center has been the Student Union/Campus Center Governing Board. The SUG Board was created by President Lederle and recreated by Chancellor Tippo. The SUG Board's authority for running the Campus Center has always come from somebody other than the students. Now, finally, the Undergraduate Senate's proposal allows the representatives of the student body to determine who they want to run the Campus Center and how that group is to be elected and organized. Having its authority come from the students should make this new governing organization stronger; it will allow it to act with the full weight of the student body behind it.

For the last two years the SUG Board has operated with a constitution which allowed no appeal whatsoever from its actions. It only decided to change that situation when it discovered that it was in danger of being replaced. When the SUG Board first heard about the planned Undergraduate Senate act, its first reaction was "So what, they can't touch us". It was only when it was revealed that a joint act of the Student Senate could replace SUG Board that the Board decided to reform itself along slightly democratic lines. There is a need for a more responsive group in charge of the Campus Center.

Pehaps the nicest part of the Senate proposal is that it will make available to the Board that runs the Campus Center the things which SUG Board has always been most in need of: people and ideas. SUG Board has been up a dead end, quite invisible and quite cut off from any kind of meaningful flow of ideas and interested students. The new organization will have greater access to the resources available in student government.

There is a danger in the Undergraduate Senate proposal. The danger is the Senators may interfere unwisely in the business of running the Campus Center. The possibility exists that the students will blow it if they don't work together. Perhaps, on the face of this threat, all the governing groups will forget all the jealousies and make the Campus Center work. It has to happen.

I urge the Graduate Senate to concur with the Undergraduate Senate in passing the joint act to create the Board of Governors of the Campus Center.

Richard Nelson is Secretary/Treasurer of the SUG Board.

Davis Robinson, left, and Mike Montgomery comprise Fearless Fly Submarine. Their all-night Film Festival goes from 7:00 to 1:00 and from 1:30 to 7:30 in the Student Union Ballroom.

Fearless Fly Gets You High

BY ED BRYANT

Mike Montgomery leaned back, smoking a cigar, looking like Zanuck might have if Zanuck had owned a denim jacket and couldn't grow a mustache. Davis Robinson hurried back and forth between the table and the projector, selling tickets, explaining the Festival to people, showing cartoons. Over a hundred people paused as they walked by, stopping to watch the cartoons Davis was showing. Crazy Marcia from Puffton was arguing with Jimmy Olsen about who knew more people. No one who stopped to watch the cartoons was pressured by buy a ticket. If they bought one, well, so much the better. If they didn't buy a ticket for the Film Festival, at least they got to see the cartoons.

This is the way Fearless Fly sells tickets. Combining this friendly, low-key approach with excellent productions, Fearless Fly is fast becoming a major source of entertainment on this campus. Already this year they have shown King Of Hearts and Little Latin Larry. This weekend they undertake their biggest endeavor of the year, an all-night film festival highlighted by Yellow Submarine, but featuring as well a myriad of shorts which will leave the viewer so high his own name may be difficult to recall.

Fearless Fly is Mike Montgomery and Davis Robinson, both members of the Class of 1975, who perform their chores on behalf of Mildred Pierpont House. Besides these honchos, Fearless Fly makes use of the services of several other people, including Alan Wittrup, who designed the poster used in advertising tonight's Festival, and Bob Drake, Montgomery's roommate, who works as hard on the productions as anyone, but whose name appears nowhere on the Fearless Fly letterhead. I asked Drake how he felt about the unsung hero role assigned to him by Robinson and Montgomery, and his answer was straitforward enough. "Those assholes," he said. "We do all the work, and they get all the credit."

Such talk from a subordinate is testimony enough to the rapid rise of Fearless Fly. A year ago there was no credit to share, for Fearless Fly was not yet in existence.

Fearless Fly was born in April. Its first presentation was The Phantom Toll Booth, which was shown in Pierpont for fifteen cents a person. The Phantom Toll Booth was an incredible success, in terms of audience appreciation. Needless to say, it wasn't that great a financial success, at fifteen cents per person.

"We're not really interested in making money," Robinson told me. "We do big things like Little Latin Larry or King Of Hearts in order to pay for other things. Sometimes we show movies for free on bathroom walls. One night we advertised cartoons and threw in King Of Hearts as a surprise. We like to keep people off balance."

They made money, nevertheless, on Little Latin Larry. Whether it was because Larry was retiring, or because Fearless Fly was promoting the concert, last week's Little Latin Larry concert drew the biggest audience Larry's ever had. The size of that audience is a matter of dispute in some circles, since the legal capacity of the Campus Center Auditorium is set at 900. That would seem to mean that the crowd was no more than the legal 900 people. Montgomery has a different idea however. "It's pretty amazing how they can tell us downstairs (meaning RSO) that the capacity of the auditorium is 900 when we had over two thousand people for Little Latin Larry." Whatever the true figures may be, veterans of past Larry concerts all agreed it was the biggest crowd ever

Fearless Fly is hoping for a big crowd tonight, but they don't expect to turn a profit. The films that are showing are mostly unknown; this is intentional. It stems from an attempt to provide to the student population entertainment not available anywhere else.

As Davis Robinson puts it, "The Program Council takes last year's box office successes, and books them seven months in advance. They don't take things into consideration like the time of the year, or where people's heads are at. We try to be a little more responsive to the entertainment needs of the students. We like to get people high without drugs."

The criticism of the Program Council is perhaps a rrifle unfair, but there is justice to the statement. This year the Program Council has a director's series, which features such directors as Fellini, DeSica, and Bergman, none of whom play at the Bijou on Saturday night. Their regular program, though, is just as Robinson describes it. During second semester they will be showing Summer of '42, McCabe and Mrs. Miller, Butch Cassidy and The Sundance Kid, Klute, Straw Dogs, The Devils, and The Omega Man, films which, regardless of their merits, have been available to all of us for quite some time. Fearless Fly is showing films tonight that few people on this campus have ever seen. The Little Shop of Horrors is playing along with K-900, A Spatial Oddity, The Haunted House, God Is Dog Spelled Backwards, What Every Boy and Girl Should Know, and many more. These are not films made for mass tastes; they are made for hippies, students, and other such deviants. They are not, I should add, "experimental films," like the ones in which nothing makes any sense but the colors. These are simply weird movies which must be seen to be believed. And of course, there is Yellow Submarine, which Robinson says is "just to mellow everyone out before they leave."

To obtain these films Davis and Monty spend hours scouring through film catalogues, or following up a word of mouth report on a new and exciting discovery of someone else's. Yesterday, while interviewing Davis, I saw one of the cartoon audience go up to Montgomery to tell him about a 1936 Classic entitled Reefer Madness. Montgomery excused himself, and ran off to call the booking agent for the film. Davis Robinson wanted to stress the fact that Fearless Fly takes suggestions from anyone. (Their phone numbers are 546-5290, and 546-5292.)

What happens after this? Fearless Fly promises more small productions, but is still planning some big ones as well. Swallow, a Columbia group, will be coming, and they hope to get Edgar Winter as well. The biggest news, however, is that Fearless Fly plans to bring to Amherst Willie Wonka and The Chocolate Factory. (Ask your little brother about it.)

Mike Montgomery, in his own homey way, explains the guiding philosophy behind the University's newest film booking agency: "Every kid has a dollar he'll spend. We try to give him the best deal for his dollar."

More On Underground Films

Merrill House at Hampshire College is sponsoring an afternoon and evening dedicated to the glorification of comic book art.

On Saturday, September 30th at 2 p.m. there will be a display of comics, books on comics and related stuff. At that time there will also be seminar on comics. This will take place at Hampshire in the AB lounge in the Academic Building. Free admission.

On the same date, in the evening at 8 p.m. there will be a giant film show of silent and sound animation and live action films derived and inspired from the comics. This will occur in the Main Lecture Hall, Academic Building, 25¢ admission.

The comic book itself (of which there are about 30 million readers), appeared originally as a promotional piece for the newspaper The Chicago American. It was a collection of Bud Fisher's Mutt and Jeff, available for six coupons clipped from the newspaper, plus postage. Comics didn't become a commercial reality till the late 20's. By the end of WWII it was estimated that over 90% of America's children were reading them; 85% of the youngsters between 12 and 17 were also reading regularly. During WWII the sale of comic books at post exchanges was 10 times as great as the combined sales of Life, the Reader's Digest and the Saturday Evening Post.

To this date hundreds of cartoon characters have been translated from pulp paper to radio, TV, movies, canvas and sculpture; you can find, on goddamn near anything, images of Mickey Mouse, Donald Duck, Pluto, the Nebish, Mr. Natural (usually seen "truckin'") and so on. Wells' Citizen Kane was designed like a comic book; the comic artists claim to be very influenced by Wells' film.

Because it's cheap, widely available and so endeared to everyone, , the comic books have become, and are, a great art form.

Come to the seminar and the film show - the nostalgia potential alone is stupendous.

Not for the Beginner or Connoisseur

Churchill, Creighton
The Great Wine Rivers. (1971)
New York: Macmillan and Company

By FRANK JOHNSON

Concurrent to the remarkable upsurge in wine consumption in this country is an upsurge in books and other literature about wine. It is to be expected that wines, like anything else, vary to a great degree depending on personal taste and other conditions. Like the wines they describe, books on wines also have their ups and downs, but unlike wine, it is more difficult for the "wine book snob" to hide behind subjective preference when analyzing wine books' qualities.

To the amateur or beginning wine-lover, most books and/or manuscripts about wine serve an important purpose: enlightenment about wine basics and other useful information that can aid selection and enjoyment of wines. The more advanced lover of wine seeks more organized, sophisticated information. When this state is reached, his tastes for information, like his tastes for wine, become more discriminating. Reiteration of proven facts becomes tiresome, as do non sequiturs. Creighton Churchill's The Great Wine Rivers falls victim to many of the shortcomings which would annoy the serious wine drinker, and it also offers a confusing (and incomplete) organization that would annoy the beginning lover of wine as well.

Creighton Churchill seems to be no newcomer to the world of wine, having written several books on the subject prior to this latest work. Having travelled extensively through the greatest European wine-producing districts, it seems there appeared a relationship to him which purported some useful organization. The thesis of his Wine Rivers is postulated on the assumption that where there is fine wine, a river must be nearby. Initially, this is a very tenable point. Bordeaux is located on the Gironde River, Rhine wines and Moselle wines on the Rhine and Moselle Rivers, Rhone wines on the Rhone, and so on. By this method of organization, Churchill illustrates a proven geographical fact: the sediment left behind by a flooded river is admirably suited for the growing of wine vines. It is thus no accident that Europe's greatest vineyards are located around rivers - yes?

Like any generalization, such a thesis falls victim to exceptions. It should immediately be apparent that the Cote d'Or, the "Golden Slope" on which Burgundy's wines are grown, does not lie on any river. The Chianti region in Tuscany, which produces Italy's best-known wines, lacks a river. Most of Spain's sherry-producing areas have no rivers running through them, and South of San Francisco bay, where some of California's finest wines are grown, no rivers ply the landscape. Granted, many other important wine-producing areas are indeed situated near rivers, but any wine expert will tell you that this itself is not so terribly significant: it is the soil, not the river, which gives wines their individual character. Burgundy's Pinot Noir grape, for instance, does not transplant well from its homeland on the golden slope, even to areas with rivers. It is the soil, and its interaction with climate, which determines the vine's success elsewhere. Moreover, Burgundy's soil mostly derives from a high concentration of limestone (Calcium carbonate) left over from dead marine life when the area once was under the sea. This is distinctly different from the gravelly sediment washed down by a river, both chemically and physically. Without belaboring this point further, Mr. Churchill's study would be far more accurate were it entitled "Great Wine Soils" or "Great Wine Climates", but such labels might have scared away publishers; it is assumed that rivers are far more romantic.

This is not to rule out any originality in Churchill's manuscript. Besides discussing (albeit in rudimentary form) the wines of each "riverine" area, he offers a bit of gastronomical advice about hotels and restaurants as well - this point reinforced by the fact that most wines are meant to be enjoyed with food. However, while this is a good attempt at linking wine with food, the suggestions are superficial, incomplete, and lacking the informative style of even a Guide Michelin. Mr. Churchill's book reads like the notations in a trip diary: the Gasthauser and auberges are never compared, merely mentioned. Most travel publications are revised and updated each year by a staff of professional travelers- in this way, they are useful to the traveler because hotels (like wines) change with new management. Lacking such revision- and such completeness- The Great Wine Rivers begins to dry up in usefulness.

The bottle depicted here is approximately equivalent to a Nebuchadnezzar.

Further, Mr. Churchill is decidedly incorrect on a number of points. In a glossary, he defines "bouquet" as "wine's aroma". Bouquet is the scent of complex substances through the nasal passages before the wine is sipped. Aroma is the combination of oral and nasal impressions after the wine is tasted, internally. They are not quite the same thing, and because they describe different sensations and different substances, they should not be interchanged. Churchill mentions Chateau La Tour Blanche, the Sauternes chateau, as being second-best to the famed Chateau d'Yquem. While this was at one time true, Chateau La Tour Blanche in 1855 (when the classification was made) belonged to a private owner, M. Osiris. Later on, Osiris died and the vineyard was willed to the state. Consequently, the quality of the wine declined sharply and is not seriously considered to challenge any of the "runners-up" to Yquem. Churchill also states that Schloss Vollrads, one of the finest vineyards on Germany's Rhine River has a "seemingly incomprehensible" method of classifying its wines by means of a capsule (cork cover) color. In truth, this method is far more precise than Churchill's alternate method (by means of defining condition of the grape when harvested) because Schloss Vollrads does not show grape condition on the label. The capsule color system has been compared by Frank Schoonmaker, the dean of America's wine experts, to a military hierarchy: privates and foot soldiers on the bottom, colonels and generals on the top of the quality hierarchy. This method is quite accurate and is also employed by Schloss Vollrads' neighbor, the famed Schloss Johannisberg. The colors are simple to learn and are very precise at indicating what sort of wine lies beneath the capsule.

But Churchill errs most seriously in an initial assumption that wine, when it travels, deteriorates. He points out that certain wines are very delicate and lose their charm when they are shipped from their place of origin. Most wine experts concede that ageing (not necessarily deterioration) takes place during shipping, but ageing is beneficial, not detrimental. Red wines- especially those of Bordeaux- need considerable age to take out the roughness characteristic of their youth, and if the slow process of ageing is speeded up the importation, it can only be beneficial to the wine lover, making his wines ready to drink much earlier. Churchill might defend this criticism by pointing out that wine, especially old wine which has thrown down sediment, is agitated by travel, but this is not really valid when one considers that a "rest period" of peace and quiet in a dark cellar will settle the sediment once more. Mr. Churchill is probably suffering from the common malady of confusing tasting impressions with setting: even common wines take on a grand character when served during an exciting trip. This malady- call it "bottle sickness", if you will- seems to have permeated many of his assumptions about wine importation.

In sum, Creighton Churchill's The Great Wine Rivers might find some use in a dilettante's library, or a library devoted to the collection of wine books, but it has limited use for either the neophyte or serious wine-drinker. One would be better advised to seek books by Hugh Johnson and Frank Schoonmaker, acknowledged wine connoisseurs whose advice is far less controversial- and much more complete- than Mr. Churchill's.

Turning Points

Last Friday we attended the farewell concert of Little Latin Larry as something of a reporting team in exile. Being true to our namesake, we couldn't manage the $1.25 (or the $1.00 as a girl guarding the door told us as if we had missed the train to glory) and watched from outside the door. Our vantage point afforded us a good view of the proceedings on stage and a continually changing one of the crowd. Larry and the band have been better, but this was no matter. It was doubtful that many in attendance could remember the Winter Carnival some two years ago when Larry made his own brand of cockeyed Fifties nostalgia into a rock vaudville institution. Now Larry was planning to hang up his gold lame jacket for a Brooks Brother suit and sell insurance. Few tears were shed by the assembled. It was first and foremost the social event of the season and few came to mourn.

Apparently many believed the evening demanded dressing in Fifties regallia. They came with hair slicked-backed, shirtsleeves rolled up with Bic-penned tattoos of Mom etc. It was like some high school production of "Grease." The effect was maddening. Just as few had any idea of where or what Adventure Car Hop was, few had any comprehension of what styles were like fifteen years ago. There were a few striking ensembles: one young man came dressed entirely in black with a white tie. He looked like George Raft. One girl wore a multi-colored outfit that was better suited for a fox hunt, another looked devisating in what had to have been her mother's low-cut, evening dress from the mid Forties. The oddest ensemble of all was worn by a blond, long haired young man. He wore a tee shirt with some dumb phrase silkscreened upon it such as "Eat Your Heart Out." With this he wore a pair of shorts that if this weren't such a tolerant community, it would have been easily grounds for indecency. They were cut without much discretion immediately below his ass. What was truly strange about his outfit was placed in his crotch was an obviously phallic-shaped object, surely not his own. Not to any of our collective memories did we remember cock pieces as being in vogue during the 1950's. It would have been grounds for calling the kid a "fairy" or worse, be put away if this was truly in the time of McCarthy and the Four Lads.

The proceedings were long on wide-off-the-target camping. Larry's own sort of eclectic mimicry is, by it's nature, off base. Some of his songs were hits while even the youngest of the assembled were still in their teens. "Good Lovin' " was premiered on "Hullaballo", a television pop music revue which in 1965 was so slick, so now, so trenchant that it was light years removed from the Fifties. Car-hops had their place in the Fifties, but go-go girls no. In some ways it was fitting that Larry should end his career amongst the frenzied, adoring mob that packed the Campus Center Auditorium, but beneath their crazy carnival an ironic bitterness persisted. Little Latin Larry was best at exploitation, but compromise was the key to his success. His aim was always slightly off and because of this he and his group became an aberration of styles. Celebrating it wasn't much fun. Perhaps the band without Larry can make something of itself; judging from their performance and the generally warm reception given the new ensemble (minus Larry and the dancers), Little Latin Larry may be the impetus for something more memorable.

The spirit of the Fifties was better found Saturday night on the Five College Bus. We were on our way to see "The Heart Is A Lonely Hunter," of all the films made in the late Sixties, probably the best which would fit into a Fifties' mold of melodrama. The feeling of time detachment was immediate; upon climbing on the bus we felt we were in a time warp. The bus was completely filled with girls returning to Mount Holyoke. They all had a well scrubbed, little make-up, Peck and Peck look one associated with Salinger stories about girls who wore camel hair coats. Slacks could be seen, but cordorouys, no dungarees or scraggly hairs. The mode was subdued. At Amherst the bus emptied and filled again with a predominantly movie going public.

The bus that evening was the usual unsettled blend of Amherst–UMass students. For those of you who don't believe a caste system exists amongst students in the Five Colleges, ride this bus some Saturday night. A case in point was the casual conversation between three young ladies, who reside in Butterfield, and one Amherst lad. The Amherst Lad had the sort of gushing exuberance which nurtures good recommendations from faculty members. He looked like someone who may have won his High School Science Fair but still enjoyed reading Marvel comic books. He sat in the vacant seat next to one of the three and a conversation ensued. It was particularly high spirited at first, he assuming the girls came from Amherst, they gushing from his attention. Finally one, a tallish, gawky girl, apologetically confessed her student stature as a sophomore from UMass. The conversation slipped into a lower gear. They all questioned him and told little bits about themselves. They all concluded big schools take some getting accustomed while small schools were perfect. If our school does have a reputation of being the lesser of the five, we can thank these girls for a splendid bit of public relations. Here is a bit of their conversation:

"I suppose everyone asks you this question 'cause of the way you speak." She gushed. "But are you English?"

"No."

"Well, then have you somehow come in contact with British speaking people. I mean you talk just like you have."

"No...."

Well, she stammered. "Where are you from?"

"West Hartford, Connecticut."

"Oh. I knew you were from out-of-state."

The Beginnings of a Masterwork

August: 1914 by Alexander Solzhenitsyn
Farrar, Straus and Giroux
Translated by Michael Glenny
By ED SMITH

This novel is the first in a projected series by Solzhenitsyn in which, it would appear, he intends to trace the history of Russia from the beginning of World War I until the Bolshevik revolution. The author states very explicitly that ". . .it makes no pretense at completeness, even in the development of its characters. . ." Therefore, any criticism I may level at it could conceivably be negated in the following volumes.

The book concentrates, historically, on the hostilities which went on during the first two weeks of World War I between Germany and Russia. It is a contemptuous examination of the unprepared state which Russia was in at the onset of the war, due principally to the corruption in the military-government establishment. It centers on the operations of General Samsonov and his army and their destruction in the initial stages of the war. At the end of the book, with Russian troops fleeing in chaos back to the fatherland, there is a distinct impression that we have had only a brief glimpse of what Solzhenitsyn has in store for us.

Probably the most striking aspect of this work is its use of characterization to show the nature of war. There are so many facets of personality present that I feel it would be useful to describe a few of them in order to exemplify Solzhenitsyn's method. In the first few chapters we are introduced to a rich, young man who is fearful that he will be called to do his duty for God and country. However, there is a happy ending to this brief tale, for him at least, as his father has used his connections to get him an exemption. As we leave him, our young man is busily working on a map, where he is plotting the movements of the Russian troops.

General Samsonov is the next character whom we are allowed to spy on and he is one of the two most highly developed characters in the book. Solzhenitsyn does not fix a certain set of values on him, but rather allows us to watch as he progresses through stages which include: despair, ego tripping, back to despair from which he slides into insanity. We are even let in on a private showing of Samsonov blowing his brains out with an army revolver. Along with Samsonov there were several other generals who were an integral part of the beauracracy which was destroying Russia from the top. They were men whose priorities in war were as follows: personal survival, glory, promotion and victory, despite the cost (though they preferred to lose as few men as possible, since heavy losses endangered one's chances for a medal). The result of this type of leadership was a misguided, unprepared and ineffective army which was destroyed under Germany's military machine.

Switching for a moment to the other side, we have General von Francois, a German general, whose motives however, were not a great deal more admirable than his Russian contemporaries. His aim was to be remembered in the history books as the greatest general who ever lived. Consequently, he brings his son with him everywhere he goes to record every word he speaks.

The most complete characterization of the entire book is one Colonel Vorotynsev. He was sent to Samsonov from General Headquarters to find out how the war was going. The Russians, it seems, were notorious for their inefficiency in communications. Starting from that point, the Colonel wandered throughout the book, trying singlehandidly to save the Russian army from destruction. He is pictured as a man devoted to the fatherland, courageous, charitable, an officer who communicates with the common soldier, in short, a saint in uniform. It is easy to forget that he has devoted his life to war and the preservation of the Tsar and truly one admires him.

Scattered throughout the book there are revolutionaries, both within the army and out. They provide the necessary flavor of discontent and foreboding which serves to remind us of how close the country was to revolution at the start of the war. As well, there are numerous other minor characters who appear intermittently to polish off the job of showing as many facets as possible of Russian life and thought. There is a great deal more to be done in this series of books which Solzhenitsyn says is forthcoming; two noticeable exemptions which possibly should have been included in this first volume.

The first is a picture of the Tsar corresponding to the magnificently drawn character of Stalin in "The First Circle." The Tsar is at the center of the corruption which was Russia militarily and politically during this period. He is the center at which all the beauracracy and incompetence point. Within him was the decay which caused the downfall of the military at this time. The Tsar was completely out of touch with his armies and the realities of the war, due to his own incompetence, but as well to the incompetence of those who surrounded and advised him. Through the use of a few documents, Solzhenitsyn gives us a vague conception of the Tsar. One of the documents, from the Tsar to his foreign minister, promises that the war is going well and he is hoping to be marching on Berlin soon. On the very day that telegram was sent, the Russian army suffered a colossal defeat which was only a preview of what the Germans did to them in the next week. A later document, from Nikolai Nikolaevitch, Commander-in-chief, to the Tsar, claims that Russians are holding key towns and are on the attack. In reality, they were being defeated consistently by a German army with superior firepower. In light of this, it makes one feel almost sorry for the Tsar, but actually the reader does not develop any real personal feeling for him because he is only mentioned in a few brief passages.

Alexander Solzhenitsyn

Although there are a few glimpses at the peasants in the trenches, there is a need for a broader look at the masses which comprised Russia. Generally speaking, the people whom we see are from the educated society of Russia and while this omission is not crippling, it would have been a welcome addition.

As an overall view then, "August: 1914" is a character study of the Russian people and certain key individuals connected with the specific events to which the book pertains. It shows very clearly the chaotic state Russia was in when it entered the war. It It makes the reader feel as though the Tsar entered the war hoping both to unite the people and forestall what seemed to be an inevitable revolution. The book though is not so much a history as it is a mirror reflection of reality and the human condition. Solzhenitsyn deserves, in this area especially, our praise for conscientiously sticking to the truth and not attempting to show just one side of any individual or situation. The battle scenes, though at times a bit confusing, are not shown as glorious pageants in defense of one's country, but rather they are brutally impersonal, chaotic, and disparaging. Men are huddled in trenches praying that they will not be killed by the next shell which explodes, Russians fire on Russians in the confusion and the reader begins to realize that there is more to the accounts of battles than is contained in the everyday history book. Aside from the battles though, the final scene, which takes place at General Headquarters, shows us what happens to moral values in practice. Anyone who remembers the movie "Z" will recall that in the end the bad guys come out on top. In a similar manner the most despicable of generals in "August: 1914" arise unscathed and glorified, while those who attempted to do their duty were killed in the fighting. This novel, then, is also a primer in the facts of life.

At one point we are treated to a dose of reason which seems to be Solzhenitsyn speaking to us directly. The character whom he speaks through seems to be a universal symbol of wisdom in literature. He is old and bearded, walking the streets of Moscow with a large load of books under his arm. He meets two university students who have just joined the army and invites them to a bar. Inevitably the conversation turns to politics and when the old man rejects one of the students claims that democracy is the ideal form of government, he is asked what he would propose.

"Propose? I wouldn't venture to. Who is conceited enough to imagine that he can actually devise ideal institutions? The only people who think they can are those who believe that nothing significant was ever done before their own time; that their generation will be the first to achieve anything worthwhile, people who are convinced that only they and their current idols possess the truth and anyone that doesn't agree with them is a fool or a knave. I'm not specifically accusing the youth of Russia; it's a universal law- intollerance is the first sign of an inadequate education. An ill-educated person behaves with arrogant impatience, whereas truly profound education breeds humility."

Here we have, it seems, a rejection of these upstart revolutionaries, but as well Solzhenitsyn has bitterly condemned Tsarism. Where does he stand? I wouldn't venture to propose either. There does seem however, to be a trend within the characters of the book to rule their lives through emotion. This is especially evident in Samsonov, whom we find the night before a large battle praying to God to save his army and bring it victory. The general in this scene is genuinely pitiable as he grovels on his knees, imploring the Lord to strike down his enemies. Colonel Vorotynsev, on the other hand, comes through very strongly as the champion of reason. He struggles through the book trying to get someone to listen to his plan to win the war and even though he seems to be defeated in the end, an impression is left that he is the hero of the story. With that in mind, we could come to the decision that "August: 1914" is the eternal rivalry between reason and emotion, but a simple solution to a complex situation never did set too well with me.

In closing, I would like to say that this book, in itself, is not the literary masterpiece which was expected. It is only the first installment of what should be, if Solzhenitsyn lives to finish it, the literary triumph of the 20th century.

"I Don't Think We're In Kansas, Toto"

By TOM FITZGERALD

Crowds of students were waiting in the downtown bus terminal, contemplating their imminent return to academe with mixed emotions– sadness and hostility.

A man in a business suit alternately dragged on a cigarette and punched his knee with his fist. His wife pulled a handkerchief out of her purse, dabbed her tearful eyes and blew her nose, loudly. Their daughter stood in the ticket line.

Why? The man wondered. We gave her everything. Where did we go wrong. She could have gone to any school. Plumbroke, Skipmore, Sniff, Radicliffe, any of them. But no. She wants to go to that place. God.

His wife shook her head. You try to bring them up right. You show them how to hold their fork. You tell them to be friendly with people, to brush after eating, to stay out of back seats. You raise a wholesome little girl and then she says she wants to go there. God help us.

Their daughter returned, a small dog in one arm, an overcoat in the other and her ticket between her teeth.

"Are you sure they'll let you keep Toto in your room?" her mother asked.

"Sure. Massburg's a very liberal school. I'm sure they realize that caring for a pet is an expression of self as well as a mark of involvement in nature."

"You're gonna get involved, Dorothy," her father said, "when Toto expresses himself on your roommate's clothes."

"Now, are you sure you want to do this?" her mother asked. "The things that we hear going on there..."

"Oh, you've got the wrong idea," Dorothy said. "It's a beautiful place. It's big and green, and it has a duck pond that you can skate on in the winter and a cute little building that looks like a waffle, and they play basketball in a barn. Besides, Buffy Sainte-Marie and Taj Mahal went there. It must be nice."

"Just because a couple of gypsies want to live on a farm, that doesn't mean you have to go to school there," her father said. "But we've been through this a hundred times. You've made up your mind."

Dorothy and Toto: is the poor girl expecting too much?

Buoyed by the prospect of adventure, Dorothy soon found herself sitting on the bus.

"Are you going to Massburg?" inquired a scarecrow sitting across the aisle.

"Yes, Toto and I are both going to be freshmen," Dorothy laughed, holding up the little dog.

"I'm headed there too. I've already got a degree but I didn't get a chance to work for truth and justice. I was cheated out of it when the decadent establishment gave me a degree as a carrot to keep me from organizing my brothers and sisters and getting our shit together. At the moment I'm heavy into the Free Termpaper Movement."

"Wow. That's alright."

A tin man sitting next to Dorothy piped in, "I'm going there too but for much different reasons. I had a heart implant operation not long ago, and, well, to tell you the truth, you don't find many girls roaming around the woods anymore. I understand Massburg has thousands of them and...this must sound very chauvinistic to you."

"That's alright, I forgive you," Dorothy said, "But would you take your hand off my knee?"

"I'm going to be Massburg's great athlete," said a lion who was sitting next to the scarecrow. "I'm going there to learn the things a great athlete has to know, like how to hire an agent to negotiate my pro contract, how to play out my option or jump contract. If it takes courage, I've got plenty of it."

When the bus arrived at Massburg, Dorothy and her friends were taken to a reception in a large, plushly-furnished room, where they met a kindly, white-haired administrator. He asked them what they hoped to gain at Massburg and as he heard the various responses, he thought, "We'll keep these fish out of the labor market for years."

"I think you'll all find what you're after here in Massburg," he told them.

"Mr. Tin Man, I understand your situation perfectly, and I have just the solution. You will live in one of our all-male dorms, one that happens to afford a fine view of an all-female dorm. You know, nothing kills a healthy sex drive like one of these co-ed dorms. I might add that binoculars are reasonably priced at the campus store.

"Mr. Lion, you are a lucky animal. As a great athlete, your praises will be sung daily in our campus newspaper. You will be toasted nightly at Kappa Sig. First, though, I have to ask you a personal question. Are you in a state of financial impoverishment? You are! Do you have your Parents Confidential Statement? Terrific! Well, that settles it. All your expenses will be paid, and welcome to the Fighting uh, Minutemen. We suggest you explore our new major--Hotel Management Using Phys-Ed Techniques."

"As for you, Mr. Scarecrow, you'll find that Massburg provides ample opportunity for political activism. We have peace people, ecology people, abortion people, women's libbers, gay libbers, Third World people, black capitalist people, black socialist people, YAF'ers, Yippies, all kinds of peculiar groups.

"So you see there are lots of things for kids to do here. In time you may even become a Student Senator, and really, what greater honor can a student have than to be given the power by his peers to spend their parents' money?"

The administrator ushered the three new students to the door while they licked his hands gratefully. He then turned to Dorothy and said, "My dear, why don't we run over to my office so we can discuss your course of study more informally. You look like a bourbon drinker to me. Am I right?"

He helped her on with her coat, casting a sideways glance at Toto, who was expressing himself on the carpet.

Optic Shows Wang Hui-Ming

One of the most distinguished artists living in Amherst will have his first show in a local gallery from October 1 through October 28. Nationally known as a printmaker and painter, Wang Hui-Ming will exhibit a wide range of works at the Optik Gallery, 49 South Pleasant Street. Patrons may meet the artist at the opening reception on Sunday, October 1, from 4 - 6 p.m.

Highlighting the exhibition will be the recently published The Land on the Tip of the Hair, a collection of poems carved in wood. Many of the poems were expressly written for Wang by leading poets in America, England, and Sweden, including Robert Bly, Robert Francis, James Tate, William Stafford, Tom Pickard, and Tomas Transtromer. The delux edition of original prints as well as individual poems in wood signed by both the artist and poets will be on view. It is anticipated that during the opening Wang will autograph the soft cover edition which will also be available at Optik.

Wang's extensive talents will be clearly visible, for in addition to The Land on the Tip of the Hair, other silkscreens, woodcuts, watercolors, and oils will be shown.

Born in China, Wang came to this country in 1945. He has taught at Yale University and for the last seven years has taught at the University of Massachusetts. Having won numerous awards and prizes, he has had over twenty-five one-man exhibitions. In 1970 he was invited to exhibit his books, poems in wood, and hand carved manuscripts at the Pratt Institute Library. There were more than 200 items in the show. In addition to many private collections he is represented by ten works in the permanent collection of the Library of Congress.

Optik is located above the Amherst Commons and is open Tuesday - Saturday, 10-5. The work of Wang Hui-Ming will be exhibited until October 28th when an exhibition of Edward Hill, member of the Smith College art faculty, and Thomas Cornell, member of the Bowdoin College art faculty, will be shown. The works of many other artists can be viewed at any time.

Poor Richard's Interview: Anthony Burgess

second of two parts.

(The following interview took place Monday, September 11, in the living room of the Lord Jeffrey Inn. Poor Richard's remembers that Art Cohen was present from WFCR, and Larry Horton interviewed for WMUA. PR's was present but silent. This is the second and final installment of an interview with Anthony Burgess, author of Clockwork Orange.)
(transcription by Bill Densmore).

AB:...I don't blame society otherwise for Alex's behavior, you know he's just a human being who's very immature but had the characteristic–three characteristics–he's aggressive, he loves beauty, he's linguistically inventive. That's what makes a human being, to have these three qualities. It's primarily a kind of grotesque, exagerated, oversimplified human being.

WFCR: It's interesting that you said he has the three qualities, but somehow he seems to be pulling at himself all the time. Usually when you think of somebody who loves beauty that seems to be a major characteristic of that individual that shines through all the other, and the violence may be surpressed a little bit.

AB: Well, I suppose I've been influenced in this respect by the horrible truth which we're very scared of looking in the face. The Nazis were very fond of Beethoven, and indeed Kubrick was aware of the significance of this in the film because he has a Hitler parade with Beethoven's Ninth symphony accompanying it, but we know from the records of the concentration camps, the men who ran these places, the men who ran Dachau for instance, were great players of chamber music, and listeners to grammophone records of Schubert and Schumann. And there's no connection apparently between art and reality.

WFCR: But it may be we just never see that side of the Nazis, we always see the violent side. Maybe there was another side that I am not familiar with.

AB: But then the other side doesn't make them better, I mean, a Nazi torturer would listen to a performance of Beethoven's violin concerto for instance, and then go off and torture somebody. The music didn't make him any better. And I think there's a bit of sloppy, humanitarian thinking of a specific kind, which probably flourished in the Nineteenth century (and even in the early part of the Twentieth century). We've taught that music and art and literature would make people better– and of course this just isn't true. The best educated people in the world were the Germans, and yet they produced what they did produce. Art is outside morality, and this is one of the side issues, or lessons of the film (and the book) A Clockwork Orange. You can love beauty, but it doesn't make you a better person.

WFCR: Have you thought about ever writing a screen play specifically for use in the cinema and not to be written?

AB: I have done this. I've done a fair amount of this work in England, but usually full length television documentaries. I have done a little work in Italy, I've done work on the Dustin Hoffman film, but, I don't think I like the sweaty, rough and tumble of film work. What I do like is the stage, and why I'm over in America at the present time is to see about two stage presentations I am the "theatre poet" (the un-paid theatre poet) of the Tyrone Guthrie Theatre in Minneapolis. And I've got a new translation of Oedipus comming up there next month and I've also done a musical version of Cyrano de Bergerac which is starting on Broadway next March.

WFCR: Is this something that you wrote yourself–the music?

AB: No, I've done the lyrics in the book but I've done another musical based on Joyce's Ulysses which I hope will see the stage sometime.

WFCR: Musical based on Ulysses? When will we see that?

AB: Yes, indeed, I've done the music and the script and the lyrics. I hope you'll see it before the year is out. I don't know quite where at the moment, but the script and the score are both in New York with my agent and hopefully something will emerge. The title of the music is The Blooms of Dublin which rather suggests The Coins in the Calleys, or Abie's (?) Irish Rose, which is quite an honor.

WFCR: Who did you collaborate with on the musical?

AB: I did it myself.

WFCR: What sort of music is it? Is it Broadwayish?

AB: It's Broadwayish, it's meant to be Broadwayish, but of course it's got a certain Irish element in it you know, the Mother McCrea element, the rather ironic. The kind of extended–well, work out the book yourself–you've got Jewish, you've got Irish, you've got a lot of things, and Leopold Bloom has a lot of nice Hebrais contulanas, and I have choruses–there's a great variety in it.

WFCR: Will the musical be as incomprehensible to so many people as the book is?

AB: No, what it's done is filtered out of the book the straight human story, and it's surprising how shapely the book is in those terms. You have a two act study of the young Irish poet and a middle-aged Jewish advertising canvasser who are always trying to meet. And he has an unfaithful wife and you have the infidelity and you have the meeting and the little wife herself taking over for twenty minutes in a long aria, and then uttering this word, "yes", which ends the book and ends the musical play with the only chord, the only sound, that will accompany the word "yes", and that is the common chord of C-major, belting out in the auditorium, and then F—, F—, F—, F—, and then down to nothing, and then the final word, "yes". The finest ending (and I didn't make it, Jyce made it) in all musical comedy literature.

WFCR: Are there any particular performers you'd like to see in the roles?

AB: There's one man I want to get, and I think I will get. I think you know who it is for the part of Blum, and this is Topol. Topol was going to play the lead in our Cyrano, but instead we have Christopher Plummer. Topol can't manage this quick, airy gay erdite language as well as a man like Plummer can. But I want Topol for that part, and I want Georgia Brown for the part of Molly Bloom.

WFCR: Do you think you'll get them?

AB: Yes, I think so, yes I'm pretty sure, the difficulties are purely trade union difficulties–A question of getting a green card.

WFCR: Will that be the entire extent of your activities in New York when you move there?

AB: No I've got a lot to do. I'm teaching also at the City College for nine months. If one is going to settle down in New York one might as well do something in New York while one is at it and I like teaching very much. And I once toyed with the idea of teaching here in Amherst for a year but it fell through. No I should enjoy that. Indeed I should be lecturing there this afternoon instead of talking to you.

WFCR: How do you go about teaching? I assume you teach creative writing?

AB: Well, I don't. Yes I do teach a little of that but I'm not terribly fond of it, I rather teach straight literature, literary appreciation– that kind of thing. Like most writers I was a teacher at one time. One home's back to it, you home back to it because of the lonliness of the writer's communication with the typewriter. This is so lonely a business that you home to the old days of the classroom where at least you have real people and real faces to talk to, to communicate with. So I have to teach every two years or so for the sake of my soul.

WFCR: Have you ever, well I guess you have taught in England if you've been a teacher?

AB: Oh, I've taught many places.

WFCR: Is there a difference between student in England and in America?

AB: I think now that you can say they're the same everywhere. Anywhere you go in the world, you'll find the students the same. They're the same in Singapore, Australia, New Zealand, America, England. They're all the same. They look the same, they dress the same, they have the same hair styles, the same life style, they all smoke pot, and they all protest, protest, protest vigorously even when they have nothing to protest against. A country like New Zealand has very little to protest against. The police are not pigs, they don't carry guns, they're the nicest people on earth. But the young New Zealand students want them to be pigs, thus they can express a greater fraternity with their American counterparts. But the lifestyle of the world student is the American lifestyle, and I can see very little difference except in accent between a student at say a college like Brighton University in England, one of the old colleges, one of the new colleges rather, and the students at a place like this–the new University you have here.

WFCR: Well do you find them stimulating when you're working with them? Interesting?

AB: Oh yes, I find them extremely stimulating. (This sounds corny, this sounds ingratiating, but I've got past ingratiating anybody.) I think the young in this country are good, and have the right ideas. And I still get the shudders when I'm in a bar and some thick-necked American transport driver or construction worker or businessman comes in and I smell facism comming off them, and I know precisely what the kids are revolting against. I'm probably too old the aid the revolt physically, but I'm very much on their side. I live in the country. I live in Italy where the same process goes on, where we have a possible renaissance of facism. They're crying out for a strong government and so forth, and I suffer with the kids, although my suffering isn't quite so intense because of the language barrier as it is with the American student. But something has to be done here, I think the kids (I say "the kids," this is not meant in a derrogatory sense) have some of the answers, what they lack is knowledge. And they musn't pretend for a moment that they have knowledge–they musn't pretend that instinct is a substitute for knowledge. They have to read. They have to study. They have to study things with a past before they can reject them.

WFCR: Are they beginning to show some interest in that direction?

AB: If you say Plato is no good, all right, you must read Plato before you can say that. It's no good just burning it..Five years ago I was on the west coast, I think it was in Sacramento, and they were burning Tom Paine and Carl Marx and anything they could find. There's no point in this–you've got to read something and then decide, "This is no good, now I will burn it".

WFCR: But are they beginning to move in that direction, are they reading these things with new interest?

AB: There are still a lot of people who believe that there is the short cut to ultimate reality and that the short cut is through drugs. And I've taken as many drugs as anybody because I lived in the far east and I was a regular opium smoker. I never found that the opium vision was a real vision you can derive from listening to music or reading poetry. Its a rather mindless way of spending time. It's the mindlessness I fear, all we have is a mind.

WFCR: So, you don't do it anymore.

AB: I don't take any drugs. I take nothing stronger than tobacco.

WMUA: Do you create new words in all of your novels? In A Clockwork Orange there's....

AB: I don't want to do that, it's not willful. It's really a matter of necessity–the necessity of the form, and I'm working on. I'm proposing to work on a very short novel which is a presentation of (this is nothing like Irving Wallace's novel, The Word) a presentation of one of the gospels, and of Christ, the life of Christ in terms of a young Hebrew hippy who see things through a bit of a veil of narcotics, and uses a language which has semetic routes. So that we have kind of an ambiguity there, and at the end of the book the reader is not quite sure whether he's been in on the presentation of a sort of Charles Manson character who's a diabolist, or whether it's the genuine Christ. But the mention of the language there is solely in the service, the presentation, of ideas or the presentation of an approach. It's not just playing with words for the sake of that. That I think is wanton and dangerous and not to be encouraged.

WMUA: Are you an anti-Skinnerian?

AB: A who?

WMUA: Anti-Skinnerian. B. F. Skinner.

AB: I have to be I'm afraid. I'm so totally committed to the opposite point of view. I mean I believe that–Iknow that–people can be conditioned. We know this. I think W. H. Auden said that we know that the behavioralist's philosophy works. You can take a man like B. F. Skinner and condition him to recite the Athenaian creed every day. I'm scared of losing one whit, one fraction of my capacity to choose.

WFCR: It has to be done to an adult under force. You can do it to a child involuntarily.

AB: To some extent. We have to do a little conditioning with children, although it's amazing how with my own child of eight he will fight against it, and there's a part of me that's delighted to see it. But to feel that the only way you can save society is by undergoing voluntary conditioning, is, I think, a condition under which I wouldn't want to see society saved. I do think there are certain aboslutes. I think good and evil are genuine absolutes. I have to believe in these. And I have to believe that we can choose between them.

WFCR: What I'm saying is that it would probably have to be forced upon people to undergo conditioning. I don't think people would undergo it voluntarily in great numbers.

AB:...Skinner's dream is a dream the Walden II book (which he wrote, in what 1946?, and it's still a best seller) of course presents nothing more than a nice campus–in which people are good and kind and nice to each other and they learn–but it isn't a real society, and it's a mere glorified American university. He's a dreamer–he's as much of a dreamer as any of the dignity and freedom people are– or he says they are.

WFCR: It would be of course inhuman and unreal, and almost difficult to live in a world that didn't have evil.

AB: You've got to have evil unfortunately, because it's the only way of defining good. Good and evil define each other by existing. We can't have a world of total good because if all books were best sellers, there would be no best sellers. If the whole world were good, there would be no good. Because good can only be defined, as I say, in terms of its opposite. And so, inevitably, I've got to be anti-Skinnerian, however popular his arguments are.

Chi Coltrane: Sensitive And Talented

by Don Saint-Pierre

(CHI COLTRAINE, COLUMBIA RECORDS)

Mary's been around for a long time. Biologically, she's necessary. But she has a problem. It centers on her social position and the effect she can produce from that position.

Mary's been here for many years and only recently, through no praise to some, has been able to raise out the moat.

Mary has been watching for many years. She's seen all the faults, all the mistakes, made note of them and hoped some day to help. Mary is sat on the edge of the world and tried to tell the rest of the insanity of the problem and the simple solution to the illness.

Mary has seen the wars, the dead, the dying and the smiles on those who cause all this suffering. Mary is the weakness in humanity. She's the soft part, that which can, and has been, pushed into submission, and because of the philosophy which governs her has remained there.

Mary has tried to speak to the rest. She's done it in the songs of the children and in the parables of the old. But, the strong are too busy to listen to her sanity.

What has passed under the historian's bridge, is, as the feminists tell us, the story of one man's ego at battle with another. And, in the same vein, what we have called our entertainment has been what those same distortions have wished to channel to us.

Genuine sensitivity has been as distant as the rhymes of the child in a meadow. The beat goes on.

Women songwriters have always been on the sidelines of the serious listener. The women who the "controlling forces" have filtered through to us have in the past been only those which exhibit those characteristics which bolster the role which they picture themselves in.

Oh, sure there have been the Bessie Smiths and the Joplins, but are they really what they want to be?

For all these long years, the entertainer has been an individual that is either the extreme of the Playboy ideal, the completely submissive, simple girl, or she has just been her opposite, the downtrodden, destroyed and forgotten soul.

Sure, if you tell this to Dad, he'll pull out the proverbial Peggy Lee platter and say that she's the real woman. And that only she has finally grasped the essence of existence and converted it to song. Maybe, but I don't think so. Miss Lee is no more feminine than her male contemporaries.

Even, when "The Revolution" had already gotten underway, there were still none that could be called the ideal for which the masses should strive.

Byez was nearly what it should be. She was intelligent, she was concerned and she was active. Those are all the things that are necessary, but she lacked of the one thing that made her complete. She was sexless.

True, she had a soprano voice and used it to do some beautiful things. But the person on the stage when she performed was Everyman (Everywoman?). Her subject and delivery were such that to be delivered by anyone else with the same talent including a male, would do little to change the effect.

Mary was still on the sidelines, waiting for the straw that would break her sister's back.

It happened, just as was predicted and in the years since, the number of freed souls has exceeded Lincoln's proclamation.

Women are now free to speak what they wish, without the censorhsip of John watching over them. They can do and be, through the changes they have worked on the society around them, whatever they wish without fear of persecution from that society.

Chi, pronounced 'shy', is one of those individuals. She's intelligent, sensitive and talented. And, perhaps equally as important, feminine.

She is more than the girl who has been stepped on by a lover, she is more than a girl waiting for a phone call as in the old ballads. But, she is also more than the cold, observing intelligence that watches the world turn without wishing to jump in and live.

Her lyrics are simple and direct, and many times misleading. What seems superficially like the simple boy-girl love story, suddenly becomes much more.

'A man can really bring you down
If you let him get to your heart
I've got to get myself together
For the cure–'

And more.

She's feminine. With real feminine desires and wants and willing to record them in her songs.

'I thought my life was complete
But look what you're doing to me
Oh! You're driving me crazy'
Thunder and Lightning.'

And finally, she has the intelligence to record her thoughts in a manner that doesn't bore us with banality. She is quite capable of recording her thoughts on he subtle and sometimes evasive mysteries of our insane journey.

'Life is like a ferris wheel
It keeps on turning without feel
...Will this crazy cycle ever end
And when it does...what then.'

Mary's home and we all have cause for joy.

Beating A Dead Horse

By STEVE FELD

Long John Silver–Jefferson Airplane (Grunt Records)

If any trends can be deduced from the new Jefferson Airplane album, it would seem as if Grace Slick is important, if not essential, for the group's continued success. It is her morbid, black-humored minor keyed musical chicanery ("Easter?" and "Aerie" on this record, "Crazy Miranda", "Sunrise" and others on previous records) that add an important new dimension to the Airplane's fuselage - one that is under the constant threat of becoming dismembered by the hyper-energy of its personnel.

Hot Tuna, an offspring band featuring bassist Jack Cassidy and lead guitarist Jorma Kaukaunen are steadily becoming more unified and stable than the Airplane, touring more and giving more in their performances. Jorma's music with Hot Tuna surely exceeds "Trial by Fire", his sole contribution to Long John Silver. This song is his poorest effort in recent memory. He really can't sing, either.

It can be safely concluded that Paul Kantner craftily saves the best of his work for his Jefferson Starship voyages and contributes the remaining ort to the group. "Alexander the Medium" and "The Son of Jesus" are, by and large, uninteresting songs that sound like Sunfighter throwaways. The latter tries to cater to the sacrilege by intimating that "Jesus had a son by Mary Magdalene...." Forget it.

This leaves amazing Grace to bring it all back home. Her singing on "Milk Train" is impeccably corrupt and explosive. Instrumental in adding ferocity to the fireworks is electric violinist Papa John Creech, whom Jorma and Jack met in an employment office, of all places.

"Easter?" continues to devastate the condition of modern religion: "One man of peace dies and a hundred wars begin/You keep murdering people in His Christian name, I thought he said it was a sin." The song is musically simpler than anything she has ever written and, as a whole, achieves its dramatic purpose in revealing some blantant inconsistancies and fallacies inherent in all religious institutions. "All I did last Easter was to paint some eggs..."

"Aerie" is an unmistakable Slick tune. It, along with the title song, deals with her concept of being free. In the case of "Long John Silver", "He serves no king/No land holds him that's why he feels like singing". "All men are ruled by a flag" and in "Aerie", "He's got no laws to cross....He's got no master." That's fine, Grace, but what about SOLUTIONS? Only a feeling of misplaced fascism permeates through the rubble. Still good songs, though.

The early Airplane sound is apparent with "Twilight Double Leader", the only decent Kantner song. Here, once again, Grace plays a crucial role in "bouncing off" Kantner's voice as she did with ex-member Marty Balin. The sound is not unlike something from After Bathing At Baxters or Crown of Creation, JA at their peak.

So, Grace Slick is essential to the group because she is the only member who can be relied upon for consistantly fine material and performance. The other members, preoccupied with "other things" seem ambivilant to the directions that the group take. It has been showing in their concerts and their records and Long, John Silver only amounts to beating a dead horse.

We Hope You're Ready, For Flo And Eddie

By MIKE KOSTEK

Mark Volman & Howard Kaylan The Phlorescent Leech & Eddie Reprise MS 2099 time 40:50

This summer there was a series of big outdoor concerts held at Dillon Stadium in Hartford. I was driving down with a group of friends to see The Kinks, The Beach Boys and The Doors when one of my friends told me of a dream he had the night before. Well, of course it had to be something extraordinary, or I wouldn't be telling you all this, right? Right. He dreamt that a new group called The Phlorescent Leech & Eddie would play that night, and he was right as they made a completely unexpected appearance.

I mention this because it gives creedence to the idea of them being a real band, going on the road, and at least making an attempt to be more than another studio band with no contact with their audience. Besides, it was an amazing dream.

Hartford gave them a good reception and called them back for an encore, which really surprised the band. "Thanks, Hartford. Goddamn!", said Mark.

'Seems to me you don't want to talk about it.

Seems to me you just turn your far out head and walk away'

No, I'm not forgetting or denying The Turtles aspect of this case. No, in fact, I liked The Turtles. Liked The Turtles? Well, sort of, I thought they were pretty good. Look at the band. Volman and Kaylan, the singers, have proved themselves to be excellent singers, writers and showmen with Zappa and The Mothers Of Invention; Jim Pons, bass, played competently with the Mothers, and has a fine bass voice; Johnny Barbata, drums, is in the CSN&Y, Dead-Airplane circle now, and is prominently featured on Four Way Street and Long John Silver. I don't know where the guitarist went. The Turtles weren't shunned by everyone; Ray Davies produced one of their albums, Wooden Head.

'All right, why the ancient history?'

Because most people have never heard of Volman and/or Kaylan, and those who have will connect them with the Turtles and put down the album in a flash. Remember, The Turtles weren't totally straight. Consider this:

"Eleanor, gee, I think you're swell,
And I really wish you well.
You're my pride and joy etcetera."

That's from one of their old hits and, as you can see, is a bit twisted. Sure, they were often trite, obnoxious, stupid, in short, everything that Top 40 is infamous for. At least they sang well. So to those who know nothing of their career after the Turtles, pick up The Mothers Live At The Fillmore, or Just Another Band From L.A. albums. Or Zappa's Chunga's Revenge, or 200 Motels. You'll hear the new Mark Volman and Howard Kaylan. Driving VW's instead of Cadillacs. Saying nasty things. Doing nasty things. Singing nasty things. But they were excellent all the time.

'And so it came to pass
That Zappa was in a cast
And he couldn't tour no more.
But his band got tired
And got themselves hired
To tour so they wound't be poor.'
taken from The Story Of Mankind
By Mike Kostek

Zappa's band stuck together after Frank broke his leg when he was pushed off a London stage. Those who play on this album include: Aynsley Dunbar, drums; Don Preston, keyboards, and some new faces on guitar and bass. This album contains the type of music that would be played on intelligent Top 40 radio stations. That is, excellent pop (That doesn't go together, does it? 'intelligent Top 40!!). To tell the truth, this album is not very far from The Turtles' original sound, but only in a most general way. Gone are the insufferably cute songs. Gone are the same subject matters treated in the most mindless ways over and over again. Gone are the slick, teeny arrangements. Gone are the love songs that expressed feelings in the cheapest, shallowest ways. In place of these is a healthy, strong maturity, both musically and lyrically. Not to say that there are any world-shaking subjects dealt with here, but rather there are well-written, interesting songs expressing human feelings, not Top 40 feelings. There are one or two good jokes thrown in, like "Nikki Hoi", but most songs are pretty light. The band plays well together, and it is a good recording. There is no playing here that will make your liver shiver, but it is all competent and does what's needed. All of the songs are beautiful, with terrific harmonies. These guys can still sing.

At press time, it was still unknown whether or not Leech & Eddie would continue to play on or go back to Zappa. Judging from their stage show, with 300 pounds of bare chested Mark Volman doing Pete Townshend/Leslie West imitations and telling the audience to sing along as if they all were at a Three Dog Night show, The Phlorescent Leech & Eddie are a welcome salt pancake upon the body politic to keep us from taking ourselves too seriously. Consider this: after Volman got done telling us to sing along just like Woodstock, the audience laughed. When Ray Manzarek of The Doors stumbled around the stage, looked at the muddy mass of uncomfortable bodies around him, he paused, and said that we, sitting in the rain for five cold hours at Dillon Stadium, and most impatient and miserable indeed, were better than Woodstock, he was greeted by a large groan that shut him up for the night. See? The truth never lies.

Fillmore's Last Days

by Steve Feld

Fillmore: The Last Days–Various Artists (Fillmore Records)

In this McLuhanistic age, there seems to be an obsession to either film or tape happenings of all sorts, the ultimate purpose being for posterity more often than commercial gain. The ever-increasing outlets that the mass media offer enable a person to make his "production" with considerable feasibility. Enough so to corroborate what Andy Warhol espoused years ago: "In the future, everyone will become famous for fifteen minutes." This is slowly becoming a reality.

The "record-as-event" reached its potentiality in rock with Woodstock, a three-record set that sold over a million units. (Soon, with George Harrison's All Things Must Pass and the Isle of Wight Festival, the three-record package has become commonplace. Current sets include the highly acclaimed Escalator Over the Hill and the event The Concert for Bangladesh). Appealing to people's historical, as well as musical interests, the best of these are the ones that don't sacrifice the latter for the former. Fillmore: The Last Days unfortunately does.

For the closing shows of San Francisco's Fillmore Auditorium, entrepreneur and resident loudmouth Bill Graham assembled all San Francisco-based talent. Fine, perhaps, for the sake of the shows, but on record we're "treated" to an overwhelming host of grade-C talents. (The fact that many of these performers are also contracted to Graham's "Fillmore" record label, I'm sure is more of a business move than a coincidence.) So what we end up with is a record that is intermittently good but largely uninteresting.

First the positive: I like side two particularly. Quicksilver Messenger Service does their hit "Fresh Air" along with a frenetic rocker "Mojo". And It's A Beautiful Day perform a nine-minute version of their most famous work, "White Bird", a relaxing, low-key excursion into the allegorical. The normally mundane Boz Scraggs graces the third side with an exquisite rendition of his "Baby's Callin' Me Home", a tune originally done by the Steve Miller Band on their first album, Children of the Future. An extended version, it lends ways to long, articulate and decisive solos by various members in his back-up group.

The Grateful Dead do a powerhouse performance with the Chuck Berry classic, "Johnny B. Goode", but their own "Casey Jones" is most decidedly lackluster. Finally, Hot Tuna shines on "Keep Your Lamps Trimmed and Burnin'" with some hot licks by Jorma Kaukonen and Papa John Creach, electric violinist.

Enough to make a great single record–which is the story with so many two and three-record sets. The remainder is discouraging.

Santana is a major disappointment. Their fourteen minutes on record are stolid and unexerted.

Then there is the onslaught of mediocre: Malo and Tower of Power both use brass to create nothing but noise; Cold Blood features a chick singer who very consciously tries to become the "new" Janis Joplin, and, of course, fails; and all the others–Stoneground, Lamb, The Sons of Champlin, The New Riders of the Purple Sage and The Elvin Bishop Group–contribute to make the record unexciting.

Even the Final Night Jam Session featuring Taj Mahal, Scaggs and Bishop, lacks any notable support to the cause.

So much of this record, per se, is worthless. It is, however, an important release, if just for its historical value. In fact, it is much similar to The Concert For Bangladesh in the sense that you buy it not so much to play, but to own.

Screenwriters: The Whores of Hollywood

By BOB NESTI

Screenwriting until recently, has been the invisible component of good films and often the most frequently cited fault of bad ones. Most critics , even daily reviewers or student apprentices, adhere to what was labeled almost two decades ago "Autuer theory," which simply gives the credit for a film to a single person, its "author" the director. Film historial Gerald Moss argues that "just as there is only one poet per pen, one painter per canvas, there can be only one creator of a movie." This is the essence of the theory, one which grew from articles found in the french film journal "Cahiers du Cinemas" during the mid Fifties by such critics as Francoise Truffaut and Peter Bogdanovich. In America, the "auteur" banner was picked up by Andrew Sarris of the "Village Voice" who for a long time stood alone against the more literary, less cinematic approach of Pauline Kael and other leading critics. Today, despite Kael's often witty and pungent argument against "Auteur theory," the director is most certainly viewed as the author of the film by most critics and viewers. On this campus alone this semester are two film retrospects concerned with the director. Today the name of the director is synomonous with the film. When A Clockwork Orange is discussed, it is Stanley Kubrick, not Anthony Burgess who receives full credit. Burgess is reduced by most critics to someone who may have been a rewrite boy. The director is, as a recent book titles suggest, a superstar; he is the Byronesque hero who single-handedly conceives and molds all aspects of a film with equal amounts of skill and imagination. When film became a legitimate art form, certain aesthetic rules came to pass which have all but played down or ruled out entirely the influence of the screenwriter upon a finished film.

Producer-screenwriter (of the upcoming Young Winston) Carl Forman has likened the fate of the Hollywood screenwriter to being "the last guest at a formal dinner party for which a gauche hostess has provided no place cards, he is still trying to find his proper place at the table." Screenwriter-turned-director Billy Wilder had his screen-writing character in Sunset Boulevard cynically observe "audiences don't know anyone writes a picture. They think the actors make it up as they go along." The politics of auteur follow along the same lines, and the point there may be less facile but is equally faulty. The truth, especially in American films, was said by screenwriter Howard Koch (whose many credits include Casablanca and Letter to an Unknown Woman) who called film "a collaborative art to which many talents contribute. It seems obvious to me," he continued, "that the writers or writer-director (if he is both) creates the basic structure on which the other talents are built."

The classic case is Citizen Kane. The simple mention of its name brings to mind one person and one person alone: its director, producer, star, and co-scriptwriter Orson Welles. For years the film was and still is viewed as an extention of Welles' personality, a great burst of creative genius which eclipsed a great career in its initial outing. On the basis of this film, and the subsequent, incomplete The Magnificent Ambersons, Welles was voted by a survey of international critics as the greatest director of all time and Kane the greatest film. But who wrote Kane? The screenwriting credit at the conclusion of the film says:

Original Screenplay
Herman J. Mankiewicz
Orson Welles

Who, most people would ask, is Herman J. Mankiewicz? The immediate response was he wrote and directed a number of phenominally successful sophisticated comedies, culminating in the greatest example of "kitch" bitchiness ever filmed - All About Eve, and is still around having written the script for the forthcoming Sleuth. But that's Joseph Mankiewicz, Herman's younger brother. Herman Mankiewicz has had to fight the stigma of double obscurity; not only was his name all but ignored in considering Kane, but even to those who picked it up found themselves confusing his identity.

Herman J. Mankiewicz came to Hollywood in the Twenties following a career as both a drama critic and playwright upon the New York stage. He is best remembered as an engaging, energetic, intelligent, and sharp young man with more than a casual acquaintance with liquor. While a screenwriter in the Thirties, he became a well-liked acquaintance of newspaper magnate William Randolph Hearst and his mistress actress Marion Davies. He often was seen at dinners at her beach house and on weekend trips to Hearst's mammoth ranch estate "Sam Simeon". He often fantasized on writing a screenplay based upon Hearst's life. Pauline Kael claims in "Raising Kane," her two New Yorker pieces which act as an introduction to the recently published shooting script of the film, that Mankiewicz had thoughts on the film before he even went to Hollywood. She reports an incident in which Mankiewicz was said to have tested the typing of a stenographer by dictating a proposed synopsis of a new film. When the girl remarked the script seemed to be centered about Hearst, Mankiewicz reportedly said, "You're a smart girl."

Herman J. Mankiewicz and Orson Welles in one of their not too frequent congenial moments on the set of CITIZEN KANE. It has been reported that the only time the diety was mentioned on the set was when Welles past Manckiewicz and the sharp screenwriter said: "There by God, goes God."

It wasn't until fifteen years later did his imagined project germinate and it happened purely by accident. RKO Radio Pictures was a studio in financial troubles in 1938, needing a miracle to avert complete failure, the studio's new board chairman George J. Schaefer believed he found one in a contract with the stage's boy wonder Orson Welles. Not particularly interested in films, Welles demanded and received complete artistic control over his finished product. He used his freedom wisely, first bringing to Hollywood many of his New York-based Mercury Theater company, actors, actresses, technicians, then searching for the best Hollywood people he could possibly find for his initial outing in film. He first hoped to film Joseph Conrad's Heart of Darkness with the twenty-five year old Welles in dual roles of Marlow and Kurtz, but money was tight at the studio and the project was abandoned. Next came a spy thriller built along political themes called The Smiler With A Knife, which Welles adapted in a week from a Nicholas Blake novel. This was shelved in a casting dispute. By the end of 1939 Welles was desperate for a story. He called together his administrative staff of the Mercury Theater to decide what to do with the unemployed actors. In a misunderstanding with his producer John Houseman, Welles went into a maniacal rage. This was the end of the Mercury Theater.

When word of Welles' rage reached Mankiewicz, who was bedridden writing scripts for Welles' popular radio series, while waiting for Welles ' idea for the film, something seemed to have clicked, at least according to Kael. To Mankiewicz the rage of the actor was synomonous with that of the legendary Hearst and, in the back of his mind, loomed an unexpected, unauthorized biography. After a number of meetings between the two, they decided upon telling a story of a great man from a number of different perspectives. After rejecting Dillinger, Aimee Semple McPherson, and Dumas, they decided upon a fictionalized retelling of the life of William Randolph Hearst. Mankiewicz suggested Welles as the Hearst prototype, Welles jumped at the idea.

Citizen Kane was born as a brash, irreverant swipe at American success and home truths and the pun in its hero's name is less than unintentional. Mankiewicz and Welles were out to raise cain and, in doing so, created a legendary Hollywood scandal which aborted Welle's career. Hearst kept the film off the majority of American screens through the behind-the-scenes manueverings of M-G-M's mogul Louis B. Mayer. First the other studios attempted to buy from Schaefer the print, when he refused they covertly banned its showing. RKO had few theaters and, despite the critical outrage and enthusiastic reviews (except for the Hearst chain), the film made little money. Audiences found the techniques too bizarre. It hoped to sweep the Oscars and gain popularity through prestige, but sentimental Hollywood hadn't the courage to give the twenty-five year old Welles the awards he deserved (acting and directing) and, ironically enough, awarded the film statuettes in the Best Original Story and Screenplay category.

With the publication of Kane's script, the authorship has come to be under serious dispute. Pauline Kael plays down Welles, idolizes Mankiewicz; Peter Bogdanovich in the current "Esquire", takes the opposite argument. What they both agree upon is the much of the film's strength comes as much from its script's structural complexity as from the dazzling visual effects. In fact what remains great after repeated viewings is not the conscious, often obvious cinematic devices, but the way the story flows as it makes a complete, composite image of a man from snatches of character's memories. What is great about the script is that with all the kicking about of serious themes, it never takes it self seriously. It's fun not because it was shot with humor, but because it was written that way.

The publication of the screenplay restores the credit for the film to its original and proper critical perspective. Most major critics upon the films release in 1941 considered the work Mankiewicz's and not Welles. It wasn't until the politics of "auteur" was Mankiewicz glibly referred to as a screenwriter who spent more time drinking than writing. Welles can continue to answer questions as to Mankiewicz's contribution by elusively saying Mankiewicz was solely responsible for the "Rosebud" motif which is true of Kane's most often cited fault, but now this can be taken in its proper context. Mankiewicz was also responsible for the film's crackling tone, its journalistic jingoism, its little-boy-in-daddy's pants quality, its nasty expose. Welles may have amazed audiences with deep focus technique, but it was Mankiewicz's words which kept them entertained.

Returning to Koch, film by the necessities of its production, is a collaborative art form. The screenwriter has long been the whore of the partnership, well-payed, but a whore nonetheless. Today more-and-more attention is given to the screenwriter; his scripts are published, his work is better understood. It has been said that many good scripts have been ruined through faulty production, but no great film has ever been made without at least a good script, and any look at a Best Films of all times list is testament to that fact.

Campy Slumming Makes for Cinematic Scum

Bluebeard
An Edward Dmytryk Production; with Richard Burton, Virna Lisi, Raquel Welch, and Joey Heatherton

BY BRIAN DAILEY

The advertisements read "Burton is Bluebeard. He had a way with the world's most beautiful, most seductive, most glamorous women. . . he did away with them." Edward Dmytryk and Cinerama Releasing should be sued for false advertisements.

Richard Burton may be Bluebeard or Baron Kurt von Sepper as he's known in the movie but he also proves he's a man of no taste or selfrespect. After a string of such hideous fiascos as The Staircase, playing an aging homosexual barber, Villain, playing a criminal with a mother fixation and again a strange fascination for those of his own sex, and his usual glassy-eyed pretention performance as a figure from history in Anne of a Thousand Days, Burton has the stupidity and gall to involve himself in such a ridiculous story and uninteresting production as Bluebeard. Burton strolls through this movie in an intoxicated daze acting (if you can call it that) in a foolish parody of himself which completely destroys any recollection we might have had of him as a brilliant young actor in his earlier films like Becket or Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf? How a man of Burton's reputation and stature could allow himself to be decked out in blue velvet tuxedos with matching shirt just so his beard and costume would be well coordinated is beyond my comprehension. Speaking of his navy blue beard, well, all I can say is that Lady Clairol must have just gone berserk trying to invent a new dye especially for Burton's facial hair. Von Sepper is supposed to be a World War One Austrian flying ace but Burton plays him with an accent which fluctuates from what I suspect he'll sound like in his forthcoming portrayal of Trotsky and the way George spoke in Virginia Woolf (with a little bit of his Shakespearean muttering thrown in) just to remind us that this is Richard Burton we are watching.

As for "the world's most beautiful, most seductive, most glamorous women," in who's opinion do these particular actresses (I use the term loosely!) fit that category? Burton, himself, described them all perfectly when he said in the movie "They were all monsters, they only looked human when they were dead." In a way it seems all the actresses had the same thought about their own particular performances. They all appear to be trying to disguise themselves slightly as to be mistaken for some other actress who had enough sense not to get involved in this movie.

Karin Schubert, von Sepper's first wife, comes across as probably the most attractive, although looking at times a little like Tippi Hedren at her most deranged moment in Marnie. We at first feel sympathetic for the young bride as she patiently waits weeks for her husband to get well in order that their marriage might be consumated. But unfortunately, Ms. Schubert tires of playing the patient wife and one night does a striptease by untwirling fifteen feet of knitting she has wrapped herself in and trys to orally arouse her impotent and horrified husband (who wasn't half as horrified as the audience!) For her performance she is rightly shot.

The scene with Virna Lisi, wife number two, was the only enjoyable and inspired five minutes in the film. Ms. Lisi who romped through her role as a kookie flapper continually singing different tunes from the Hit Parade of the Twenties as she played hide-and-seek with her husband obviously had fun filming her sequence but her short bit of camp was cut short as was her head by a guillotine.

Looking like a cross between Julie Christie and Melina Mercouri, wife number three, Nathalie Delon had the bad luck or portraying Erika the wife who didn't know how to act in bed. In one scene Burton as well as the audience is subjected to Delon exposing each of her breasts (both of which incidentally she has given Christian names) and asked which of the two he (and we) like best. When Burton shows his and our disgust at this action Erika contacts a prostitute, Sybil Danning, (who looks like a man in drag) in order to learn the correct way to act in bed. Well, the two women practice on each other and Burton again saves us by dropping a chandelier on them both.

Raquel Welch playing a nun - if you can believe that then you could probably believe her performance - becomes Burton's fourth wife. She continually relates to her husband the names, nationalities and other important incidentials of the one hundred or so men she has slept with in her past. Ms. Welch who occasionally looks like a sickly Jill St. John is so convincing that we almost believe that by her confession she is really trying to get something off her chest, to use a popular expression. While trying to seduce her husband as she lies in a coffin for the lack of any place better to do it (after all what's one more name added to her list) Burton gets the hint and closes the coffin letting wife number four suffocate.

Marilu' Tolo, a militant Nazi predecessor to Women's Lib who turns out to have masochistic tendencies, somehow becomes number five. Finding out very early in this marriage that he has made a mistake Burton trys physical punishment on his wife but to his surprise she only asks for more. Burton agreeing with the audience decides that he can't take any more whether she can and performs his duty by drowning her in a barrel of wine.

Agostina Belli, Bluebeard's sixth and youngest wife, turns out to be nothing more than a teenage bitch who seems to have never been troubled by pimples because she always used her Cover Girl Medicated Make-up. We are subjected to two or three scenes of Ms. Belli lounging nude around the house laughing mockingly at Burton for being stupid enough to marry her and us for being stupid enough to sit through the film this long. So wife number six ends up being pecked to death by a falcon.

Wife number seven, Joey Heatherton, Bluebeard's only American wife and last (Thank God!) probably deserves to be killed by all six of the above mentioned methods for this hideous performance, but, unfortunately, she is allowed to live. After finding a secret room in their mansion filled with the frozen, mutilated bodies of Burton's previous wives Ms. Heatherton figures out her husband is impotent and in need of a little psychiatric help. When it's discovered that she knows of the bodies the only thing left to do is dispose of her also but before she dies she persuades Burton to relieve his conscience by telling her why he killed each of the previous wives. Thus after each flashback we return to the distorted and peevish expression which never left Ms. Heatherton's face throughout the entire film. Ms. Heatherton's in a last attempt to save her life rips off her dress exposing her breasts. After seeing almost every other wife of Bluebeard's perform the same action I couldn't help but think of those most appropriate words from Sunday, Bloody Sunday "Here come those tired teats again!" After her attempt at seduction fails Ms. Heatherton is put in the large freezer with the rest of the wives and left to slowly freeze to death.

Now for the real driving force behind this narrative and the utterly contrived subplots which ultimately lead to Bluebeard's death. At the beginning of the film Burton is shown to be an enthusiastic fascist who leads a group of soldiers into the Jewish section of the nearby city and sets the houses on fire. Dmytryk lingers lovingly for no apparent reason on the tear stained face of a young Jewish boy who has just seen his mother and father burned to death in their home. By the end of the movie everyone has completely forgotten this incident until Burton is at a train station waiting to meet a fascist dignitary. Out of the blue comes a strange character known as the violinist who has been lurking in the shadows around Bluebeard's mansion for years now and shoots Burton. By the use of the good old flashback we are informed that this is the young Jewish boy whose parents were killed. By an even more outrageous coincidence the violinist returns to the mansion of Bluebeard in order to desecrate the house (isn't killing Burton good enough!) and accidentally finds the secret room just in time to save Joey Heatherton's life. As Jay Cocks points out in Time "such an attempt at redeeming social significance is simply offensive not only for its cleverness and opportunism but because it uses the beginnings of genocide as the punch line in a campy, dirty joke."

No matter what any director did in filming this movie there is no way he could make up for the silly story and let it suffice to say that Edward Dmytryk comes no where near it.

The Film Column

BY BRIAN DAILEY

Because of the time and money involved in the making of a movie, the directors, actors and screenwriters are becoming more concerned and cautious about the productions they sign their names to. Following the example set in the early twenties by Douglas Fairbanks, Mary Pickford, and Charlie Chaplin who formed their own production company, United Artists, many young professionals in the film business are now forming their own companies.

A little over a year ago Paul Newman, Sidney Poitier, and Barbra Streisand joined together starting First Artists Productions in order to have greater control and financial backing for all the films they wanted to make. Earlier this year Steve McQueen joined the original three and just last week Dustin Hoffman became number five in First Artists. The first feature from the new production company was Pocket Money, an unsuccessful modern western with Newman and Lee Marvin. But by the end of this year each of the original three artists and Mr. McQueen will be featured in their own movies. The Life and Times of Judge Roy Bean directed by John Huston will star Newman, Ava Gardner and a number of major stars in cameo performances. Up the Sandbox starring Barbra Streisand will be directed by Irvin Kershcner while A Warm December will star and be directed by Mr. Poitier. Sam Peckinpah directs Steve McQueen's first film for the company, The Getaway costarring Ali MacGraw.

Last week it was also announced that those on the other side of the camera, the directors, have started their own company for the same reason as those in First Artists. As it stands right now the directors company is made up of three talented young men, all under 34, Peter Bogdanovich (The Last Picture Show, What's Up, Doc?), William Friedkin (The French Connection), and Francis Ford Copolla (The Godfather). These three American directors may ask other talented directors like Mike Nichols and Arthur Penn to join their company. This way one director won't have to worry about making more money on their particular films than the other because all the profits as well as the losses will be shared among all in the group. The directors will now be free to concentrate on making fewer but better films!

One big source for major film successes lately as well as in the past is the so called "Best-selling Novel". Love Story in 1970 and The Godfather in 71 both turned out to be the biggest successes as movies of the following years. This year it appears The Exorcist by William Blatty will be the number one Bestseller and certainly the book everyone is reading. As with its predecessors by Segal and Puzo, Blatty's thriller is currently being made into a film which may turn out to be the biggest film of 73 if tradition holds true. Blatty is not only writing the screenplay from his novel but is also producing the film. William Friedkin, best director of 1972, is directing the film which stars Max von Sydow, Ellen Burstyn (Academy Award nominees for The Last Picture Show), Lee J. Cobb, Kitty Winn, and Linda Blair.

Two other novels involving F. Scott Fitzgerald in varying ways are in the Hollywood news lately. First of all, Fitzgerald's most famous novel, The Great Gatsby is being remade. The 1949 version with Allan Ladd, Betty Field, and Macdonald Carey was a not completely successful but interesting picturization of Fitzgerald's saga of the roaring twenties. This time around Paramount has the film rights to Gatsby and have begun plans on the story earlier this year. Truman Capote was originally hired to write the screenplay but when he became ill and ran over the deadline for completion he was fired. Capote has taken Paramount to court but it seems Robert Evans, Paramount's head, has nevertheless replaced Capote with Francis Ford Copolla, scriptwriter of Patton and The Godfather. Ali MacGraw, Steve McQueen and Robert Redford were scheduled for leads in the new production until Ms. MacGraw (also Mrs. Robert Evans) divorced her husband and began seeing her co-star in The Getaway as well as in Gatsby, Steve McQueen. The word then circulating around Paramount Studios was that Evans had fired his ex-wife and was seeking Candice Bergen for the part of Daisy. At this writing it has been confirmed that Ms. MacGraw will continue as scheduled and that Jack Clayton the talented director of The Innocents, Room at the Top, Our Mother's House, and The Pumpkin Eater had been signed to direct the whole affair.

Zelda, the recent biography of Fitzgerald's wife, is in its own way causing quite a commotion. In a recent interview with Liza Minnelli, the newest female star made it quite clear that she was interested in playing the part and was actually trying to buy the film rights. Then only a few months ago in Variety newspaper there was an article stating Julie Christie and Warren Beatty were being sought to fill the roles of the two lovers. Now to confuse the issue completely, last week in Variety again there was an article mentioning that First Artists Productions was trying to buy the screen rights for one of their own co-owners, Barbra Streisand.

This leaves the movie fan a strange choice to hope for. Ms. Minnelli although giving a magnificent performance in Cabaret, doesn't seem to have the experience, polish or ability to pull off such a difficult role with much success but Ms. Streisand on the other hand, continually proving she alone can save some of the disasterous productions she has been in (On a Clear Day, and Hello Dolly) might be hard to believe in the role of a southern belle even though I'm sure she'd give it one hell of a try. The most likely candidate and best suited dramatic actess is Julie Christie who would undoubtedly receive her third Academy Award nomination and possibly go on to win that rare second Oscar if given the chance to portray Zelda. Well, only time will tell!

Films

The Abductors
This film is a low budget sequel to an earlier sex and violent oriented flick filled Ginger. Ginger returns in this adventure as Vincent Edwards's disciple to James Hood. Her efforts are put forth in attempting to squelch a band of kidnappers who make off with sweet young things to be sold as prostitutes to out of town businessmen. The Abductors has a little plot, a lot of naked young bodies, no feeling, and little to do in the city of Pittsburgh, a dreary setting at the time the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra is

The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari (1919)

The Big Heat (1953)
An honest cop after a mobster, gets too close to underworld dealings and the gangsters go after him. He adopts their own tactics and his idealistic campaign turns into a personal vendetta. Lee Marvin and Alexander Scourby as the heavies are given stiff competition by Gloria Grahame and Jeanette Nolan. Directed by Fritz Lang. Hampden Dining Commons, Sunday, October 1, 7:15

Easy Rider (1969)
Dennis Hopper's freeflowing motorcycle opera about two freaks who attempt to tour the Southwest and South. The Rednecks get the most intelligent lines. The two freaks, one a mystical moron (Peter Fonda), the other a cocky whiny con artist (Dennis Hopper), begin their motorcycle odyssey after smuggling heroin over the border and end it splattered by a highway somewhere in the deep South. Between these points they visit a commune, befriend a down-and-out lawyer (Jack Nicholson), the film is saving grace, visit a New Orleans brothel, and take an extended LSD trip. The improvisational dialogue (if seemed shamelessly stolen from Antonioni movies) and esoteric remarks, Hopper's direction is simple, literal, and at times quite nice. Cinematically, Hopper suggests a sense of wonder about the Southwest landscape and the incongruity of the journey that is supposed the hip emotionalness of this film is as a result self-indulgent Nicholson, but Hopper's movie has suggested Nicholson, but Hopper's movie. The soundtrack blows, North Vietnamese and Jimi Hendrix music, and Hopper's

His Girl Friday (1940)
Directed by Howard Hawks. Stars Cary Grant, Rosiland Russell, Ralph Bellamy. Based on the hit Broadway comedy "The Front Page" by Ben Hecht and Charles MacArthur, this film is one of the last and probably the funniest of the "screwball" comedies. Grant plays a demonic editor trying to persuade his top reporter who is also his ex-wife to stay on the paper and cover a complicated series of events revolving around an escaped convict and attempts to stay his execution. Fast-paced, black comedy probably the quickest dialogue in film history. Amherst Folklore Center, Tuesday, October 3, 7:30.

Last Of The Red Hot Lovers
The seven year itch multiplied by three; a Jewish husband, bordering on middle age, decides to seduce three comic prototypes in his mother's apartment while his wife is on vacation. The script is by Neil Simon, and falls into his mold of conventional wisecracks; they're funny in the usual Broadway way. Alan Arkin plays the husband, his attempted amoured are Paula Prentiss, Renee Taylor, and Sally Kellerman. Gene Saks directed. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

The Last Picture Show (1971)
The Best American Film of last year is this depressing, bleak vision of life about the coming of age of three youngsters in a small Texas town in 1951. Directed by Peter Bogdanovich the film is a straightforward well crafted, well-acted narrative about the perils of growing up in Hollywood directors. Despite some melodramatic plotting is the most poignant film in quite some time. The acting is superb by a cast of mostly unknown character actors led by Cloris Leachmen, Timothy Bottoms, Jeff Bridges. Eileen Brennan, and Ben Johnson. Academy of Music, Northampton.

The Little Shop Of Horrors (1960)
Roger Corman's little horror satire is a gem of its genre; for more than two-thirds of the time it is bright, and irrevent. It is the story of a Woody Allen-type shmiel who accidently discovers a new flowering plant while fighting to keep his job at a florist shop in faltering. The attraction of the plant booms business, keeps the boy in the favor of the shop's owner and his daughter, and makes him a local celebrity; the catch to it all is his plant thrives on human flesh. During the night the plant cries out "Feed Me!" and poor little Seymour dutifully obeys by finding human flesh. The satire moves well beyond the realm of the horror film, everyone, from hypochondriacs through Dragnet-like policeman-through sadistic dentists, become the brunt of Corman's humor. The film falters towards the end, but has enough wild inventive bits to make it an unexpected pleasure. With Jack Nicholson in one of his many American-International B-picture roles. Student Union Ballroom, Friday, September 29, 7 and 1:30 A.M.

The Love Parade (1929)
Directed by Ernst Lubitsch one of the biggest hits in the United States and Europe the year it opened, this parody of operetta launched the career of singing star Jeannette and Maurice, sovereigns of the monarchy of Sylvania, wage a battle of the sexes in Lubitsch's first sound film and one of the great early musicals. Thompson, Sunday, October 1, 7 and 9.

Luv (1967)
Murray Schisgal disarming play about middle class marriage in New York somehow didn't make the transition to film with much of its bright, fresh humor intact. The play took place on the Brooklyn Bridge where a member of the cast's trio is about to commit suicide. The film expands the action, but not the humor. One engaging performance by Elaine May, with Peter Falk and Jack Lemmon. Hampden Dining Commons, Saturday, September 30, numerous times not available at this writing.

Macbeth
Roman Polanski has re-created Shakespeare's classic story of murder, guilt and revenge with a flamboyant style that includes his own imaginative touches as well as a traditional rendition of plot. The film is visually stunning, but often astonishingly gory. Polanski revels in the grotesque with his usage of nude, misshapen witches, and in the sensual with his Lady MacBeth, who sleepwalks in the nude. The acting, for the most part is extremely well done, but without the dynamic force or strength of conviction necessary to do justice to Shakespeare's masterpiece. Jerry Lewis Cinema, Northampton.

Mandabi
Directed by Ousmene Sembene, this is a vignette of contemporary life in Senegal. Sembene, a novelist as well as director, received his education at the Gorky Institute in Moscow and first became known to western cinema after receiving a Cannes Film Festival prize in 1967. The film deals with contemporary life in Dakar and manifests the energy of a black culture beset by the vestiges of colonial western traditions. Southwest Student Center, Monday, Oct. 2, 7 p.m.

Marjoe
A cinema documentary by Howard Smith and Sarah Kernochan of the "Village Voice" about a kid brought up from the age of three to be a revivalist preacher, though his true wish is to follow in Mick Jagger's footsteps as a rock superstar. Leon Russell recently introduced him at a West Coast concert and his visits to the talk shows are beginning to make him one of television's most fascinating personalities. His film works sometimes and his story is told with a good deal of sympathetic irony that makes Marjoe seem less a shyster and more a victim of circumstance. Showcase Cinemas. West Springfield.

The New Centurions
The policeman as superstar. Rome had its centurions to guard the frontiers from invading huns, we have the police ours to protect us from....Better acted than it probably deserved but only marginally entertaining. The plot moves in small bursts and doesn't seem to go anywhere, except into the bedroom of the worried wife of a cop where she faithfully awaits her husband's return each night. The film could have best been a public service spot. With George C. Scott, our best film actor, and Stacey Keach, who may well become our best new actor. Showcase Cinemas. West Springfield.

The Other
Thomas Tryon's best seller was adapted without much thought by him to the screen into this syrupy Gothic horror story. When the film was first being shown to critics, they were kept from being told the plot twist upon which the silly story hinges. It's the story of twins, one good and one bad, and murderous misdoings in the Connecticut countryside during the Thirties. Robert Mulligan directs this film in such a soft, languid manner that it appears he coated his lens with Vaseline. He should have tried hiding the secret with more care; it is altogether obvious Tyron, an actor himself, has had the unfortunate knack of having used a healthy number of already cliche horror story devices. We have all been over the ground Mulligan and he linger over so lovingly. Last summer a critic said he may very well go to his grave believing this film was the worst he had ever seen, which may seem slightly hyperbolic, but is closer to the truth than most reviews have indicated. Campus Cinemas, Hadley; Calvin Theater, Northampton.

Theater

Performance (1970)
An often stunning but ultimately vacant and vague metaphysical tale about role playing in the criminal and kinky London underworld. James Fox plays a sadistic mobster on the run who hides out in the empty, decaying mansion of a former rock star (Mick Jagger). Like it or not, he finds himself caught up in the psychological games they play. The film splits in half; the original print only concerned itself with the Jagger mansion section but upon bad previews this portion was trimly edited and an additional opening sequence was added where James Fox escapes the mob. Curiously enough, there is a coherence, and a direct parody of parts: early in the film Fox attends a meeting of mob chieftans which is repeated in his acid trip with Jagger as the chieftan singing Jagger at that moment is the agile, mesmerizing performer he is said to be on stage. Much nonsense in the end. Directed by Donald Cammell and Nicholas Roeg. Sage Hall, Smith College; Saturday, September 30, 7:30 and 9:30.

Splendor In the Grass (1961)
Natalie Wood and Warren Beatty as misunderstood teenagers in love during the Depression. Director Elia Kazan produced and directed this film from a William Inge script. It is based upon the Freudian concept that sexual repression will drive you crazy. Wood and Beatty are too young by their parents standards to be in love and are denied the pleasures of conjugal love. This drives poor Warren into a floozie and little Natalie into a loon. As in most adolescent films, the argument is loaded for the kids and the parents are seething, hypocritical monsters. Student Union Ballroom, Saturday, September 30, 7 and 9:30.

They Might Be Giants (1971)
George C. Scott and Joanne Woodward star in this generally neglected, comedy-drama about a man who fantasizes being Sherlock Holmes and falls in love with his analyst named Dr. Watson. Written by James Goldman ("The Lion In Winter," the book for the musical "Follies"), the film is something of an obvious, out-of-date, wisecracking comedy with two fun performances from its stars. Student Union Ballroom, Sunday, October 1, 7 and 9.

Who's Afraid Of Virginia Woolf? (1966)
Edward Albee's celebrated terror comedy about the after hour fun-and-games of two academic couples was a major film for a number of reasons. First it marked Mike Nichols debut as a film director and his victory seems one by default. It wasn't until The Graduate did he prove his ability to craft a film with ease and spontaneity. Here his handling is adequate. The play has been adbridged, but still marked some sort of victory over Hollywood censorship. It's most important facet was that Elizabeth Taylor proved once again she could act, and as Martha, the hard-drinking, mythic bitch, she literally swallows the film. On the other hand Richard Burton in a contrasting controlled, modulated performance as her husband George, the college professor who never plays vicious games like a champ. As the younger couple George Segal and Sandy Dennis are, at best, adequate. Albee's bitchy dialogue stings; it has been rumored that the play was about two homosexual couples, but Albee denies this. Amherst College, Thursday, October 4, time and place unavailable.

As You Like It
The New Shakespeare Company of San Francisco - which is remembered for its tour to the East Coast last year - returns east for two and one half months of engagements at colleges and universities. The Company will perform As You Like It here at UMass. Directed by Margrit Roma, the Company of twenty-five actors and technicians perform Shakespeare as they believe his plays were performed for Elizabethan audiences: direct, involving and bawdy - with havoc, humor, and spontaneity as the only order. To paraphrase Shakespeare: To roar you as gently as any sucking dove, or any nightingale, is the Company's promise. Campus Center Auditorium, Tuesday, October 3, 8. ($)

Concert Dance Group
Annual fall lecture demonstration. Explanation of creative ideas of choreographers and dancers, followed by presentation of fully costumed concert pieces. Bowker Auditorium, UMass, 8:15.

Oliver
Lionel Bart wrote the book, music and lyrics to this musical adaptation of Charles Dickens' Victorian novel about a young lad and his adventures in the London underworld. It ran for more than three years in New York and was made into a handsome, satisfying film. The play is another matter entirely, filled with typical Broadwayish charm which sticks at your insides and cloys at your intelligence. The popular score includes "Consider Yourself", "I'll Do Anything" and "As Long As He Needs Me". Presented by the Amherst Masquers. Kirby Theater, Amherst College, Friday through Monday, September 29 through October 2 at 8:30; special matinee Saturday, September 30 at 2:30. ($)

Letters To The Editor

Third World 'Genocide'?

To The Editor:
I write in response to Mr. Masse's letter of 9-27-72 regarding his feelings that making abortions available to third world peoples is a less-than-subtle attempt at third world genocide. I spent eight months in the OPD department of Boston City Hospital during 1969 as a clerk in prenatal clinic. During that time our clinic interviewed, in Spanish, French, Portuguese, English and whatever other language was necessary, all the women registering for prenatal care at BCH. It didn't take long for me to become aware of the solid support most of our patients had from their husbands, parents, brothers, sister, lovers and friends during their pregnancies. Some of those pregnancies may have come as surprise or as something of a belt-tightening experience, but those women wanted their babies, and came in regularly for the proper prenatal care, often with somebody they trusted to be with them, either to help translate, or just to be in there, with the doctor. These were fine examples of third world cultures taking care of their own with real love and interest.

The largest percentages of women seeking abortions legally in the U.S. are white and middle class, possibly because white, middle class women have the money and connections to get them. Third world women aren't always so lucky; they have to do the best they can in most cases, which is not always so safe or so legal. Still, Bureau of Women figures show the third world woman as more likely to keep her child, even if illegitimate, than a white woman. Steve Masse, Elija Mohammud, and the Catholic Church, among others, have said to third world women; don't have those abortions. Elija and the Church say no sterilizations, no birth control. It seems, though, from what I've seen and read, that those third world people who are strongly allied to their cultures don't have to be told not to have abortions. Wherever it's possible, and often where it's a hardship, they damned well WANT their babies.

What troubles me is what Mr. Masse, perhaps thinking about it in the abstract and not in terms of the reality of his implications for a woman, especially any woman who is not making a good wage, and who for any reason is alienated from a supportive, loving situation, hasn't mentioned. Though we all come from one culture or another, we do not all come from families that provide the materials for becoming relatively happy, successful people. A woman who's not sure of herself, whose approach to the world is; love me; help me; making mistakes and getting into trouble is still trying to get herself together, though often without much help. For her, away from the support of her culture, the world is cold, vicious, and frightening. Getting happy is a problem, making money is a problem, getting secure is a problem and getting pregnant, even with hope and a seeking for love, can be a real problem. When a woman still needs time to develop her needs and herself, any drain on her resources is going to be tough on her. A child is no exception.

BCH gets another group of pregnancies. They come in at the emergency entrance; bleeding a lot from a home-remedy abortion attempt and scared. A third group comes in cold. It amazes me how many people never seem to consider how desperate one has to be to risk death and seek an illegal abortion. Where's Mr. Masse's suggestion for a woman that scared, that desperate, that in need of help? Ever talk to a mother who can't raise her child because she's so emotionally disturbed herself? Ever talk to a woman carrying the guilt of having beat her child up; though she's not sure why? Talk to a person who's been battered as a child, been neglected and ignored all his/her life, and tell me that's not its own insidious form of genocide.

If each culture was able to help all its people, white, third world, or whatever, we might not have cases where somebody goofed and can't handle the situation. Still, abortion has got to be one of the solutions available to a desperate woman, because chances are she's not going to sit by and listen to a sermon on genocide. Chances are, if she's scared enough to consider an illegal abortion, her culture and family may have already failed her, and committed its own sort of emotional genocide.

Police-Eye View

To The Editor:
In response to Mr. Jonathan Poster's letter to the Collegian on Tuesday, September 26, I would like to present the police perspective on the "alcohol issue". In November, 1972, the voters of Massachusetts are expected to approve a complex revision of the Commonwealth's alcohol laws. Included in this change will be sections which will substantially alter the police approach to alcohol problems. On March 1, 1973, the following changes will take place: 1) the drinking age will be lowered to 18, 2) the "crime" of drunkenness will no longer exist, and 3) alternative forms of alcohol treatment, such as detoxification centers, will be encouraged. Alcohol abuse will then be classified correctly as an illness, not as a crime. The police approach will be to work with social service agencies, such as Room to Move, by providing referral services when we encounter alcohol abuse.

Secondly, in response to the statement that Mr. Poster made that "the police have never been so arrest crazy over misdemeanors." I cite the following statistics for the month of September in 1971 and 1972:

Drunkeness	33
Operating under the influence of alcohol	8
Traffic violations	8
Other misdemeanors	10
Felonies	9
Total	68

1972
Drunkeness	6
Operating under the influence of alcohol	1
Traffic violations	3
Other misdemeanors	5
Felonies	3
Total	18

In short, we have arrested 50 fewer persons than at this time last year.

I would add that the vast majority of drunkenness arrests result from specific complaints from the dorms; in many cases dorm personnel are unable to control persons attending private parties within the houses. We do not and will not arbitrarily arrest persons by plucking them off the street.

Finally, contrary to the implication contained in his letter, Mr. Poster was not arrested for possession of alcohol or drunkenness, in spite of the fact that he was under 21. In fact, he was not arrested at all. As a means to prevent incidents such as those referred to by Mr. Poster, we can only urge that dorms sponsoring parties send 21-year-olds to buy their liquor. Hopefully, the alcohol revision in March will alleviate most of these problems.

Editorial Points

All you people from Natick can go home at Thanksgiving, go to the Natick-Framingham South football game and yell "Go, Minutemen". That'll really flip 'em out.

Since the Red Sox moved to Florida for the winter, they tied the Detroit Tigers for the Championship of Polk County every year but three. In 1967, the Red Sox won the exhibition series, and went on to win the pennant. In 1968, the Tigers beat the Red Sox in Florida, and they won the pennant. In 1972, the Tigers won the Florida Series again. Traditions are made to be broken.

Jewish Power

To The Editor:
I strenuously object to Steven Masse's indiscriminate use of the expression "Judeo-Christian". I know of no "Judeo-Christian" doctors, hospitals, Indian-fighters or overtones. First of all, this expression is only continuing to be used by those who still worship at the altars of the Holy Melting Pot. The Jews didn't melt, among others, and refuse to melt in future.

The only people who have the right to consent to the use of such an expression is the Jewish people. I know of no existing consent and can't imagine it ever happening. There is no Judaic influence in America today. Jusiasm and Christianity have very little in common. The Christian virtues of individuality and the work ethic are alien to the Jew, the first because he identified as a part of his community first, and second, because even though the Jew has worked hard and contributed much to America, he is oppressed and excluded. How many Jews, not tokens, are in banks, utilities, large corporations, diplomatic service, or the government? When was the last time you saw a real Jewish family on TV, not the stereotypes? Oppression and hate don't have to be physical, Bernie.

I personally do not want to be considered as part of Christian America. I am a Jews, and that is a complete and satisfying existence for me. And I've been wondering lately about good Christians. You see, I've gone marching for Indians, Chicanos, Puerto Ricans, and Blacks, and protested against the War, and done all the other hippie college shit. And last night, where were you, my comrades? Where are you for Soviet Jewry? Where are you for those murdered in Munich? Where are you for Israel? And where are you now when I need you? Please omit crocodile tears, and don't send flowers.

Finally, America has eliminated the Jews from participating in its cultural development, so drop your "Judeo-Christian" if you please. But don't ever think that we who stand alone now, as usual, will become a disintegrating body filled with weakness and fear. We're stronger and more together now than ever. And the reason is we're proud to be Jews, and our pride gives us unconquerable strength.

Chauvinist Pig

Dear Mr. Arledge:
The September 23, 1972 University of Massachusetts versus University of Maine Football Program contained an article signed by Beano Cook of ABC-TV Sports entitled "Pre-Season Chicks". It was carried on page 17.

The people of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts enjoy a number of legal protections for its citizens against discrimination by reason of sex, age, race, national origin and similar irrelevant, impersonal and insensitive distinctions. At the present time the women of this nation and this Commonwealth enjoy little more than the comfort that statutes unenforced and unacknowledged bring to any conventional minority. While women are not a numerical minority, they are victims of a system in quite the same way as any serf in a feudal baroney.

People, institutions and corporations worthy of respect within the community at large restrain themselves from exhibiting prejudicial feelings and strive for a more exquisite balance in their approach toward those groups in the society that are the target of cultural biases. When public institutions (and I believe that term embraces the media) brazenly disregard the sense and sensibilities of women (or blacks, shicanos, indians, homosexuals, immigrants, one-legged veterans, etc.) the institutions exhibit a moral and ethical bankruptcy that calls into question the very right of freedom of expression and freedom from regulation they prefer to enjoy.

You will please understand that I am no proponent of censorship. I am concerned that the vehicle by which ABC Sports has exhibited its (or Beano Cook's) sexual feelings provides for no effective rebuttal. The domination by the media of both press and the frequency spectrum, which are to a greater or lesser degree the property of the people, demands a degree of responsibility that you have denied in the instant matter.

I do not know where else this article may have appeared, but I surely believe you are obligated to apologize to American women. I assume that you will also see that your sportcasters will stick to casting sports, keeping their hands to themselves.

Very truly yours,
Richard M. Howland

Cross Cultural Workshops

Last weekend was the first of eight Cross Cultural Workshops planned for this semester. Six foreign and six American students joined in John Adams Tower to discuss cultural self-awareness, to participate in exercises aimed at bringing out and breaking down the barriers between cultures, along with sharing of different foods, games and recreation.

Each group includes two trainers, drawn from different areas of the University and community: Center for International Education, returned Peace Corps volunteers, Human Relations Center and International Programs staff. The aim of the workshops is to bring prople of varied backgrounds together to learn something about other cultures. They are unstructured in the sense that the participants are encouraged to discuss anything they like and to modify the program according to the what the group wants to do.

The workshop this week-end found that they had too much to discuss, and too many questions left unanswered at the end of the week-end and decided to meet again on their own to resolve some of the problems that arose during the workshop.

There will be three more week-end workshops and four weekly seminars before December. Any one that is interested in attending any of the workshops should sign-up in the International Programs office or call Ann Silva or Debbie McCafferty at 545-0010.

The next week-end workshop will be October 14-15 in Cummingfield, Mass. There will be a fee of $10 to cover travel, food and rental of the activity center. The weekly evening seminars will be held in Southwest, beginning in October

French Programs To Be On WFCR

Beginning this coming Monday evening, October 2nd, WFCR, the Five-College radio station, will be carrying an exclusively French-speaking program twice weekly. The program, whose overall title is Tout en Francais, will be broadcast on Monday and Wednesday evenings, from 7:30 to 8 P.M. The Monday program, subtitled Music Hall, will feature French and Canadian light and popular music.

The first program in this series will present a panorama of the best-known French and Canadian artists in the field both before and since the Second World War. The second program will feature Yvette Guilbert and some songs of the Belle Epogue. Succeeding programs will either center on one of the great singers, such as Edith Piaf, Yves Montand, Maurice Chevalier, George Brassens, Jacques Brel, etc; or on one of the main themes that run through this type of music.

French translations of American musical comedies and French operettas will also be presented. A very brief resume of each song will be provided as well as some of the lyrics, in the hope that the latter will eventually be absorbed into the listening public's vocabulary.

The Wednesday programs, subtitled Un Peu de Tout (a little of everything) will literally be just that. The first program on October 4th will be a tribute to the late author Jules Romains. The second program will give a series of interviews done in French by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation on Canadian emigration to the U.S., and there will be comments and additions by Mademoiselle Allard of the UMass French and Italian Department. The third program in the series will be an interview in French with Edward Phillips of Southampton, an Amherst College graduate who spent his past year in France, on an Amherst fellowship, studying with Nadia Boulanger.

The program ends with Mr. Phillips playing a Bach Fantasy and Fugue on the organ. Other programs planned include poetry-and-music, fairy tales, African poetry, and interviews with Frenchmen visiting on the five campuses.

Every Un Peu de Tout program will begin with a five-minute summary of the week's news from France. These will be given by two French teaching assistants at Amherst College this year.

Peace Corps/VISTA Here Next Week

If your major was in liberal arts or social sciences and you talked to a Peace Corps/VISTA representative during the past couple of years, chances are you didn't get much encouragement.

Things have changed according to Kathy Rick, a former Peace Corps volunteer, who'll be at UMass with four other former volunteers Monday thru Friday, October 2-6 to talk to seniors about applying for Peace Corps and VISTA.

"For the past three years, the number of people with general majors had been shrinking," said Kathy who noted that before 1969 the Peace Corps volunteer typically had a background in history, psychology, political science, fine arts, sociology, etc. Then Peace Corps and VISTA, to lesser extent, began selecting fewer 'generalists' and more people with specific degrees.

Kathy says that there are about 2,500 openings this year for seniors with general majors.

Todd Baumgardt, an ex-VISTA, said the college campuses are still the major producer of volunteers. He added that the University of Massachusetts led all the colleges and universities in the Northeastern States last year in terms of the number of seniors who applied to Peace Corps and VISTA.

Why are Peace Corps and VISTA recruiting generalists again?

The representatives claim that both domestic and overseas programs have been reevaluated and a key finding was that volunteers with general skill are needed.

For instance, a volunteer team on a project will go like this: on research horticulturalist to develop disease resistant vegetables, and three people with liberal arts degrees to work with rural farmers in planting, caring for and picking the new vegetables. Or, a lawyer to do court work and two generalists to work with community groups on a tenants-rights project.

"It's difficult for a specialist to be effective without input from the kind of field-or case-work that the generalist does and visa versa," claims Baumgardt who added that a genrealists' chances of acceptance improve markedly if they've had experience working with community groups, tutoring programs, Head Start or a drug rehabilitation center.

The representatives said that VISTA has put a high priority on recruiting people who will have on of the following degrees this June: accounting, business administration, nutrition, dietetics, home economics education, architecture and city planning, and health.

Peace Corps needs graduates with the same degrees as VISTA and, additionally, has put increasing emphasis on finding volunteers with agricultural degrees, math and science, industrial arts and vocational education, and French and Spanish, If you've lived or worked on a farm, you're a good candidate for a Peace Corps agricultural assignment, regardless of current major.

Along with Kathy Rick and Todd Baumgardt will be former volunteers Richmond Woodall, who was with Peace Corps in Kenya, Judith Moroney, a VISTA in Georgia and Ken French who was in a poultry program in India.

The representatives will be on the concourse level of the Campus Center Monday thru Friday, October 2-6 from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. If you have other committements that day you are encouraged to call Lori Shea, person-to-person, collect in Boston at 617-223-6366 for further information.

Belchertown School Needs Volunteer Help

Have you ever been to Belchertown? Have you ever wondered what the Belchertown State School is like?

Belchertown State School for the mentally retarded is about 10 miles from UMass. There are little over 1,000 residents there, they range in ages from seven to seventy and they all seek companionship.

The Belchertown Volunteers is a group of UMass students who spend three hours of their Saturdays to brighten the lives of the residents of Belchertown. The residents of Belchertown have very few visitors and there are not enough staff members to give the residents individual attention which they require.

This is where the Belchertown Volunteers play a major role at Belchertown. They can give the residents the individual attention which they need. A volunteer can take some adolescent boys outside to play football or basketball. When there are volunteers, the kids in the wheelchairs have someone to take them outside; outside of the building they stay in 24 hours a day, seven days a week. A volunteer can sit and talk to an elderly person who otherwise would have no one else to talk to.

It is particularly important to have many Volunteers at this time of the year when the weather is still good. The more volunteers who participate, the more people will be able to go outside.

Will you become a Belchertown Volunteer? The bus to Belchertown leaves every Saturday afternoon at 12:45 from the front of Whitmore. It returns to campus by 4:00. Belchertown Volunteers is people helping people.

If you have any questions, call 6-9801 and ask for Jay.

Parking Regulations Revised

Editors Note: This notice is from the Parking Office.

As a result of recent student-faculty expansion, the University of Massachusetts/Amherst, is suffering from a severe shortage of parking space. This condition unfortunately necessitates the rigorous enforcement of existing rules and regulations. In an attempt to minimize parking problems and prevent unintentional violations, the following list of frequently-violated restrictions has been prepared.

1) No parking is allowed in any dormitory or dining commons area, at any time, by vehicles not specifically assigned to spaces in those areas.

2) Towable offenses are strictly enforced. They include parking in fire lanes, no-parking zones, reserved spaces, and on sidewalks. Tow zones are clearly marked.

3) Any person having a vehicle registered with the University, and occasionally finding it necessary to bring an unregistered vehicle onto the campus, must obtain a Temporary Parking Permit, or park the unregistered vehicle in the Campus Center Garage.

4) All vehicles brought onto the campus by students, staff, and faculty must be registered at the Parking Office within seven (7) days of the arrival or use of vehicle on campus. A vehicle to which proper vehicle registration insignia has not been affices is not considered a registered vehicle. Any citations issued to the vehicle are the responsibility of the registered owner.

5) Vehicles must park only in the area, or lot, to which they are assigned. Allowance is made for vehicles on official University business.

6) In other than dormitory or dining commons area, any registered vehicle may be parked in any legal space on campus between the hours of 6:00 p.m. and 7:00 a.m., Monday through Friday, except where such parking violates snow removal regulations. Parking is permitted at all times during the weekends.

7) During periods in which students are moving in or out of dormitories, temporary parking in dormitory areas for purposes of loading and unloading is permitted; however, a person must attend the vehicle at all times, to ensure that the vehicle can be moved upon request.

Foreigners Should Check Oath

Foreign nationals faced with the obligation to sign the Massachusetts oath statement are advised by the Foreign Student Office to take full advantage of the grace period-until November 15-before signing the statement, and to check with the Foreign Student Office (Whitmore 239) or with Attorney Richard Howland (Campus Center) around November 15 for further guidance if they are still unclear about the outcome of the issue.

Many foreign governments (e.g. Canada, Germany) are sensitive about their citizens' performing acts which express or imply loyalty to a government other than their own. Regardless of the substantive content of the oath, or lack of it, and its American constitutionality as recently determined by the U.S. Supreme Court, such governments may on learning of such signature, refuse to renew passports of their nationals or otherwise revoke to such nationals their full rights of citizenship.

'Chemistry In Action' Schedule

The fourth talk will describe the job picture as it looks today (better) and where good opportunities might be found.

J.V. Soccer Season Opens Vs. Holyoke

By GEOFFREY KURINSKY

The Junior Varsity soccer squad kicks off its 1972 season today, facing always tough Holyoke Community College at 3:00, on the soccer field across from Boyden Gym.

The last two weeks of practice have been most important because in that time the squad has been trimmed from 40 players down to the present 29. The JV booters' first scrimmage took place down the road at Amherst College as the two teams got a look at all their players while playing three 45 minute halves. Dave Penza provided all the offensive thrust for UMass, scoring on an assist from linemate Art Boyle in a losing effort at the hands of the Lord Jeffs 2-1. The score, however, was unimportant because the main impetus in the scrimmage was to see al 40 players in actual game conditions and decide who would stay with the squad when it begins it's season this afternoon. Coach Jack Berryman cited, "Some of the decisions were almost impossible. I have 40 capable players on this squad."

The key to this season will be in the performance of the men who go both ways, the halfbacks. They serve as a link between the defense (fullbacks) and the offense (forwards) and have ability to make the team work as a cohesive unit. In the coaches own words, "If the halfbacks play well, the whole team will play well."

Freshman Greg Fiske and Junior John Wright will team up and start the game at halfback, while capable substitutes include Jeff Nelson, Brian Maxfield, Jim White, Alan Long, and Robert Snow. These seven players were chosen out of a field of 14 halfback candidates, all of whom could do the job well.

The starting forward line will consist of four eager freshman; Jim Fitzgerald, Gary Lieberman, Dave Penza, and Art Boyle, while the starters at fullback, will be Freshman Dan Ouelette, along with Sophomores Scot Smoller, Ken Sirinek, and Jim O'Hara.

The goal-keeping chores will be handled by Sophomore Barry Lutchen who has looked impressive in beating out Paul Peloquin and Tom Fenton for the starting job.

Holyoke Community always seems to come up with their share of local talent from such high schools as Holyoke, Chicopee, and powerhouse Ludlow and will provide ample competition for the JV booter when they kick-off their season this afternoon.

Sanderson and Cheevers Win Court Battle

BOSTON (AP)— A Federal judge Thursday said professional hockey "would seem to be" subject to anti-trust regulations and therefore refused to prohibit former Boston Bruins standouts Derek Sanderson and Gerry Cheevers from jumping to a rival hockey league.

U.S. District Court Judge Andrew Caffrey refused the request for a preliminary injunction from the National Hockey League champion Bruins, opening the way for Sanderson and Cheevers to play with teams in the World Hockey Association. The WHA is about to begin its initial season of play.

Bruins' President Weston Adams Jr. said he was disappointed with Caffrey's ruling and said attorneys for the Stanley Cup-champion Bruins would appeal the decision Friday in the 1st U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Boston.

In a memorandum attached to his ruling, Caffrey said "because of its peculiar international character involving several teams in Canada as well as the United States, professional hockey would seem to be the leading candidate for a ruling that it is subject to federal anti-trust laws."

Cheevers, a goalie, has signed a seven-year contract with the Cleveland entry in the WHA which Caffrey's memorandum said spread $1.4 million in $200,000 annual installments. It said the Bruins had offered Cheevers $70,000 plus bonuses for the 1972-73 season.

Sanderson, a controversial center, has signed a 10-year contract with the WHA's Philadelphia Blazers for $2.32 million, the memorandum said.

In addition to other benefits, the memorandum said Sanderson would receive $300,000 each of the first two years of the contract, $200,000 each of the next five years, $225,000 the eighth year and $250,000 each of the final two years. It said the Bruins offered Sanderson $80,000 plus bonuses for the upcoming season.

Caffrey noted in the memorandum that the U.S. Supreme Court had held in the Curt Flood case that baseball was exempt from anti-trust regulations.

But Caffrey said that ruling appeared to be based on "an historical accident, an anamoly based on historical rather than legal or rational grounds."

Caffrey said in considering the Bruins plea for injunctive relief to prohibit Sanderson and Cheevers from playing in another league he had to balance the financial rewards which the players might lose against the damage the Bruins might suffer without them.

"I find that the balance of hardship favors the defendants, who would suffer a much more serious hardship if the injunction was granted than the Bruins would suffer by the denial of the injunctive relief," Caffrey wrote in his memorandum.

"It is ordered the motion for preliminary injunction against Cheevers and Sanderson be denied in their respective cases," he wrote.

Pot Raised

BOSTON (AP) - The prize money in the women's segment of the 1972 Commercial Union Grand Prix of Tennis has been raised to $100,000, Commercial Union and the International Lawn Tennis Federation said Thursday.

The increase of $10,000 in the women's share raised the total Grand Prix bonus pool for women and men to $400,000.

In all, 20 men and 15 women will receive shares in the pool.

The top prize for women now will be $22,500. It already has been clinched by Billie Jean King, of Hilton Head, S.C., who this year swept the French, Wimbledon, and U.S. Open championships.

Three players-Ilie Nastase, of Rumania, defending Grand Prix champion Stan Smith, of Sea Pines, S.C., and Manuel Orantes, of Spain-still are contending for the men's top prize of $50,000.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

by SYDNEY OMARR

A woman born under Capricorn is fond of wearing gloves and hat. That is the observation of some atrologers and I tend to agree. The Capricorn woman is basically formal. She may break the rules, but she never forgets them. She may leave home, but she usually returns. The Capricorn woman feels intensely, cannot exist without love, strives to improve her position in life and can be dominated by her emotions. There is a regal quality which surrounds this woman and she is aware of it.

A's Clinch

OAKLAND (AP) - Oakland clinched baseball's American League West championship Thursday as Dal Maxvill drilled a game-winning double in the bottom of the ninth inning to power the A's to an 8-7 triumph over the Minnesota Twins.

Minnesota reliever Dave LaRoche, 5-6, hit leadoff batter Sal Bando with a pitch before Maxvill doubled to left-center field to win the game for Rollie Fingers, 10-9.

The A's, trailing 7-0 after five innings, fought back to tie it in the eighth on Angel Mangual's bases-loaded, two-run single.

Steve Braun had a two-run double for the Twins in the first inning, then singled home a run in a five-run fifth that knocked out Oakland starter John "Blue Moon" Odom.

Mike Epstein's 26th home run of the season put Oakland on the scoreboard in the fifth inning and Joe Rudi hit a double play grounder that gave the A's another run in the sixth.

Henderson Goal Sparks Team Canada Comeback

MOSCOW (AP) - Paul Henderson scored a goal with 34 seconds left to give Team Canada a 6-5 victory Thursday night over the Soviet Union.

The victory gave Team Canada-made up of stars of the National Hockey League-the eight-game series 4-3 with one game tied. Henderson also scored the winning goal in the closing minutes of Tuesday night's game.

The Canadians, down 5-3 going into the third period of their decisive match, came up with three goals in the last 20 minutes to grab the victory.

Phil Esposito pulled the Canadians to 5-4 only 2:27 into the period. Pete Mahovlich dug the puck out behind the Soviet net and flipped it to Esposito in front of the cage. He knocked it to the ice with his hand and fired it passed Soviet goalie Vladimir Tretyiak.

Ten minutes later, Yvan Cournoyer knotted the score at 5-5. Henderson scored the clincher when the puck popped free from a scramble in front of the Soviet net and he dashed in from the right side to ram it home.

The victory was sweet for the Canadians. Rated strong favorites before the series began, the pros came to Moscow for the final four games down 1-1 with one game tied. After losing the first game here, they won the next three.

Incident Mars Win

MOSCOW (AP) - There was anger and ecstacy in the Team Canada dressing room Thursday night after Paul Henderson's desperation goal 34 seconds before the end of the game provided a 6-5 victory over Russia.

The ecstacy belonged to Henderson, who had won his second game in the eight-game series which Canada won 4-3 with one game tied. And it belonged to Phil Esposito, who scored two goals in the finale. And it belonged to winning goalie Ken Dryden.

The anger was that of Alan Eagleson, involved in a third period uproar that threatened to turn the tense series into a war.

"This is the happiest moment of my career," Henderson said. Dryden unbuckled his heavy equipment and said, "This has to feel greater than winning the Stanley Cup."

Esposito agreed: "I was more emotional in this series than I ever was in the Stanley Cup.

"The biggest thing that got to me was that first game, which we lost 7-3. Then there was everybody booing us...."

Head Coach Harry Sinden said, "All of you criticized the professional player for playing only for money. This series has proved their integrity and their character."

Boris Kulagin, assistant coach of the Russian team, said: "This is what happens when two great teams meet. We were not weaker than the Canadian team in this game. We lacked a little supporting luck."

The Eagleson incident happened in the third period and was in sharp contrast to the opening ceremonies, which saw the Canadian players present Western hats to the Russian players and Charles Hay, president of Hockey Canada, flanked by Eagleson, present a five-foot Thunderbird totem pole to the Soviet Ice Hockey Federation.

The incident erupted after Team Canada had tied the score 5-5.

Yvan Cournoyer poked the puck through the legs of Vladislav Tretyak, but the red light failed to come on and the 3,000 emotional Canadian fans roared, thinking the goal was being disallowed.

Suddenly, Pete Mahovlich leaped over the boards with his stick flying and his teammates on the ice joined him in a melee. Then Sinden and assistant coach John Ferguson ran across the ice and pulled team director Eagleson over the boards away from the crowd and escorted him across the ice to the Canadian bench.

"I was going to the timer's bench to tell him to put the light on," Eagleson said later. "Suddenly, about 18 cops jumped on me. They were really giving it to me good when Peter came over. I wouldn't live under this system if you paid me."

Carlton Most Valuable

My vote for MVP in the National League this year goes on the mound with Steve Carlton. That would have to be considered a surprise choice, but I think the evidence bears me out.

Despite a shortage of publicity outside Philadelphia, the fact remains that Carlton has been superb on the mound all year for the Phillies. The limelight has a way of dimming on a last place team. A ball club 39 games out of first place as a difficult time generating much excitement.

But, let's look at the record. Statistically, the former St. Louis Cardinal southpaw has been credited with 26 of the 56 Phillie victories. He leads the National League in a flock of important stats-starts, 39, complete games, 28, wins, 26, innings pitched, 337, and strikeouts, 303. He became one of only eight major league pitchers to ever post over 300 strikeouts in a single season with his 2-1 victory of the league leading Pittsburgh Pirates last night. And if those statistics don't really say much, maybe a glance at the Phillie roster would be more enlightening:

Carlton	26	10
Champion	4	14
Reynolds	2	13
etc.

I'm not saying batting stars wouldn't be considered. It is the hitters, predictably, who are receiving most of the MVP plaudits.

Billy Williams, ever an unsung hero, is giving Cub fans a strong case in Chicago. The triple crown would virtually assure Williams of the MVP award, and he's had a good shot at the derby in all three categories.

Johnny Bench has made a tremendous comeback in Cincinnati. Red Leg fans can now boast of his versatility as well as his power. Could you picture Bob Tillman or Smokey Burgess in right field?

Still, if the true meaning of valuable is to be served on the balloting, I don't see how any of these players can be considered more valuable than Carlton.

Although overlooked in most places, the fans in "The City of Brotherly Love" appreciate Steve's contribution to the team. It seems they've nicknamed him "Franchise".

Rink Advertisements

BOSTON AP - Officials of the Gillette Co. said today they jumped at the chance to advertise their razors in the Lenin arena for a Soviet-Canadian hockey series.

The company said it paid about $10,000 for signs 17 feet long and two feet high on each side of the rink at mid-ice, and considered it a bargain price.

The company said, "Every time the players swoop down the ice, line up before the game, or face off in the center of the rink the company's advertising signs along the boards of the arena is plainly visible to the millions of TV viewers."

Gillette said the Soviet promoters of the series "appreciate the value of a dollar as much as anyone else," and sold the billboard ad rights to a Swedish firm.

The Swedes in turn sold the individual space to advertisers for beer, autos and other capitalistic goods.

SPORTS

Booters Vs. Maine

By DOUG FIDLER

The UMass varsity soccer team will seek its second victory of the season against the University of Maine this Saturday morning at 10:00 a.m. on the playing fields.

The Black Bears have split their initial two games, opening the season with a 2-1 win over Jersey City State, before losing their second outing 3-0 to Boston University. UMass took a 2-0 win from Boston College last Tuesday night.

The B.C. win was not without casualties. Bob Merrill will be missing from his fullback position, having sustained a muscle bruise in the contest. Dean Lungu pulled a thigh muscle, but should be ready to play against Maine.

Howie Speer, Tom Coburn, and Vini Grandonico are all coming off injuries, but should see action on Saturday. Star goalie John Kiah, however, will be out for seven to ten days with mononucleosis and will be replaced by the fine back-up goalie Carl Vercollone. Rudi Jones is having eligibility problems and will not play.

"We are having our problems," commented Coach Gerry Redmond, "but we hope to continue our winning ways against Maine, especially since it will be our first home game."

UMass was rated twentieth in New England as of last Monday, but a win over Maine and the victory over the Eagles could move them up in the standings.

Two future UMass opponents played each other on Wednesday, with Holy Cross defeating W.P.I. 5-2.

Football Team Meets Crimson

By EARLE BARROLL

Times certainly do change.

The year is 1970. Dick MacPherson is head backfield coach for the Denver Broncos. Joe Restic is taking his Hamilton Tigers of the Canadian football league to the Grey Cup as their head coach.

The year is 1972. MacPherson is in his second year as head coach at UMass, Restic likewise at Harvard.

Two pro coaches have gone collegiate (in an age when a few collegiate coaches are being put through the coals as pro coaches) and as MacPherson says, "We're on the spot. They're trying to see if pro coaches can do it in the college ranks."

The critics are in for a treat tomorrow as these two men will be only 60 yards apart as Mac's gridders travel to Harvard Stadium to battle the Crimson in THE game this weekend on the New England College slate. Game time is 1:30.

MacPherson has said of this game, "It's the kind of contest the kids look forward to."

IT's also the kind of contest this campus needs. Since 1959 UMass football has run the gamut of a program with growing pains.

It was that year that students were asking the football team for just parity with the rest of the Yankee Conference. Come the mid-60's, parity is achieved and dominance is the next request.

It's now 1972 and supporters of UMass athletics are asking out of the Conference. They're asking the football team to beat opponents out of their league on a regular basis.

Tomorrow will be an indication of where the next pain will pop up.

To just say that Harvard is Ivy League is enough to stimulate most football rivals out of that clique.

The Crimson and UMass have not met on the football field since 1964 when Harvard prevailed, 20-14.

Since the series opener in 1906 (Harvard beat the then Aggies – at least they had a nickname – 21-0 only a few games have been played and the Crimson dominate 6-2-1.

Perhaps the most memorable game was in 1960 when UMass shocked the odds-on Ivy favorites, 27-12. The ensuing traffic jam by the rallied UMies, about 100 cars worth, will undoubtably be well remembered by the Cambridge police department.

This brings us to tomorrow.

MacPherson has said of Joe Restic, "He's a perfect gentleman the type of coach you like to deal with."

Restic has brought his brand of Canadian football to the Cambridge Campus. Last season he shocked the usually conservative Ivies with the wide-open, multi-motion Canadian style that brought Restic the distinction of being the first "rookie" coach ever at Harvard to have a winning season (5-4) and defeat Yale in the same year.

The UMass defense, which has allowed only three points to date (counting Cornell) will be hard pressed against this offense. "They give you one thing, then give you something else on the fly," notes Bob Harris, defensive line coach for UMass who scouted the Crimson vs. Brown in a scrimmage last week (Harvard 50, Brown 11).

"It makes it more complicated than it really looks," he said. "There's all kinds of movement, but it's just used to disguise the play. Our guys will just have to have a little patience and be able to read the play as it develops."

Yesterday at practice middle-linebacker Doug Winslow said, "Harvard is very fast off the line which means there can be no chance of error for us. We've practiced hard this week and have refined the defense. We've had good preparation."

Harvard is currently ranked third in New England, a notch ahead of UMass. The Brown, scrimmage was their only non-practice contact to date. The Crimson are Ivy Co-favorites.

MacPherson plans no changes for this game.

But he is happy of one thing. Last year when UMass was run out of Alumni Stadium by Dartmouth, 31-3, the UMass lockerroom resembled something out off Marcus Welby, M.D.

This year the story's a lot different. Said MacPherson "We got them healthy. Now we can truly test the relative merits of both teams--and that's what football's all about."

Sox Beat Royals Lead By Game

BOSTON (AP)-"One less game to go," Boston Manager Eddie Kasko said Thursday after the Red Sox defeated the Kansas City Royals 3-1. "It's as simple as that."

The victory kept the Red Sox in first place in the American League East, increasing their lead over the Detroit Tigers to a full game. The Tigers had a night game scheduled against the Yankees.

John Curtis had his problems, but went the distance for the Red Sox as they concluded their home sechedule. They open a three-game series Friday night in Baltimore, then end the regular season with three games at Detroit.

Curtis, 11-7 and 3-0 against the Royals, walked three batters in the first inning, but escaped unscathed.

"I was like a kid with a new toy out there," Curtis said. "I had a curve ball today that was jumping around, breaking more than it has been lately. It took me awhile to get adjusted."

"They're a club we've had a lot of trouble with, and Curtis now has beaten them three times," said Kasko. "He pitched a hell of a game."

"We haven't had that much luck with Curtis, that's for sure," said Kansas City Manager Bob Lemon, whose team stranded 10 men. "We had enough opportunities, though. We just couldn't get the job done."

Doug Griffin hit a run-scoring single and Reggie Smith hit two doubles and scored twice to lead the Red Sox past Dick Drago, 12-17, who surrendered only five Boston hits. Curtis gave up seven.

Red Rehired

ST. LOUIS (AP)-The St. Louis Cardinals announced Thursday the signing of Red Schoendienst to a record ninth season as manager of the National League club.

The signing of the 49-year-old Schoendienst, who played 1,795 games for the Cards, trails only Los Angeles' Walter Alston in tenure among active NL managers. Alston is completing his 19th season at the Dodger helm.

Under Schoendienst, the Cardinals have won 686 games and lost 597 and won pennants in 1967 and 1968.

After serving tow season as player-coach, he retired as a player in 1964 and was named manager after Johnny Keane stepped down in October 1964.

Rhetoric Requirement Under Attack

By ARNOLD NEWBERGER

"The Rhetoric requirement is not fulfilling the purposes for which it was designed, and other ways of accomplishing its stated objectives may be more effective for this campus."

This was the assessment Thursday of Academic Affairs Committee chairman Nick Apostola as he released a detailed report of the Rhetoric Program compiled by his committe over the past year.

The committee cited the 1969 Dean's Committee report which said that "no series of courses in Rhetoric, can claim to turn the students into more skillful writers and speakers in year's time."

The committee recommended that the Rhetoric Program be abolished as a University Core Requirement."

Before the recommendations can take effect, however, they must be sent to the Student Senate for its approval and then to the Faculty Senate. While passage by the Student Senate appears likely, it is not known how the Faculty Senate will react to the recommendations, Apostola said.

The committee took the position that there was much resentment toward the requirement by the student body and that "such resentment could lead to the development of bad communications skills, if any at all."

The establishment of a voluntary writing and speaking laboratory where students could receive immediate help with their rhetorical skills and the development of a series of course offerings aimed at improving the student's writing and speaking abilities, was also recommended in the report.

"The major difference between this and other proposals that have been offered is that this program would be completely voluntary; students would be working on their particular problems, and at least for the first year of operation, no credit would be given," the committee report said.

The committee position was that "most students have had required courses in writing and speaking since the sixth grade" and it held that another year of required "communication" would be ineffective.

In response to the report, English Department Head Joseph Frank said that he would oppose the recommendations and he hoped that he could persuade the Student Senate of the program flexibility.

"Every student should be exposed to language and should be given practice in a small class to express himself. The English Department has formed several committees to make changes in the Rhetoric Program, but nevertheless, we still support the requirement," Frank said.

Professor Frank's own opinion was that "there should be a four-year required English program to help students function better in a language oriented society." He added that he would come to Tuesday night's meeting of Academic Affairs and to the Student Senate "armed with plenty of ammunition" in an attempt to convince the Senate of the need to retain the Rhetoric requirement "hurting somebody's feelings

Four Modular Buildings Planned

Mental Health personnel will occupy the smaller of these two modular structures at the intersection of Thatcher Way and the hill leading to the Chancellor's House. The larger structure will be for academic use.

By HUGH OWEN

Renovations seem to be a must for many of the older buildings here on the UMass campus. In order that the offices and classrooms that will be displaced by these renovations have an alternate location, four new modular buildings will be constructed in 1973.

Two of the buildings will be located at the intersection of Thatcher Way and the hill leading to the Chancellor's house, one on the former lacrosse field behind Boyden, and one behind the Marks Meadow School.

These buildings are similar in design and structure to pre-fab houses. They come already constructed in sections and are assembled as a unit on a prepoured foundation. Then all electrical wiring is done and the modules are ready for use. The modules come fully carpeted, air conditioned, and with flexible partitions to allow for adjustments for size of classrooms and offices.

The modular building behind Marks Meadow School will increase space for the School of Ed until further permanent additions are constructed at the school. This modular, as all the others, will be a "temporary building project" Once the permanent additions are built the modules will be disassembled and moved to other sites where they are needed.

Of the two modular buildings to be constructed on Thatcher Way, one will house Mental Health personnel until the addition to the Infirmary is completed, and the other modular, along with the one located behind Boyden, will be used to house offices and classrooms displaced by future renovations.

Mr. John Littlefield, Director of Planning, said that the planning office is not yet sure what buildings will be designated for renovations, so he cannot say what departments will occupy the two undesignated modulars.

The utilities, site-development and installation procedures are being designed now for the modulars. Bids for these plans will be taken in mid-winter, with work on the buildings starting in March or April and ending in time for the fall semester.

Hanley Structures of Elizabethtown, Tennessee, have presently been contracted to manufacture the modulars, with Barnes and Jarnis as Consulting Engineers, and Pernylen the Landscape Architect.

Allis Urges Better Bike Laws

By BILL MANBURG

John Allis, veteran bicycle road racer of Olympic and world amateur competition, urged bicyclists to "get away from opposing bike legislation" and urged them to "start offering it."

Speaking before 100-125 bicycle enthusiasts, Allis demanded smooth and reasonably wide bike paths in urban and suburban areas. He also spoke on the purpose of the "Pedal Against Pollution", the twentieth Olympiad in Munich, and bike racing.

Claiming the status of the cyclist in America has greatly improved in recent years, (no longer do people spit or throw beer cans at cyclists), Allis expressed both a social and legal concern about cycling in terms of urban development; More and better bicycle paths could lead to less traffic congestion in the cities, for more people would commute to work by riding bicycles, he said.

Bikes are no longer considered like pedestrians, but they're not in the catagories of cars either; a bike "is a non-motorized vehicle."

Allis stressed that everyone concerned should think about the legal status of bikes now, not when "a legislator decides to do it." The purpose of the "Pedal Against Pollution" was to gain public support for future improvements in all areas of concern to bicyclists, whether it be legislation or new bike paths.

Allis, dressed in his red, white, and blue Olympic outfit, also talked about the recently completed Olympic games.

"The Olympics have changed," he said. "It is just a huge commercial enterprise. More money was spent in Munich than many countries that competed have for a gross national product. The emphasis has changed from the athelete to the media. The media operation was unbelievable and because it commanded so much attention it became the tool of some to use for political purposes." He cited the Arab terrorists as an example.

He had some suggestions for future Olympiads which included: no more flag raising, tone down the media, and do away with the spendor, an extravaganza. "Nations haven't won the medals, men have won them."

Allis also answered questions concerning bicycle sprint and road racing, racing techniques and strategies, training, and bicycles in general.

The Pedal Against Pollution was sponsored on campus by the Campus Center Program Council and CEQ.

Olver To Talk On Wetlands

Mr. John Olver, two term State Representative for Amherst and Democratic candidate for the office of State Senator, will be speaking on Tuesday, Oct. 3, on the subject of "Inland Wetland Protection in Massachusetts".

Representative Olver has taken an active role in this area and has recently filed legislation concerning the issue.

The talk will take place in Rm. 174-176 of the Campus Center at 7:30. The talk will be sponsored by the Coalition for Environmental Quality and time will be allotted for answering questions after the talk. Admission is free and the public is invited to attend.

Chaotic Clam Calamity: To Eat Or Not To Eat?

TRENTON (AP) - Clams, the relatively simple organisms living in calm profusion off the Jersey coast, are causing a world of chaos in the seafood set.

The question is, are any clams-Jersey or otherwise-fit for consumption?

The answer from those who ought to know is a qualified yes.

But the would-be buyers answer with another question: are you sure.

The confusion stems from an excess of two quantities: polluted water and news reports.

Although the clams may be in good health, they carry material that can cause hepatitis or typhoid in human beings, if the carrying organism-the clam-is eaten.

But these areas cover only one-quarter of the clam harvest fields off the Jersey coast.

According to Bill Eisele, supervisor of shell fish control for New Jersey, "Some of the tastiest clams around" come from the other three-quarters of the coastline.

The most recent confusion about the wisdom of eating clams started about three weeks ago, when a "red tide" struck the coasts of Massachusetts, New Hampshire and Maine.

The red tide carried a toxic organism, known as gonyaulax tamarensis, in its algae. The organism, if consumed in a clam, could produce paralytic shellfish poisoning, a possibly fatal disease for which there is no known antidote. Cooking the clams will not destroy the organism.

Clams harvested off the coasts of the three states were destroyed or ordered sent back to original dealers, and then destroyed, when the problem was discovered.

News reports warned of the dangers of the disease, sending a scare to the hearts of clam lovers.

The identity of some of the original stock was lost, so additonal warnings were sent out and the embargo was extended. All this tended to confuse the clam lover some more.

At one New Jersey seafood house, a waitress remarked to one man, ordering his third dozen of clams: "I don't know how you can eat them like that," referring to the recent warnings.

Was she right or wrong.

Wrong, says Eisele. "Clams produced in certified waters off Jersey are edible."

Wrong, says Joseph W. Prince, coordinator of food programs in the consumer health division of the Department of Health. "There is no hazard from New Jersey clams from certified areas.

And wrong, says the man who ate the clams. He finished all three dozen and lived to tell about it.

Dr. Robert Gage prefers not to comment on his prospects of being selected permanent Vice-Chancellor. He is presently sole contender for the position.

Gage Mum As Decision Nears

By KEVIN KEVIT

Dr. Robert Gage is reluctant to speak about his past eleven months as acting Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs as the appointment of a permanent Vice-Chancellor approaches, citing his present situation as chief influence to his reticence.

Gage believes that his tenuous position renders it inadvisable for him to comment either upon his past experiences as Vice-Chancellor or his hopes for the future, if appointed. Hinting that the uncertainty of his future had limited his potentialities as Vice-Chancellor during the past year, Gage stated that it "would have been difficult to start new things and ask the staff members to go along with them when they didn't know whether I would continue in office."

Regarding any speculations as to what he would hope to achieve if named to a permanent post, Gage declined to comment, saying that he "didn't want to appear presumptuous about getting the job or unfair to anyone else that might be considered for the position."

Presently, Gage is sole contender for the office he currently holds since Dr. Alfred Gourdet's withdrawal of candidacy early last week.

In announcing the conclusion of his bid for the Vice-Chancellory, Gourdet was quoted by last Monday's Collegian as having stated that the circumstances surrounding the choice of a permanent Vice-Chancellor where one of the candidates already held the position were unfair to both the incumbent and any other candidates, adding that his decision to withdraw was not a matter of his qualifications, but rather the circumstances surrounding the choice.

While professing ignorance as to his former opponent's qualifications, Gage expressed the opinion that Gourdet's objections to the structuring of the race were not necessarily valid. Conjecturing that the possible bias to which Gourdet referred "could go either way" and that "it would be hard to know the net effect of such an arrangement", Gage stated the belief that his situation as acting Vice-Chancellor was not a guaranteed advantage, since if his performance during the past year was judged to be poor it would have been detrimental to his own candidacy.

Although Gage could not provide the date of the upcoming Vice-Chancellory appointment, he offered an expectation that it will be soon.

Program Aids Deaf Students

By CAROLYN CALDWELL

Communication with the student body is indeed a problem for the six totally deaf Juniors who are participating in the Media Specialists Program (MSP) of the School of Education.

"I'm not used to living with the 'hearing' because I was born in a deaf family," Sonny Hottle said. "I went to Kansas State School of the Deaf. The hearing people don't communicate well with me."

Carolyn Ball said that she was more accustomed to 'hearing' people, but she was "overwhelmed at UMass because there's just so many students here."

George Durough "likes this place" and feels he has adjusted. He enjoys intramural tennis.

What is the Media Specialists Program? "It is the first of its kind designed to meet the growing need for media professionals in the education of the deaf," explains Ms. Childress Brown, a professional interpreter who works closely with the deaf students. "The person completing MSP would not be prepared as a teacher of deaf children but rather would be prepared to work with all aspects of media and with the educational staff in a program for the deaf." It is a three-year program starting in the Junior year and ending with a Master's Degree in Education.

Ms. Brown's rapid interpretation skills can be seen in all classes the deaf students attend. She practices "total communication"'which is a combination of finger spelling, signs and lip reading.

When asked how he felt about MSP, Hottle said, "I love media very much because when I was small I always looked at pictures. I'm deaf and I depend on my eyes. I feel I need to learn about life in the 'hearing' world. My major goal is to go back and work with deaf children."

Ms. Ball said, "I like this program very much because I like the combination of art and education and the media is the answer for me."

Peter Schragle thought it was too early to tell how he felt about MSP. "I haven't gotten into any projects yet and don't have the feel of media yet." Previously he was a math major at a school for the deaf.

The services MSP offers include tutoring, three notetakers per class and an interpreter. Hottle said that there is a problem in having only one professional interpreter on campus. "Every evening I can go to my room where hearing people are all chatting. I wish they could become daaf so they could talk to me."

Youth Found Dead In JQA

A 19-year-old non-student died Saturday night on the 15th floor of John Quincy Adams House.

Gordon Scott Blachard, of Uxbridge, was found, according to the University News Bureau, between 10 and 12 yesterday morning in a lounge on the floor.

While police have not disclosed the cause of death, pending the result of an autopsy, students in the dorm said Blachard had suffocated to death in his sleeping bag after vomiting.

According to student sources, Blachard had come to UMass to visit a friend.

The case is being investigated by the campus detective division and the Hampshire County District Attorney's office.

Will The Real Jack Please Stand Up?

LONDON (AP) — Jack the Ripper, the mystery killer who terrorized London's Whitechapel slumland with the murder of at least five prostitutes 84 years ago, may have been a lawyer called Montague Druitt.

Or again, he may have been another lawyer, John Kenneth Stephen. Or again...

The endless conundrum of the Ripper's true identity, which has teased detectives, amateur and professional, since the murders were committed over a period of a few weeks in 1888, has been confused further by the candidacy of Druitt and Stephen.

Druitt is sponsored by writer Daniel Farson in a new book, "Jack the Ripper", which is being published Monday.

Stephen is the choice of another literary sleuth and expert on Victoriana, David Harrison.

Neither thinks much of the other's evidence, or for that matter of the eligibility of other Ripper suspects, including the Duke of Clarence-a grandson of Queen Victoria-a Brixton doctor called Merchant and a Polish immigrant known in Whitechapel as "Leather Apron."

There's even a recent theory that the Ripper was a woman.

Farson's choice has been supported in a foreword to his book by the late Prof. Francis Camps, a distinguished Home Office pathologist before his death.

"Farson...has for the first time provided an explanation which will really fit in with the true facts," Camps said.

The writer, who also quotes contemporary Scotland Yard chiefs as regarding Druitt as the chief suspect, notes-that the murders ended and the casebook was closed when Druitt drowned himself in the Thames in 1888.

Harrison is skeptical of the Druitt claims, which he says are "almost unsupported".

"I'm terribly unconvinced by Farson," he told reporters Sunday.

China Celebrates 23rd Anniversary

SHANGHAI (AP) - China marked the 23rd anniversary of Communist rule Sunday in a relaxed holiday mood reflecting improved living standards, greater political stability and a more open society.

Instead of the great disciplined parades of the immediate past, featuring statues and images of Chairman Mao Tse-tung, there were varied and only marginally political entertainments in people's parks in the big cities across the country.

In Peking, Canton and Shanghai, the people seem more at ease, less hesitant to talk of their lives, or the Communist world in which they live.

The markets, department stores and shops are filled with goods, from clothing to acupuncture dolls and needles. Beef, chicken and pork are no longer on ration, but rice is. So are textiles, with the exception of those containing a mixture of wool or cotton and chemical fibers.

The fate of the late Defense Minister Lin Piao, killed, it is said, in a plane crash in Mongolia after an abortive plot on Mao's life, is freely talked about even by ordinary Chinese. So are other political matters.

In April 1971, this would have been unthinkable. Some subjects were taboo. Politics was one of them.

October 1 in Shanghai dawned clear and sunny, bringing many of its 10 million inhabitants into the streets where they created a cheerful confusion of bicycles, horn-honking automobiles and heedless pedestrians. About 150,000 swarmed into the seven people's parks.

Three American newsmen in the city after covering the Chinese-Japanese summit talks witnessed the celebrations in the principal park, once the famed Shanghai Race Course.

The stands are no longer there, nor is the race course itself. What remains is the old stewards' building. The grounds have been planted with trees and grass and special areas are children's playgrounds.

Within the enclosed park, from which some Chinese were barred, 3,000 entertainers provided amusements and spectacles for an estimated 30,000.

The entertainments were in various parts and spectators strolled from one to the other.

MOSCOW (AP) - The Soviet Union congratulated the Chinese people Sunday on the 23rd anniversary of Communist China, but blasted Chairman Mao Tse-tung for "theoretical incompetence" and anti-Soviet policies.

The somewhat surly "happy birthday" message was addressed to the chairman of the People's Republic of China, without specifically naming him.

In keeping with the practice of recent years during the ideological split between the two Communist giants, the message expressed conviction that relations between the Soviet Union and China must be improved.

Yet the Maoist leadership was accused of straying from the path of Marxism-Leninism and the telegram of congratulations spoke of the "complete theoretical incompetence of Maoism and its incompatability with with scientific socialism."

The telegram was issued in the name of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet and the Council of Ministers.

In a major article marking the anniversary, the Communist party organ Pravda accused the Chinese leadership of splitting the socialist camp and "simultanteously realigning its foreign policy toward rapprochement with the capitalist countries."

The author, V. Viktorov, who last year wrote in much the same terms, said the Maoists want to "achieve great-power negemonic aims in the international arena."

And he added that Chinese declarations that it, too, favors peaceful coexistence "do not accord with the political actions of the Chinese leadership."

Peking continues to pursue its anti-Soviet policy, Viktorov said, and used "fabrications of a so-called 'threat from the North' to justify its negative attitude to the constructive proposals of the Soviet Union on normalization of mutual relations and establishment of goodneighborly relations between the Soviet Union and China."

The line followed that of a speech by Communist party chief Leonid I. Brezhnev in March in which he said the Soviet Union wants better relations, but "it is up to the Chinese side now."

There was one report published abroad that the Soviet Union and China are near agreement on their border dispute that led to fighting between border troops on the Usurri River in 1969. But there was nothing in the official pronouncements to indicate they were on the verge of agreement.

In August, as a matter of fact, the government newspaper Izvestia was sharply critical of a new Chinese atlas that the paper said laid claim to 1.5 million square kilometers of Soviet territory along their 4,350 mile border.

'Gag Rule' May Be Enforced

BOSTON (AP) - Massachusetts Correction Commissioner John O. Boone apparently intends to enforce a "gag rule" which has applied to departmental employes for a decade but was previously ignored.

The prison employes, according to one union spokesman, intend to fight it.

The commissioner, late last month, sent a letter to the heads of state penal institutions outlining conditions governing discussion of prison business with outsiders and the media.

"Only the superintendent or persons authorized by him or by the commissioner shall release information pertaining to inmates or institutional happenings to news services," the letter said.

In capital letters, the letter continued: "Any release of confidential information regarding inmates or happenings at the institution to unauthorized sources without the approval of the superintendent of the institution shall be considered cause for disciplinary action, including immediate dismissal or suspension."

Cited in the letter is Rule No. 3 of the Rules and Regulations for the Direction of the Officers and Employes of the Massachusetts Correctional Institutions for Males. The rule was approved by the governor and the Executive Council Oct. 26, 1961, according to the letter.

But, according to the guards and the department's public relations spokesman, John C. McLean, it never has been enforced.

Boone's letter instructed the prison heads to read the rule "at roll call to each shift as many times as may seem necessary to ensure that all employes have heard and understood."

"This letter should also be read at staff meetings and department heads should be instructed to make certain that all civilian employes of the institution are aware of this policy."

Boone concluded that "every employe should clearly understand that the rule...will be strictly enforced as of this date Sept. 19, and that any infraction which comes to the attention of the superintendent will result in disciplinary action."

The rule specifically excludes "discussion....limited to hours, wages and employment conditions," from its provisions.

McLean, who said all information about the department must come from his office, said the policy was "restated because obviously people have been speaking out of turn at the institutions."

The prison system in Massachusetts, as elsewhere, has been a center of controversy in recent years. In recent months, Boone and his policies have been the focal point of the controversy in Massachusetts, and spokesmen for guards frequently have stated positions in opposition to the commissioner.

McLean said the "restatement of the traditional policy of the department...is to remind people in the institutions that we are the spokesmen and not the rank and file in the institutions.

"We have a departmental policy," he said, "that statements to the press will be made by this office, specifically me."

Boone was unavailable for comment.

McLean and Gerald J. Flannigan, president of the guards' union at the Bridgewater institution, both said the rule has never been enforced.

Flannigan said many prison employes regard it as a "violation of our constitutional rights," particularly in light of recent rules changes which permit inmates access to the press.

Israeli Orchestra Gets Tight Security

WASHINGTON (AP) - A probably unprecedented appeal for audience participation in security was resorted to Sunday for the Israel Philharmonic Orchestra's concert at the Kennedy center for the Performing Arts.

With security precautions already at a high level because of the terrorist murders of Israeli athletes at the Munich Olympic games, it was decided to put an appeal as an insert in the programs handed to the concertgoers:

In part, the insert read:

"We assure you that in light of recent events every precaution has been taken for security and safety tonight but we also ask your help and cooperation as follows:

"If you notice anything unusual by way of a box or a package, or in the behavior of any member of the audience, please raise your hand high as a signal to a security guard who will be stationed nearby.

This was just the final element of elaborate measures which have been taken for the protection of the musicians against possible attacks by Arab terrorists.

Irish Pray For Peace

BELFAST (AP) - Thousands of Northern Ireland Protestants and Roman Catholics prayed side by side Sunday for an end to the sectarian hatred that divides their communities and which left eight dead this weekend in bomb and bullet bloodshed.

Interdenomination services, with prayers for peace after three years of violence and guerrilla warfare, were held in Belfast and Armagh and across the border in Ireland.

POWs Are Now Pawns In A Stalemate

AP Special Correspondent

The 12-foot tall paintd poster showed a Vietnamese militia girl using her rifle to prod an American pilot as he staggered along a jungle path with his hands on his head.

Strolling along a Hanoi street below, three Americans, each of whom at one time could have been a model for the poster, shook their heads in amazement.

Here they were-Navy Lt. Mark Gartley, Navy Lt. Norris Charles and Air Force Major Edward Elias, inhabitants up to two days earlier of a prisoner of war camp in the heart of Hanoi-promenading along the streets of the capital city of the country they had frequently bombed from their aircraft.

The war was still on. The people passing by on foot and on bicycles knew who they were because the release had been widely publicized. And yet other than some curiousity by the kids, no one seemed concerned.

In 1968, fellow American pilots had been paraded through the streets of Hanoi to be reviled by the population. That Gartley, Charles and Norris could so casually stroll through Hanoi today shows a major change in the attitude of the North Vietnamese government to the American prisoners they have in their hands.

In the early war years North Vietnam seemed to look upon American prisoners as the inevitable booty of war, and gave them indifferent treatment.

But the circumstances of the pilot release in Hanoi two weeks ago, the first since 1969, indicate that the pilot prisoners have become a valuable weapon in North Vietnamese eyes to be used to influence American public opinion and U.S. policy.

Greeting them warmly on the steps of his imposing residence in Hanoi, Prime Minister Pham Van Dong said that the pilot release was a signal that all the pilots would be freed once the right moment came.

The right moment?

That would be when the war ended, Premier Dong said, and that would come if the United States responded positively to the most recent proposals put forward by the Communist side in Paris.

Another official, Mr. Hoang Tung, editor of the official Communist Party newspaper Nhan Dan, said the ideal outcome of the American presidential elections for Hanoi and for the prisoners would be a victory by Sen. George McGovern.

"On January 20 when he enters the White House we shall release the first series of prisoners. Within 90 days the two sides would have solved all problems and the last prisoners will leave Hanoi for home. We shall organize a big party to see them off, and give flowers and explode firecrackers," he said.

But Mr. Tung did not seem to see the prisoner release itself as helping McGovern to victory. "I don't think progressive forces can change President Nixon's strong position now. It would be wonderful in November if that could be reversed," he said.

An indication of Hanoi's interest in the impact of the pilot release on American public opinion was given by Mrs. Bui Thi Cam, a member of the National Assembly and an expert on health legislation. "The most impressive thing about this event is that little Vietnam and the plain people of America can cause such excitement. It has put the war and the prisoners back on page one where they should be," she told a member of the escort delegation.

Her reference to the "plain people of America" meant the antiwar movement.

Emphasis on the pilots in Hanoi and the United States has been heavy in recent weeks because of the dramatic nature of the affair, particularly because a mother and a wife flew to Hanoi to reunite with the men. The presence of this reporter from The Associated Press, a CBS television correspodent and the constant attendance of all members of the residence foreign press in Hanoi and local reporters, showed that Hanoi was interested in giving the widest possible publicity to the release.

Westover Demonstrations Resume Tonight Despite Pleas

CHICOPEE, AP - Anti-war demonstrators, who cost this western Massachusetts city $50,000 in 1972, say they will resume their protests tonight despite pleas from a mayor who insisted he does not determine foreign policy.

The protestors, who come mostly from five nearby colleges, began blocking entrances to Westover Air Force Base last spring when American bombers began hitting targets in North Vietnam. Among the planes taking part in those raids are B52s from the 99th bomb wing at Westover.

"The city has incurred expenses directly placeable to demonstrators at about the $50,000 mark," Mayor Edward Ziemba said. "The thrust of their action is against the wrong party, the city and its taxpayers."

Over a three-week stretch last spring, 1,400 persons were arrested for blocking the gates at Westover, including one of the college presidents, John William Ward of Amherst.

Today, the cases of about 1,000 of those demonstrators begin coming up in Chicopee District Court, where past practice has been to fine each guilty party $10. Most face charges of disturbing the peace.

In an effort to save his city money, Ziemba met with protest leaders last week and urged them to either take their protests elsewhere, where policy is made, or to protest in a symbolic manner so only four or five persons had to be arrested.

Ziemba said the protestors refused to agree to any of his requests, and promised to resume their action at Westover tonight.

"This has a very serious impact on our finances," he said. "I have indicated to the demonstrators that certainly no foreign policy is made here in city hall, nor is it decided at Westover.

"But their actions have put a financial burden on us, on the taxpayers of Chicopee. It disrupts our police department in terms of having to make them available for this duty on overtime," he said. The city, he added, has no way of knowing in advance how many police to put on overtime pay to handle the demonstrations and also doesn't know how many buses to rent to haul the demonstrators away in.

Ziemba said the city is faced with cutting back other budgeted services to compensate for the drain caused by the demonstrations, and he says he doesn't think that is right.

In an effort to ease that burden, Ziemba requested, and got, introduction of bills in Congress which would make federal funds available to help cities facing dilemmas such as Chicopee's.

Those bills have gone no further than two congressional committees.

Ziemba says he has also suggested that the demonstrators take their complaints to Washington.

"I suggested that they should lay their problem before Senate and Congress, and use that method," he said. "They said they tried that and it hasn't worked.

"They want their rights, which they say include civil disobedience," he said.

"Therefore, they don't feel imposing themselves in front of the gates at Westover in this fashion and denying someone's rights is a serious action.

"To us, it's serious," he said, mentioning again his city's mounting debt. "This enters our budget, and it either is going to mean tax increases or economy in other areas. We shouldn't be forced to do that."

Spokesmen Lead Day of Campaigning

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Sen. George McGovern's wife said he will soon spell out specific plans for ending the Indochina war, and Welfare Secretary Elliot L. Richardson said McGovern has lost credibility because of indecision and contradictions.

Sunday was a day of campaigning by spokesmen as the presidential contenders rested, President Nixon at his Camp David retreat in Maryland and McGovern in Washington.

The campaign chiefs gave their views in parallel copyrighted interviews in "U.S. News & World Report."

Both said their candidates would devote special effort to states with big blocks of electoral votes.

In other political developments:

—Nixon's two daughters, Julie Nixon Eisenhower and Tricia Nixon Cox, and the latter's husband, Ed Cox, planned to join Young Voters for the President in what was billed as a seven-day nostalgic music tour to boost voter registration. The series of concerts featuring music of the 1950s and 1960s scheduled its opening Sunday in Milwaukee.

Campaign '72

Eleanor McGovern, appearing on the NBC program "Meet the Press", said the Democratic candidate's proposal "will not be a secret plan but a very public one."

She declined to give details and set no exact date, but said:

"It will come very soon, in a few days."

Richardson, in a speech prepared for a Republican club in Rehoboth, Mass., said McGovern has contradicted himself and shown hesitation and indecision on such issues as welfare, the Vietnam war, the Middle East and the economy.

He said he expects McGovern to close some of the gap but still leave Nixon with 55 to 60 per cent of the popular vote.

Odds on the Republicans' taking over control of Congress are slightly better than 50-50 in the Senate and somewhat less than 50-50 in the House, MacGregor said.

Congress May Rollback Campaign Spending Law

WASHINGTON (AP) — A House vote has been quietly scheduled for Monday on a bill exempting corporations and labor unions with govenment contracts from the ban on campaign giving through affiliated political funds.

If it passes the Congress, the measure would mark the first rollback of the new federal campaign spending law.

A ban on the affiliated political funds, a principal cover through which corporations and unions manage to give to the candidate of their choice despite the general ban on corporate donations, withstood a court test this past summer. TRW Inc. dissolved its fund, considered a prototype and model for most others, rather than defend it against a court suit by Common Cause.

After the TRW case was settled numerous companies began to dissolve similar funds, through which employees traditionally contributed to a general fund is managed and distributed by the corporation.

There were some surprised cries from big unions many of whom had not realized until the court case that their own political funds might be affected. A number of unions were touched because they hold federal contracts for such programs as manpower training.

The new law, as the old one had, prohibits corporations and unions from giving directly to political campaigns, but it allows them to give out money voluntarily given by employes the same as they would corporate funds.

However, the new law prohibits the use of affiliated political funds by government contractors, which pretty well covers most big corporations.

The House Administration Committee, meeting in closed session, reported out a repealer Sept. 19 sponsored by Rep. Samuel L. Devine, R-Ohio. No public hearings were held.

Common Cause the self-styled citizens' lobby, protested to both House Speaker Carl Albert and Minority Leader Gerald Ford. Both House leaders had promised that any tampering with the new campaign finance law would get public hearings, Common Cause said.

School Of Ed: Lull After The Storm

By DON GLICKSTEIN

(Notice: The open hearings for the Governance Task Force will be held October 4, from 11 a.m.-1 p.m., and October 5, from 1 p.m. - 3 p.m., in Room 128 of the School of Education. - Ed.)

The School of Education, a pot of boiling oil which was closed down last Spring amidst charges and counter-charges of racism, power politics, and governance, has simmered to a stew under the gentle persuasion of a Vice-Chancellor's authority.

Negotiations between the Dean of the School, Dwight Allen, and a coalition of individuals from the minority communities, the Third World Caucus, broke down on May 10. The Vice-Chancellor for Academic Affairs, Robert Gluckstern, then intervened in the entangled dispute, ordered a halt to all further talks, and appointed a three-man committee to advise him on future School of Education actions.

The committee was carefully balanced. Richard Clark was the Assistant Dean in charge of teacher preparation. Preston Bruce was a faculty member as well as a coordinator for the Caucus. Seymour Shapiro was the neutral element, a former Dean of Arts and Sciences and a member of the Botany Department.

During the summer, they identified three areas of major concern, and made recommendations to Gluckstern:

On-campus Career Opportunities Program (COP) is a Federally-funded program that provides jobs, stipends, and teacher certification for adult teacher aides and paraprofessionals. UMass runs three COP programs in Brooklyn (NY), Worcester, and on campus. The management and administration of the on-campus COP had been critically questioned during the Spring.

Gluckstern, in consultation with COP students, named Dean Allen to run the program, and thus, have the immediate responsibility for its management.

Governance

A School Council, in existence since 1969, had consisted of faculty, graduate students, and undergraduates. On paper, it was the policy-making body of the School, but in reality, the Dean had the ultimate responsibility to the Trustees for School policy. Many faculty were disturbed because they felt that they were losing their power to the students. Many students argued that the Dean had too much power. Others observed that there was too much decentralized power which led to chaos.

Analysis

The Clark-Bruce-Shapiro Committee recommended that all existing governance bodies at the School of Education be disbanded, that a Governance Task Force be created to study new models, and that interim policy decisions be made by the Dean, advised by the faculty.

Gluckstern, with Dean Allen, abolished the School Council in August, and appointed ten men and women to the Task Force. The Task Force is currently holding open hearings on governance, and will submit a draft proposal to the School on October 24, with final recommendations a week later.

The 27 Issues

The Third World Caucus articulated 27 issues that they considered of importance. The issues centered around four general areas: institutionalized racism in the School as evidenced by governance, budget, curriculum, admissions, and support services; prior approval by the Caucus for all programs, administrators, and budgets affecting minority students; a changing of the emphasis from an unstructured, affective curriculum to a more structured cognitive one; and the development of more programs and services for minority students.

The Clark-Bruce-Shapiro Committee asked that various issues raised by the Caucus be clarified and answered by the appropriate bodies, especially the Chancellor's and Dean's Offices. Indications are that many of the issues are being held in abeyance until the Governance Task Force reports, and a new system of governance can confront them.

While the controversy of politics and race has continued, the School of Education's leadership in experimentation and innovation has not abated.

On September 14, the Education faculty voted to hold a fall modular credit marathon during the week of November 13. The Marathon, an educational pot pourri of lectures, movies, demonstrations, and other special events, was the tinderbox for last Spring's disruptions. The Caucus avowed that the Marathon was a token gesture at combatting racism, and was held under false pretenses.

Last Thursday, September 28, the University's Faculty Senate voted to extend the Pass-Fail system in the School of Education for one year. All undergraduates and doctoral students are required to take all education courses without a letter grade under this system.

A double registration for students taking education courses was instituted this fall as the School began its Completely Modular Curriculum (CMC). Under the CMC, all approved learning experiences, whether they are ten minutes long or a semester long, are accredited. Thus, a ten minute learning experience is equivalent to one modular credit (mod), and 100 mods are needed for one regular University credit. The CMC will, according to the School, provide a more flexible system for faculty and students alike.

Continuing into its second year is the Teacher Preparation Program (TPPC). The TPPC coordinates the now 23 elementary and secondary teacher certification programs a student can enroll in. The programs renge from the unstructured "Explorations!" and "Horizons" experiences, to the media-for-the-deaf, urban education, and reading programs.

Although the School of Education is not in the headlines, many observers feel that it is merely undergoing a lull before another storm. Rumors of personnel changes within the Dean's Office, as well as turnovers among the doctoral students and faculty are still unknown factors. What effect the rest of the campus will produce on the School, and vice versa, depends on the new governance, faculty militancy, and whatever new esprit de corps Dr. Rhody McCoy, the new director of the minority student scholarship and tutorial program, CCEBS, will infuse around campus.

Whatever does happen, the School of Education will continue to be at the forefront of change.

Fellowship Offered For Museum Career

Historic Deerfield, Inc. will conduct its annual Summer Fellowship Program in Early American History and the Decorative Arts at Deerfield, Massachusetts from June 19 to August 18, 1973. Seven Fellowships will be awarded to single men and women of undergraduate status who are interested in careers in the museum field and related professions. The program offers students on intensive exposure to the interpretation of early American history and culture through the medium of the museum.

The Fellowships are designed to provide students who are interested in a professional career in the field of preservation or interpretation of early American history and culture an opportunity to explore that interest in a program of museum apprenticeship and independent study. Historic Deerfield hopes that the summer experience at Deerfield will encourage Fellowship students to pursue careers in the museum profession, in historic preservation, or in American studies.

Applicants to the program must be single men and women who are as of January 1, 1973 undergraduate students of sophomore, junior, or senior standing in an American or Canadian college. The Fellowships provide a stipend of $300, room and board while in Deerfield, transportation to and from Deerfield, and expense-paid trips to several American museums.

Application forms may be obtained by writing to: Historic Deerfield, 1973 Summer Fellowship Program, Deerfield, Massachusetts 01342.

Heating Problems

If you walk behind Orchard Hill over East Pleasant Street, past Tillson Farm and into the forest for a ways you'll come upon an open steel structure with a mass of machinery at its core.

That will be, at some date in '73, the new University heating plant. We hope it will work better than the old furnace behind the CC garage.

Last night it was cold, as was the old Student Union, and many of the dormitories. In this place, it's either melting hot or approaching absolute zero. The heat gets turned off too late in the spring and gets turned on too early in the fall, or vice-versa. It's never quite the way it's supposed to be.

Then there are the ugly rumors one hears about the new library. Like when it opens in the spring semester (February), there won't be enough power in the old heating plant to heat it. Which may mean that all of us may be turning on the toasters and lighting the hot plates those last few chilly months of winter. Let's hope the rumors are wrong.

At any rate, while there's power, let's have heat. The future need not come early.

Scrambled Eggs and OJ

When my alarm clock went off at 6:30 Saturday morning, I really didn't feel like getting up. It was raining and cold outside and I'd only had about 4-1/2 hours sleep, but the time had come. For about a week, the Collegian staff had been preparing for the big trip to Cambridge. Not for the UMass-Harvard game. That was secondary. The REAL reason we were getting up that early was because the Crimson, Harvard's newspaper, had challenged the Collegian to a game of touch football before the real fireworks inside the stadium. We hadn't practiced, but we were ready.

Not sure that anyone else was going to show up on a day like this, I started down to the Collegian office at about 7 o'clock just to be sure. As I approached the Campus Center, the first sign of players appeared. Big Al Chapman, assistant photo editor and chief honcho of the paper, was just arriving in the car loaned to him by the Student Senate for purposes of taking pictures of the real game in Cambridge that day. He beeped his horn and motioned me toward the car. I got in, glad that I didn't have to get wet anymore, and we proceeded to the office.

The scene there was one of utter desolation; not a soul in sight. "The bastards", I said to Chap, "not one shown up." But I'd spoken too soon. A minute or two later Kenny Sulin and Chris Sullivan of Poor Richard's walked in. We didn't have much, but with Kenny and Alan (both 6'4" and 120 pounds) I knew we at least had two good wide receivers. Al then informed me that we were going to pick up Marty "Cliche" Kelley and hopefully Earle the Pearl Barroll. Not a full team yet, but a good start. Anyway, if all else failed we could always draft Christine.

After picking Marty up at his frat house we stopped at a store in town to get some cigarettes. After everyone piled into the car again we discovered that two people had bought a quart of orange juice. Now orange juice is OK for a wake up drink in the morning, but two quarts between five people is a little too much laxative, especially if you're going to spend two hours in a car and proceed to get knocked around a football field at your destination. Little did we know that the worst of our problems in that department were yet to come.

We picked up Earle sitting by the side of the road near 202 (on the way to rte. 2). He was wearing a pair of sweatpants that he'd purchased the day before at a bargain price. As soon as we saw him we knew he was ready, but he wasted no time informing us of that fact. "Boy am I jacked (jock terminology for psyched up) for this game," was the Pearl's comment upon entering the car. He did have one problem, though. It seems that at 7:30 he'd had a large batch of scrambled eggs at his apartment. It also seems that, at least for Earle, scrambled eggs are as good a natural laxative as orange juice is for the rest of us. We may not have been a good team, but at least none of us were constipated.

We arrived at Harvard Stadium around 9:45, fifteen minutes late. We were fortunate in that three other Collegian people had arrived on their own. On the field rapping with the Ivies were Bill Ballou, Sports Editor and the hardest coach in intercollegiate newspaper football, Roy Lyons, assistant Sports Editor and a small, Randy Vataha type, and Bob Estelle, sometime Red Sox reporter and always an outspoken supporter of the name Redmen for our teams. We had to change, and were kindly allowed the use of Dillon Field House for the purpose by the Ivies. Our team now numbered eight, as Christine had decided to sit it out and laugh from the sidelines.

The Collegian won the toss and coach Ballou decided to go with the wind at our backs for the first half. The Crimson had about twenty-five people on their squad, so we decided to use all our people and go eight on eight. The Crimson went into a platoom system so everyone on their side would get a chance to play.

The first half was all Collegian With Barroll at the controls the Umies rolled to a touchdown the second time we got our hands on the ball and made it look easy (we'd been stopped on about the two our first time out.) Before the half ended we'd done it again, and with a defense that bent but would not break we held them scoreless. I personally sacked the hated Ivy quarterback four times in the half.

As the clock ticked its way toward the end of the half, I breathed a sigh of relief. Everyone on the Collegian team was dead tired, but the Ivies were still fresh since they had been replacing their tired people with fresh troops. When the half ended a few Collegian players headed for the sidelines, but we were informed that the second half was to begin immediately.

We held them for quite a while, but two things were working against us. First, the second half was longer than the first. If it had been as long we would have beat them 12-6, but they had the wind at their backs an extra fifteen minutes. Second, we were too tired to run a good offense, and we ended up giving them the ball in good field position quite a bit. We held for a while, but ended up giving up two touchdowns in the final fifteen minutes and losing 18-12. Most people say that we were done in because they kept throwing fresh people at us, claiming that we were killing them before we got tired.

But I can't agree. To me it looks like we were done in by the delayed effects of two quarts of orange juice and a mess of scrambled eggs.

Back To The Land?

Farmhouses, organic gardening, and living off the land.

"Hi Art. Where you living this year."

"Well, like I'm graduated. And like me and Diana We're living in a farmhouse."

"That's real man. I mean that's far out. I mean that is really real."

"Yeah. And we got some land with it for gardening."

"Dig it man, that's the way to beat the system and escape that rat race."

This conversation is not an unfamiliar one to the UMass campus. Students are seeking to avoid the experience of reality, and live the illusion of a past age. Students are rejecting an urban society and grasping a rural one.

The rural value preferance demonstrated in this conversation lies deep within our culture. A close inspection of traditional American thought from Jefferson until now reflects a rural value-orientation. Our state constitutions are built upon these values and project a definite anti-urban bias. Our legislators never have any difficulty in passing farm legislation. Mention the holy word of agriculture, the 'backbone of our society', and legislation becomes easy. Turn of the century authors reflected this bias when they wrote of the corruption, immorality, and decadence of city-life.

This value orientation is no longer relevant in America. The values of the farm, the rural, the agricultural can not have top priority in an urban society. America's present population is 80% urban. It is ironic to want to deal with the problems of 'getting back to the land' when we should be 'getting on' to dealing with urban problems. The rural ethic still predominates, but it is anachronistic and inhibits our capacity to begin to deal with the immense problems of our cities.

Government as well as constituents must respond to the realities of an urban society and not to the illusion of a far distant agrarian one. The days of the small farmer are over, no longer can he meet the demands of the mass urban market. His place has been taken over by the agri-business concerns.

Why is the prevailing value sentiment on this campus oriented toward the life style of a small farmer, when the realities demand an orientation toward urban living? Why should students perpetuate an age-old anti-urban bias? As stated before anti-urbanism is nothing new to America. It continues to be a ball and chain on our progress toward readjusting our values, to cope with the complexities and necessities of urban America. It is time to drop the illusion of 'getting back to the land'. It is time to stop being ashamed of living, liking or coming from the city. We cannot turn our heads away from a problem which involves all of us and sink our minds in the illusion that the problems will go away if we look the other way.

Students have tuned out to the present problems of the city and of America and have tuned in to the problem of turning time back and struggling to e-establish the pre-dominance of the agrarian ethic. Instead of being on the ramparts of preserving the traditional rural value orientation we should be on the ramparts of formulating a new set of values more consistent with the world we live in.

Meeting of all Editorial staffers who turned in columns will be held Tuesday at 4:30.

Letters To The Editor

Christianity Set Strait

To The Editor:

In the Sept. 26th edition of the MDC appeared an article in which Vine Deloria "Decries Christian Doctrine". I would like to set a couple of points straight, in that he never referred to any Christian doctrine.

I will begin with a definition of the word Christian. It was originally used 2000 years ago at Antioch as a derogatory term for the followers of Jesus Christ, those who accepted Him as Lord and Savior. Rather than being offended, the Christians were delighted and adopted the name. Christ, whom they followed, recognized the Bible as the word of God (Luke 24:44-48). And in 2 Timothy we read that "All scripture is given by inspiration of God and is profitable for doctrine". Therefore, to show where Mr. Deloria's view of Christianity is mistaken, I will quote from the word of God.

The first claim that he makes is that birth control is unChristian. I would appreciate it if someone would show me where in the Bible birth control is forbidden. In Genesis 2:24 it says "Therefore shall a man leave his father and mother, and shall cleave unto his wife; and they shall be one flesh." The biblical reason for sex is union (between husband and wife), not procreation. Similar verses can be found in Matt. 19:5, Mark 10:7-8, 1 Corinth. 6:16, and Eph. 5:31.

Next he says "Yet the Americans traditionally insist upon being segregated in the ground in airtight boxes." Americans may believe this, but there is no biblical proof for this being a Christian belief. All of us, who are Christians, are going to heaven, no matter how or where we are buried. 1 Thessalonians 4:16,17 reads: "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first: then we who are alive shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord." Thus, the airtight box is not a Christian concept. God doesn't need man to preserve things for Him, He can get things together when the time comes. He had no problems creating the world.

This brings us to the next point, the Christian view on nature and creation. The view that nature is dead is not a Christian view. I don't know how Mr. Deloria would define dead, but nature is alive with the glory of God. "The dawn and sunset shout for joy." (Ps. 65:8, Living Bible) "The pastures are clothed with flocks; the vallies are covered over with grain; they shout for joy, they also sing." (Ps. 65:13) In the Genesis account of creation God "saw that it was good" after creating all living and non-living things. (Gen. 1:9-25) The common reply if 'if God created everything good, why is the earth in the shape it is?' The answer is MAN! God charged man with the proper control of the world. "And God took man, and put him into the garden of Eden to till it and to keep it." (Gen. 2:15) But man messed up and sinned and is destroying the world that God gave him to keep. Mr. Deloria claims there is "no way Christianity could assess the crisis of ecology." I say he's wrong. God has a perfect plan for the universe and if man would have followed the ordinances in the Bible there would be no ecology problem. Don't believe me - Read the Bible before you laugh. Whatever, Christ is coming again and He will set all things strait.

"no way Christianity could assess the crisis of human personality" Wrong again. The command "thou shall love thy neighbor" is repeated 4 times - Matt. 19:19, 22:39, Mk. 12:31, Lev. 19:18 - and we are told to "put on love" (Col. 3:14). And Christ goes further: "I say, love your enemies" (Matt. 5:44, Luke 6:27). The biblical answer is love, but "love is of God" (1 John 4:7), and "God is love" (1 John 8:16). Thus, those who reject God, reject love; and if you're not part of the solution, you're part of the problem.

Lastly is the "crisis of life after death". I ask you to reread the verses previously cited from 1 Thes. 4:16,17. There is no problem. When Christ said "I am come that they (we) might have life more abundantly" (John 10:10), he was referring to eternal life and victory over death.

The answer to all these problems can be found in the Bible. The answer lies not with societies or groups, but with individuals. Individuals accepting Christ into their lives as Lord and Savior. Before this happens, the problems of the world will never be solved. "I am the way, and the truth, and the life; no man cometh unto the Father, but by me." (Jn. 14:16)

In Christ,

Nostalgia

To The Editor:

The liberal use of my name in a Collegian story about the "good old days" at "Mass Aggie" gives me a sort of excuse for adding a few comments-even though I was not so prominent on campus as the story implies. I did help initiate the movement to change the name of the college, but the real battle was fought after I graduated.

We have indeed "come a long way since the days of Mass Aggie," and I am not nostalgic. But I would like to share with those who are inclined to downgrade the intellectual quality of students-and faculty-at the "cow college" a recollection of about the year 1932, when I was an instructor in English. During the winter term a series of weekly lectures was presented by members of the faculty of the Department of Language and Literature on the general topic "Literary Romanticism"; and these lectures-by Walter Prince, Barney Troy, Fritz Ellert, myself, and others-were regularly attended by 150 to 200 students, or approximately a quarter of the student body. How many students today would be likely to turn out for a lecture on literature-even if it were by a world-famous scholar?

The story is in error-unless my memory fails me after 44 years - in saying that coeds could not vote in Senate elections (though of course all the candidates were male). In fact, I recall - with shame and sorrow and the hope of cleansing my soul by a public confession - that I made a speech, at the annual assembly devoted to general student discussion of campus issues, in which I argued that women should not vote for Senate members because they would always vote for athletic heroes. (I could never convince Coach Red Ball that I deserved a place on a varsity baseball team which in my senior year won only one game.) I can only offer as an explanation - which may compound rather than extenuate the crime - that in those days I was a Republicans. But at least I was supporting a Calvin Coolidge and not a Richard Nixon.

Editorial Points

Mass. transportation is making headway. After six years, Amtrak is utilizing some of its dead rails to run a train between New York and Montreal. Maybe after another ten or twenty or thirty years somebody'll decide to extend the M.B.T.A. beyond Quincy.

If you buy an airline ticket, be careful. You may not get where you want, or you may not get what you want.

The UMass Football team is two and nothing so far. If you're planning on going to Homecoming, you'd better buy your ticket early.

McGovernites, Answer This

To Fogarty and Imperato:

Do you feel it necessary to reiterate Nixon's obvious ties with big business, ego-overindulgence, and his failure to end the war. Such overexposure tends to make Nixon's crimes as buffeted to public action as the Vietnam abomination has become.

We feel that your approach would be more directed toward educating the readership of this university, if you were indeed to show us why McGovern is a better choice. We ask you to develop an argument, supporting your candidate, that will dispell our following concerns.

For a man who claims to be responsive to the people why has he been wooing the past power manderins of the Democratic Party? He surrounds himself with men whose loyalties to ego, technocracy, and oppertunism transcend any concerns of people. By doing so, any change in policies effecting the majority of the world's people will be again subjected to a ruling class interest. Kennedy and Shriver are no less corrupt than Nixon because they steal through burocratic mazes; sifting and winnowing interests and using their powers to create programs that leave the people's needs sadly unrealized.

We tell you that McGovern's plea to "come home America" is a main loss of perspective. The American People, and we emphasize people, are home. They are home under the bed with the doors locked. If you can show us a tough McGovern yelling to these frightened people to come out and fight for their lives, if you can show us a decisive challenging McGovern, if you can show us a McGovern who will be a tool of the people and not the industrial brahmins, then we'll show our votes. The power is in the streets, in the communities in the people...come home George.

To The Editor:

The following letter was received by Jim Matlack, Asst. Prof. at UMass. and one of the organizers of the Westover demonstrations last spring. While spending ten days in jail as a result of refusing to pay the fine imposed by Judge Landers, I received a copy of the report of the Quaker service team which runs a Rehabilitation Center in Quang Ngai, South Vietnam. They provide medical care, artificial limbs, and physical therapy for civilian casualties in one of the most fought-over regions of the country (six miles from My Lai). Included were pictures and case histories of the war's maimed and battered victims, most of them the result of American firepower. I was deeply moved by this report and wrote the Quang Ngai center to express support and tell about the protests at Westover. The following letter arrived 2 weeks ago. It makes clear, in immediate and specific terms, the grim situation on the ground in South Vietnam and the importance of our continuing public opposition to the war. Ground fighting has spread into Quang Ngai province, B-52 bombing raids are being flown in the area, and civilian casualty rates are higher than ever.

Dear Jim,

I am writing on behalf of the entire Quaker Team in Quang Ngai, the Center staff, and patients to thank you for your interesting letter of support and concern for the Vietnamese people and our Rehabilitation program. The delay in responding to your letter is only due to a very busy schedule. Ever since the increased military activity this past Spring our patient load has been the highest it's ever been. In addition to this high level of civilian casualties at the hospital and at our Center we have been plagued with other problems: the threat of many of our workers being drafted, friends being thrown in jail and interrogated, our work at the Prison being terminated for political reasons, patients losing their homes to artillery fire and bombing, etc.... etc.

Your sketch of the protests which took place at Westover Air Base was impressive. News such as you gave us is encouraging for us in our work. Were it not for people such as yourself and those others who continue to non-violently protest to stop the American criminal involvement in this war our work here would lose much of its meaning and significance. The Team and our Vietnamese friends wish you continued success in your struggle to find new and more effective ways of ending the war and bringing the American people to a more comprehensive understanding of the reasons behind the U.S. war effort.

This continues to be a difficult time for us in Quang Ngai. Much of the province has changed hands without much fighting and is now controlled by the NLF. Our fear is that soon there will be massive retaliation in these Front-controlled areas and again we will see more civilian casualties....

In the struggle for peace and love,

Northampton Volunteers Befriend The Mentally Ill

By KERRY MELLO

Myths about mental illness have been perpetuated for generations. The mentally ill have been hidden behind bars or in dark attics and a family with such a disease in their history took great measures to keep it a secret. In recent years, however, mental illness has been recognized as a genuine disease and much has been done to obliviate the myths surrounding it. A group here on campus, the Northampton Volunteers, has done much work in this area.

The volunteers, headed by Mel Kelhen, make weekly visits to the state hospital. There they work with emotionally disturbed men and women, talking, playing cards, or performing other recreational services of interest to the patients. A member of the group, Brian Allard, stated of his experience, "It is very easy to make friends with the people there. They are starved for friendship and affection."

The group has been functioning effectively for about five years. Meetings are at the state hospital on Thursday nights at 7:00 and anyone interested in joining may attend these.

Former POW Re-evaluates War

NEW YORK (AP) -Navy Lt. j.g. Mark Gartley, who returned to the United States last week after four years in North Vietnamese prisoner of war camps, said Sunday he has to make a "re-evaluation" about the war. He also said he has not decided on whether he will stay in the Navy.

"When I was shot down I was not politically aware," he told a new conference, "but since that time I have learned a lot. I have to make a re-evaluation."

Gartley, 28, had been asked if he had been brainwashed.

"I'd have to know what you mean by your definition of the word," he said. "We were exposed to information of an antiwar nature."

But then he added he did not think he had been brainwashed.

Gartley and his mother flew Sunday to Jacksonville, Fla., to enter the naval hospital there for debriefing and medical attention.

At a news conference he called in St. Albans Naval Hospital here, he stressed that during the three days he spent he was never held incommunicado. Gartley's mother, Minnie Lee, had protested his immediate hospitalization when he arrived in the United States, saying she wanted him to spend some time with his family first.

"I was not incommunicado," he said. He had full visiting privileges, made phone calls and even received a note from a reporter who went to the hospital, and sent a note back to him, he said.

Gartley said there were no conditions attached to his release but, he said, the antiwar activists who escorted him and Navy Lt. j.g. Norris Charles and Air Force Maj. Edward K. Elias home had been given a mandate by the North Vietnamese "to return us to our families in the United States.

"This mandate was carried out," he said.

His release came as "a complete surprise," Gartley said.

Asked if he intended to work for the peace movement here, Gartley said he intended to work for the prisoners of war. He said he would contact their families here to reassure them of the captured men's wellbeing.

His only regret so far, he said, was that he was not allowed "to meet the families of other prisoners who had come to talk to me" at Kennedy Airport.

Captured in August, 1968, the flier said life in prison improved in the past two years, with more reading material and movies.

He said: "The treatment in the prisons was humane-I was not mistreated."

"But," he added, "it is still a prison, like any prison in the world."

Cherokees Angry At Archaeologists

CHEROKEE, N.C. (AP)-Anger is rising on this western North Carolina reservation over what some Cherokee Indian leaders say is the plundering of ancestral graves by artifact-hunting archaeologists.

The scientists say, however, they are rushing to uncover and preserve Indian relics and heritage that will be lost forever when a Tennessee Valley Authority dam floods them in a few years.

The TVA is funding the digging of Dr. Alfred K. Guthe, director of the McClung Museum at the University of Tennessee at Knoxville, and his university crew. The site in question is in Tennessee, an old Cherokee Indian village and fort near Tellico Plains, about 100 miles west of Cherokee, nestled in the watershed of the Little Tennessee River.

Vice Chief John Crowe of the eastern band of Cherokees contends archaeologists are plundering the graves of his forefathers and that the TVA is "flooding a whole race of people's history and heritage off the map."

A TVA spokesman, however, says the reason they are funding the digging is precisely so that won't happen.

Tribal councilman Jonathan L. Taylor says the Cherokees oppose the entire Tellico dam project and that more than half the 8,000 Indians in his reservation have signed a petition demanding a halt to it.

The Indians have appealed to Tennessee Gov. Winfield Dunn for help and will meet with him in Nashville on Monday. The delegation will include, besides Crowe, Principal Chief Noah Powell and several other Cherokee tribal councilmen.

There is little chance at this point, Taylor said, of succeeding in halting of the project. What the Cherokees want, he said, is to make sure that in future situations, "and they will arise again," that "we are consulted and that our wishes are given some weight."

Fire-Ridden Freighter Consigned To The Deep

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. (AP) - The Oriental Warrior, a gutted Chinese freighter towed into Jacksonville after burning at sea four months ago, was buried in 600 fathoms of water 125 miles east of here Sunday.

Five explosions set by U.S. Navy demolition experts tore through the burned-out hulk, sending it to the bottom just west of the Gulf Stream. The burial ground was chosen to protect American beaches from any pollution that could occur.

The disposition of the freighter had plagued Jacksonville authorities, the Coast Guar

The disposition of the freighter had plagued Jacksonville authorities, the Coast Guard, the Navy and its owners ever since the ship was towed in here shortly after fire erupted in its engine room May 24.

All 95 persons aboard-including 24 elderly passengers bound from New York to the Orient on a three-month cruise-were rescued safely by a passing cargo ship.

The ship was brought into Jacksonville Harbor, where it settled into four feet of St. Johns River mud and 32 feet of water, spilling oil and erupting sporadically into flames deep within its stores of cotton, hides, paper products, fertilizer and automobiles.

Officials, arguing over juristiction and costs involved in its disposition, finally decided that the Oriental Warrior had become a hazard to navigation as it rusted half-submerged beside Blount Island.

It was towed to its final destination Saturday, and it took only 10 minutes for her to disappear under the Atlantic Sunday.

Only a few boards and small oil slick marked the Warrior's final resting place.

Action Lab Seeks Volunteers

By MARY SHERIDAN

What is it like to tutor in a jail? Paul Murphy, president of Action Lab at UMass, offered some descriptions of this and the program in general.

Action Lab is a student run program, sponsored by the student senate, which tutors inmates at the Hampshire County jail in Northampton and helps former addicts in the North End Drug Abuse Center in Springfield. The program has been running successfully for three semesters. The Northampton jail was built around 1871. Classes are in small classrooms in the chapel.

"For a county jail, it is open," Murphy said. "There is rarely any tension and the administration is flexible."

The program is useful in that it serves as an opportunity for inmates to talk freely to persons outside the jail community.

There are two basic types of tutorials: (1) Inmates are tutored by undergraduates to achieve high school equivalency diplomas. (2) Spanish speaking inmates are taught English by bilingual students.

Initially, the idea was to teach high school courses on a one-to-one basis. Because not all the inmates were interested in getting a high school diploma, seminars were offered on various subjects.

Seminars are taught on topics of both the inmates and students choice. Last spring, seminars were offered in contemporary music and prisoner's rights. Inmates also recorded a play which was broadcast over WAMA, Amherst College radio.

The program at the Hampshire County holds a philosophy in that undergraduates don't go there to study or analyze the inmates, but just to talk and be of help.

"Basically," said Jerold Tomas, advisor to Action Lab, "it serves as an opportunity for students to get off campus and help people."

UMass involvement in the North End Drug Abuse Program in Springfield is in its beginning stages. This program helps former addicts find jobs, tries to provide outside involvement and serves as a liaison between the Hampden County Jail. Eventually, the state will send all addicts in that area into this program, instead of placing them in jail.

There are difficulties in both areas of the program. Students are on vacation at Christmas and during the summer. There is a large turnover of undergraduate tutors, as many join the program in their senior year.

Paul Murphy expressed a need for bilingual (Spanish-English) volunteers for the North End Drug Abuse Program. Anyone interested should contact him 253-2425.

'Round The World Wives' Schedule Coffee Hour

Hosted by Ann Silva of the Foreign Students' Office, members of "Round the World Wives" met recently to talk over this year's program. According to Peggy Gage and Eleonor Singleton, chairpersons of the program sponsored by the Amherst Town Committee for Foreign Students, 'Round the World Wives" is designed to acquaint wives from foreign countries with Amherst and the opportunities it has to offer.

Tomorrow morning at 10 there will be a coffee-hour at Prince House, to welcome all participants, both American and foreign. Peggy Gage will acquaint all those attending with the many activities offered.

Aside from the opportunity to make new friends. " 'Round the World Wives" offers many enticing programs. Lee Behnke (Tel. 256-8764) and her group of free volunteer tutors offer to teach English. Mrs. Theo Kirk (Tel. 253-9355) conducts a sewing group. Ann Huner manages the Loan Closet in the basement of Arnold House. Later in the year those interested in cooking will meet to prepare American and international dishes. But by far the most important part of the program offered is that of acquainting its participants with the resources available to them in the town of Amherst: its health services, adult education classes, library, Host Family program, and a host of others. Everybody interested in participating in any one or all activities is cordially invited to attend the coffee-hour at Prince House. Those in need of transportation please contact Lois Cannon (Tel. 253-3004) or Marnie Price (Tel. 253-5016).

Business majors, liberal arts majors, nutrition majors, dietetics majors, history majors, social science majors, nursing majors, city planning majors.

Foreigners Should Check Loyalty Oath

Foreign nationals faced with the obligation to sign the Massachusetts oath statement are advised by the Foreign Student Office to take full advantage of the grace period - until November 15 - before signing the statement, and to check with the Foreign Student Office (Whitmore 239) or with Attorney Richard Howland (Campus Center) around November 15 for further guidance if they are still unclear about the outcome of the issue.

Many foreign governments (e.g. Canada, Germany) are sensitive about their citizens' performing acts which express or imply loyalty to a government other than their own. Regardless of the substantive content to the oath, or lack of it, and its American constitutionality as recently determined by the U.S. Supreme Court, such governments may, on learning of such signature, refuse to renew passports of their nationals or otherwise revoke such nationals their full rights of citizenship.

The question of an alternative text to the oath for foreign nations, or a blanket exemption for them, is currently being raised with the Commonwealth Attorney General.

Bromery To Dedicate Lab

The UMass Herter Hall Language Laboratories will be dedicated October 5. The facilities will be named for James W. Butler who was director of the laboratory until his death in 1970.

Principal dedication speakers will be Chancellor Bromery of the University and Dr. Paul Pimsleur, professor of Foreign Language Education at the State University of New York at Albany. Professor Pimsleur's talk is entitled "Is the Language Laboratory Indispensable?"

Pimsleur is perhaps best known for his widely used foreign language aptitude and achievement tests. He is also author of the recently published texts "C'est la vie" and "Sobra el sol".

The dedication ceremonies will begin at 4 p.m. in Herter 227 on the UMass campus. The public is cordially invited to attend.

Commuter Health Problems To Be Discussed In Series

The Commuter Assembly, in cooperation with the Health Education Service, is sponsoring a series of coffee hours dealing with some of the health problems related to life off-campus at the University.

Seven guests in all will be scheduled for the first semester, usually to be held on Tuesdays between noon and 1:00 p.m. in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union. The four major areas to be covered are sex and contraception, nutrition, drugs, and mental and general health. These are primarily for commuters, but anyone interested may attend.

The first coffee hour will be held Tuesday, October 3, at 12:00. E. T. Mellor from Room to Move, the University drug drop-in center, will be in the Colonial Lounge with a slide show to discuss the relationship between the commuter and Room to Move. He stresses, however, that this will be as good a chance for him to learn about the commuter's wants as it is for the commuter to learn about the Center. He will also discuss many other aspects of drug usage at the University. The slide show has been shown a number of times on campus and has been received favorably by the students.

The Truth About Quaalude. (It's A Real Down.)

By LIBERATION NEWS SERVICE

"Patients awoke refreshed without hangover. Patients are alert, immediately fit for physical or mental work." So reads a recent advertisement for Quaalude, one of the most widely used non-barbiturate hypnotic drugs available in the U.S. today.

Methaqualone, better known by its brand name, Quaalude, is not only widely distributed by psychiatrists and physicians as a sleeping pill and sedative, but is also becoming one of the most popular street downs.

"For every quaalude addict we come across, that addict seems to know 5 or 6 others. At this point, we believe we are only seeing the tip of the quaalude addict iceberg," said Richard Kunnes, a doctor at Ann Arbor's Drug Help center.

Quaalude became popular because it was thought to produce a non-addictive "buzz" and thus was a safe replacement for barbiturates and heroin which, of course, are highly addicting. And there were good reasons for people to believe methaqualone to be non-addicting.

Most doctors will tell you that there was essentially no evidence in medical or pharmacological literature to indicate any serious addicting potential. The Physicians Desk Reference, a major source of information for a wide majority of practicing physicians, has not indicated any serious likelihood of addiction. And no wonder: the PDR is published by a consortium of drug firms and is designed to push their products, not to discourage doctors from using drugs.

But even the PDR states, "Due to lack of long term experimental data, quaalude should not be prescribed for more than 3 months." And, "Care should be used during administration with other analgesics, sedatives, psychotherapeutic drugs or with alcohol because of possible potentiation of effects." Which is to say, that if you take quaalude with wine or seconal, or any other downs, it may become 2 to 10 times as strong and dangerous. It only takes the strength of 20 quaaludes to kill a person.

The dangers for those who use quaaludes infrequently or alternately with other drugs (speed or other downs such as seconal, tuinol, etc.) are the side effects of dizziness, hangovers and the yet untested damage it does to bone marrow and stomach lining. And there is also the damage that any drug intake does to the liver which has the job of filtering impurities out of the blood.

"If you take quaalude with wine...it may become 10 times as strong and dangerous"

"I have seen quaalude addicts who can't speak straight. They repeat sentences over and over and don't even know what they've said," observed one woman whose sister is a quaalude addict. "You have to repeat things to them and then they still don't understand. Once when I was talking to one woman who takes them regularly, 1200 mgs or more a day, her eyes kept rolling back into her head. She nodded out on the bed. It's disgusting. But the worst part is the hopelessness she feels. Her only motivation is to get more quaaludes. It's like an oral lobotomy."

"The biggest problem with quaalude is that the addict cannot withdraw by going 'cold turkey' "

But the biggest problem with quaalude, is that while it is addictive, the addict cannot withdraw by going "cold turkey" as she or he can with heroin. Why not? Going cold turkey from quaalude can produce convulsions, stomach hemorrhaging and death (heroin does none of these except through overdose). What makes this problem doubly hazardous is that since few people know methaqualone is addictive, most users of the drug are also unaware of its withdrawal dangers.

Drug Help in Ann Arbor has had a few methaqualone addicts come to them for help. "Unfortunately, when we attempted to get these people hospitalized for detoxification, all of the hospitals in the area said they would take no addict of any description and insisted that the problem was a psychological one and not a medical one," reported Kunnes.

There is one common method of medically supervised withdrawal from methaqualone addiction. That is to place the patient-addict in an in-patient service, put him/her on 24 hour convulsion precautions, stop all quaalude intake and immediately re-addict the patient with high doses of barbiturates as a substitute for quaalude. Since withdrawal from barbiturates is standardized procedure, once the patient is addicted to the barbiturates, withdrawal from them is begun and completed in four to six days.

The Food and Drug Administration has given no serious warning of possible addiction to methaqualone either.

There are now at least seven major pharmaceutical firms and countless minor ones manufacturing methaqualone, under various names (Soper by Arnar-Stone, Somnafac and Somnafac Forte by L. Smith, and Bithetamine by Strassenberg).

These companies manufacture far more tablets than can be used safely in prescribed medical situations. Not surprisingly there is widespread quaalude diffusion, legal and otherwise, through physicians' prescriptions, stealing from factories and warehouses, hijacking from trucks and in all likelihood, some underground laboratories. Methaqualone is flooding the streets and college campuses and is readily available at comparatively low prices.

Pro Football Roundup

Rams, Jets, Upset

Falcons, 31-3

ATLANTA (AP) - Dave Hampton set a team rushing record of 161 yards, including a 56-yard touchdown dash, as the Atlanta Falcons whipped the Los Angeles Rams for the first time ever 31-3 Sunday and moved into the National Football Conference Western Division lead.

The Falcons scored on three of their first four possessions, mainly on a bruising ground game that also saw Art Malone surpass the 100-yard mark.

Hampton tallied another touchdown with only 1:55 remaining in the game on a one-yard sweep after Ken Reaves had raced 28 yards with a pass interception to the Rams' seven.

Los Angeles' only score came on David Ray's fourth field goal attempt of the day, a 22-yarder in the third period.

Bill Bell gave Atlanta the lead for good in the first six minutes when he booted a 41-yard field goal.

It was Atlanta's first victory in 12 games against the Rams, having previously managed only two ties in the series.

Miami, 16-14

BLOOMINGTON, Minn. (AP)- Garo Yepremian kicked three second-half field goals and Bob Griese passed to Jim Mandich for a touchdown with 88 seconds left to play as the unbeaten Miami Dolphins defeated the Minnesota Vikings 16-14 in National Football League play Sunday.

Yepremian booted field goals of 38, 42 and 51 yards. The third kick left the Dolphins behind 14-9 with 4:15 to go in the game.

The Vikings couldn't move and Griese drove Miami, 3-0, in for the winning touchdown-a three-yard pass to Mandich.

A roughing the passer penalty, a 12-yard run by Mercury Morris and a 17-yard pass to Howard Twilley at the Viking three set up the touchdown.

The Vikings took a 7-0 lead in the first quarter on Fran Tarkenton's 56-yard touchdown pass play to John Gilliam, who fielded the bomb on the Miami 25 and easily outran Jake Scott and Tim Foley into the end zone.

Miami, failing to mount a sustained drive in the first half, battled back to within 7-6 on a pair of field goals.

But the Vikings, 1-2, responded with an 80-yard drive-72 on the ground-capped by Bill Brown's one-yard dive with 14:27 to play.

Pastorini Leads Oilers

HOUSTON (AP) — Quarterback Dan Pastorini shook off a painful bruised knee to outduel Broadway Joe Namath in a frantic fourth quarter and Skip Butler kicked four field goals to lead the aroused Houston Oilers to a 26-20 upset of the New York Jets in a National Football League game Sunday.

Pastorini kicked the previously winless Oilers to a 14-13 halftime lead on a 52-yard touchdown bomb to wide receiver Kenny Burrough and a one-yard run by Willie Rodgers in the second quarter.

Pastorini was sidelined with 50 seconds left in the half with a bruised left knee, but returned in the third quarter as the Oilers capitalized on two New York fumbles and a pass interception for field goals of 12, 20, and 20 yards by Butler, who was obtained on waivers earlier this season.

It was the first pro victory for new head Coach Bill Peterson and it marked the first time since the Kansas City game in 1967 that the Oilers had beaten a team with a winning record.

Pack Dumps Dallas

MILWAUKEE (AP)—The Green Bay Packers, cashing in on Dallas mistakes, combined three field goals by Chester Marcol and hard running by John Brockington for a 16-13 upset of the defending National Football League champion Cowboys Sunday.

Interceptions by Al Matthews set up two of Macol's field goals, including the decisive 22-yarder with four minutes gone in the fourth quarter as the crippled Packers snapped the Cowboys' 12-game winning streak.

Marcol's other field goals were of 44 and 26 yards and Brockington carried 26 times for 91 yards, including a two yard touchdown run in the second quarter.

The Cowboys' last chance was foiled when Walt Garrison was stacked up for no gain on fourth and one at the Packer 40 with 3:25 left. A 52-yard punt by Ron Widby put the Cowboys deep in the hole and Willie Buchanon intercepted a desperation pass by Craig Morton, returning 26 yards to the two.

Time ran out before Green Bay could score again.

Colts Win First

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) - The Baltimore Colts won their first National Football League game of the season Sunday, blanking the Buffalo Bills, 17-0.

Baltimore, beaten by the St. Louis Cardinals and the New York Jets in their first two games, scored all of their points in the first half.

Quarterback Johnny Unitas tossed a 27-yard scoring pass to Tom Mitchell, Jim O'Brien booted a 30-yard field goal, Sam Havrilak scored from 12 yards out on a reverse.

The Colts' defense repeatedly turned back Buffalo and, for example, allowed the Bills only three series of downs in the first period. Another example Buffalo punter Spike Jones was forced to kick eight times in the first half.

Baltimore's offense sputtered after the first intermission. They had two scoring chances but O'Brien blew both by missing 30-yard and 45-yard field goal attempts. Earlier, he was short on a 43-yard play.

Unitas, who passed for 376 yards against the Jets a week ago, struck for 184 as he completed 11 of 29 passes against the Bills.

Buffalo's J.D. Hill, unable to snare Dennis Shaw's aerials in the first half, finished with eight catches for 115 yards.

A poor punt by Jones gave Baltimore the ball on Buffalo's 29 in the opening period. Unitas' TD pass to Mitchell followed Tom Matte's two-yard line buck.

A 23-yard pass, Unitas to Don Nottingham, was the key play in the drive, climaxed by Havrilak's score.

Lions Win

CHICAGO (AP-Detroit quarterback Greg Landry ran for three touchdowns and passed for a fourth Sunday to lead the Lions to a 38-24 victory over the Chicago Bears in a National Football League game.

The game had been drummed as a head-knocker as Chicago linebacker Dick Butkus had called the Lions a "bunch of jerks." But there were a few penalties and there were clean shots instead of cheap ones.

Butkus mainly was the objective as the Lions shot Steve Owens and Altie Taylor into the middle of the Bears' line to highlight touchdown drives of 78, 29, 68, and 55 yards.

Landry's scrambling and passing to Craig Cotton set up a 35-yard goal by Errroll Mann in the fourth quarter. And Landry scored the last Lion touchdown on a 13-yard run.

This stemmed from an intercepted Bobby Douglass pass by linebacker Mike Lucci.

Butkus got a measure of satisfaction in the third period when, on fourth and one, the Bears faked a punt from their own 34. The ball was snapped to Butkus who lumbered 28 yards to inspire a touchdown march.

JV Booters Outclass Holyoke CC 1-0

Friday afternoon started out cold and raw as the weather had dampened the spirits of both clubs, but, by the end of the day, the JV's from UMass were feeling warm and rosy, as they had concluded a spectacular offensive performance in beating Holyoke Community College 1-0.

The score was in no way indicative of the way the game was played. From the outset, which was delayed because one referree was late, the Minutemen totally dominated the action. The statistics of the game vear this out as UMass outshot Holyoke 23-2 and had the edge on corner kicks 12-2. If it weren't for some nifty heroics from the HCC goaltender, the Minutemen might have blown the game wide open in the first half.

With such a sustained offensive attack, you knew that UMass was going to score on one of these drives up the field. Finally it happened. After being shut out for the entire first half and 10 minutes of the second half, Bill Belcher hit a corner kick which connected with Charlie Polano's head and the only goal of the game had been scored. Polano gave the Holyoke players something to talk about. He did everything but stop the rain on this afternoon. He set up numerous teammates and had many scoring chances of his own and it would only be fit that he score the winning goal.

The only sembalance of a threat that HCC had all day came after about 2 minutes of play. An HCC forward had beaten the UMass defense and had drawn goalie Barry Lutchen from the confines of his net. However, Tom O'Hara came up with a fine defensive play in chearing the ball down the field and ending the threat. From this point on it was all UMass.

After the game, Coach Berryman summed up his team's fine effort this way, "I've never seen such a sustained offensive attack as I saw this afternoon. It was a tremendous team effort as everyone did their specific job well."

Tigers Win, 5-1; Close On Sox

DETROIT (AP) — Aurelio Rodriguez slammed a three-run homer and John Hiller fired a five hitter to pick up his first victory since his return to baseball as the Detroit Tigers beat Milwaukee 5-1 Sunday to give their title hopes a shot in the arm.

The victory, coupled with Boston's 2-1 loss to Baltimore, moved the Tigers to within a half-game of the American League-East leading Red Sox.

Detroit and Boston start a three-game series in Detroit Monday night that will determine the winner of the AL's Eastern Division baseball championship.

Hiller, who sat out the 1971 season after suffering a heart attack after the 1970 season, had a one hitter through the first six innings. The triumph put his record at 1-2 and was his first in exactly two years.

His last previous victory was a two-hit, 1-0 shutout of Cleveland on Oct. 1, 1970-the last day of the season. His heart attack came in January.

Rodriguez' homer, his 12th, came in the fifth inning off Bill Parsons, 13-13, after a single by Willie Horton and walk to Jim Northrup.

Dick McAuliffe and Al Kaline each hit bases-empty home runs in the eighth to give the Tigers their final two runs.

Hiller pitched out of trouble in the ninth inning after giving up his only run on a walk to Ollie Brown and singles by Dave May and Rick Auerbach.

Beman Wins Quad Cities

BETTENDORF, Iowa (AP) - Deane Beman came from four strokes off the pace with a final 67 Sunday and won the Quad Cities Open Golf Tournament for the second straight year.

Beman's 72-hole total of 279 was five-under par on the 6,501 yard Crow Valley Golf Club course and one stroke ahead of rookie Tom Watson, who closed with a 66.

Beman collected $20,000 from the total purse of $100,000 for his fourth tour triumph in as many years.

He won $5,000 last season when he took the title in this event, which was then being played as a satellite tournament.

The victory boosted his season's earnings to more than $87,000 for the year, the best he's had since turning pro in 1967.

It kept intact his record of never losing in Iowa-he's three for three in the state. In addition to his two Quad Cities titles he won the second of his two national amateur crowns in Iowa in 1963.

Don Iverson, the tour sophomore who led or shared the lead through the first three rounds, knocked himself out of it with a pair of double bogeys.

He finished with a two-over-par 73 in third place at 281. Lanny Watkins, another rookie, had a 72 and was alone in fourth at 282.

Tied at 283, just four strokes off the lead in the mild, sunny weather that was a distinct change from the inclement conditions of the first three rounds, were Gibby Gilbert, Doug Olson, Grier Jones and Bob Wynn.

Olson had a 68-one of 29 subpar rounds in the final day's play-Gilbert had a 70, Wynn a 73 and Jones, winner of last week's Robinson Classic, had a 71.

British Open champion Lee Trevino, one of the very few of the game's great stars to compete here, blew to a 76. Trevino wasn't in it after the first round but still drew a large portion of the gallery, despite his 291 total.

Put a smile on that pumpkin

It's the perfect autumn day: sunny, but crisp and cool, with the smell of burning leaves and the colors of changing foliage. A great afternoon for getting into the mood of the season and carving out that pumpkin. And even though it's "that time" of the month, you're feeling really happy, with a smile as broad as the pumpkin's. Because you have the comfortable feeling of Tampax tampons' internal sanitary protection. And the confident feeling you get because Tampax tampons free you from irritation, odor and worries. Comfort, freedom and confidence are important to you and to women all over the world, so it's no wonder more women trust Tampax tampons to help keep them smiling.

Minutemen Are For Real

By EARLE BARROLL

CAMBRIDGE–So...you turned your radio off (after only 19 seconds and Harvard ahead, 7-0) and resigned yourself to the fact of life that UMass vs. the Ivy League isn't kosher.

Well, let me tell you what you missed. Let me fill you in with the details of one of the greatest (if not the greatest) victories in the history of UMass football.

And better than that, let Dick MacPherson, the winning head coach tell you, "Harvard is a great team with a great coach. It's the number one school in the world. This was a great win for UMass. Nobody we could have played would have meant more to our people back in Amherst."

P.S....you goofed.

UMass (2-0) stunned Harvard, 28-19, here on Saturday in a convincing display of two-way football that rocketed the "Minutemen" into the thick of New England football supremacy. (Besides proving to Boston that there is a good football team just a mere 30 minutes up the road from Exit 8 on the Mass. Pike.)

The Crimson (0-1) were victimized in this, their season opener, by four gross blunders (three fumbles and a missed point after), a UMass defense that bent but didn't break under the pressure of their (Crimson) multiplicity and three guys from Amherst named Peil Pennington, Steve Schubert and Paul Metallo (not to forget the offensive line that made their feats possible).

Harvard took the opening kick-off and 19 seconds later in the midst of what appeared to be mass chaos in the Crimson backfield quarterback Eric Crone optioned to halfback Mark Wheeler who skirted 76 yards down the sideline in an electrifying opening play.

The Johns would go on to score two more times during this afternoon: (1) on a 14 yard run by Crone (PAT missed–costly) and (2) on a 59 yard pass play from relief quarterback Jim Stoeckel to Dave Hagerty, but in between this scoring the damage was on.

Pennington (12 for 18, 263 yards) and Schubert (five receptions, 114 yards) annihilated the Crimson's blitzing defense that led to the first two UMass scores. On two near perfectly engineered drives Pennington and Schubert hooked up on three slant patterns that set up a one yard run by Peil (scored again in fourth quarter, on an eight yard run) and a six yard burst by Metallo (behind a big block by Kevin Moran).

"If they continue to use that slant pattern they'll move the ball," Harvard coach Joe Restic commented after the game. "They (Pennington and Schubert) had great execution. It was just great timing from a great quarterback and a great receiver."

The second UMass score came in the wake of a Hagerty fumble near the mid-field strike after a seemingly dangerous end-around was in the making.

But this wasn't the end of the Crimson's calamities.

Captain Ted DeMars mysteriously dropped the ball in the clear, no one within ten yards, in what looked like a 60 yard touchdown jaunt to be. And Stoeckel became disengaged from the pigskin late in the fourth quarter (when the Crimson were threatening) after being nearly desimated by the right side of the UMass line (Tom Bradshaw recovered).

MacPherson said of this, "We got to take it home and be humble about it. Whoever would have thought that Teddy DeMars would drop the ball in the open. We'll just have to keep going to church."

Probably the biggest play of the game came in the third quarter with the Minutemen leading, 21-19, the third UMass score coming on a Pennington to Walter Parker bullet (12 yards) following a 56 yard romp by Gary Mika who took in a short Pennington toss and broke it for the long gainer.

Harvard had scored to make it 21-19 and the Minutemen were facing a two-point conversion attempt. The Crimson had two tries, the first one ending on a pass interference call on Earl Brown, the second on a jarring head-on collision by DeMars and the UMass defense–for no gain.

"After that missed point it was catch-up the rest of the way," Restic said. "I just can't fault my players. They had over 400 yards in total offense (424 to be exact), but we made those costly mistakes and couldn't make the big play when we needed it."

It might have had something to do with those guys from the other side of the state.

Maine Blanks Soccer Team

By DOUG FIDLER

The UMaine varsity soccer team used an aggressive offense to down UMass 2-0 last Saturday morning.

The Minutemen started quickly, passing and working the ball around well. Tom Coburn broke away from an almost sure goal, but was tripped from behind by a Black Bear defender. His penalty kick went just wide to the left, however.

The Down-Easters took advantage of the miss by scoring the winning goal at 20:25 of the first half. A 15 mph wind carried a mid-field kick by Mike Wisnieski to the goal mouth, where John Rosenfeld headed it past Carl Vercollone.

Maine's defense was veracious throughout the game. The Bears' play really resembled hockey, as they played a physical checking game.

UMass pressed for the tie-maker in the second half, but missed several opportunities.

Captain Doug Faust put the game on ice when he scored on a direct kick from just outside the penalty area. The attempt hit the upper corner of the goalpost and bounced into the goal.

"We have no excuse," claimed Coach Gerry Redmon. "Maine was quicker on the ball and their heading was far superior to ours. They beat us with their aggressiveness."

Maine goalie John Hackett stopped all 11 shots kicked at him, while Vercollone saved 9.

In other weekend action, Springfield beat Bowdoin 3-2, M.I.T. nipped Holy Cross 1-0, and Brown stomped Tufts 8-1.

Pats Dump Skins In Thriller

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP) — Jim Plunkett scrambled away from heavy rush and hit rookie Josh Ashton with a 24-yard touchdown pass late in the hectic fourth quarter Sunday, giving the New England Patriots a 24-23 come-from-behind victory over the Washington Redskins in a National Football League upset.

The Redskins gambled with 1:39 remaining in the game, giving up a 33-yard tying field goal by Curt Knight in favor of a first down at the New England 21 when the Patriots were called for roughing the kicker.

Bill Kilmer threw incomplete passes on the second and third downs, and Knight tried again from the 27, but this time the ball sailed wide to the right.

The previously undefeated Redskins weren't through yet, however. The Patriots ran three running plays and then Pat Studstill attempted to punt from inside his own 15.

Bill Malinchak blocked the kick, and the ball rolled just out of the end zone for a Washington safety.

The Redskins then took Studstill's free kick and moved the ball to the New England 42, but with 12 seconds to go Knight missed a last-ditched field goal attempt from the 50.

The Redskins had taken a 14-0 lead midway through the second quarter when Kilmer connected with wide receiver Charley Taylor on touchdown passes of 30 and four yards.

The Patriots came back late in the second quarter and marched 83 yards in 12 plays with Ashton cracking over right tackle from the two, m [illegible]

Sox Lose; Race Tightens

BALTIMORE (AP) — The Boston Red Sox lost a 2-1 decision to the Baltimore Orioles Sunday, reducing their first-place lead in the American League East to one-half game over the runner-up Detroit Tigers.

The Red Sox and Tigers open a three-game series in Detroit Monday night, with the division title going to whichever team wins two of the contests.

"We've just got to do it ourselves, the same way we've done all year," said Boston shortstop Luis Aparicio.

The Red Sox left Memorial Stadium before Detroit completed its 5-1 victory over Milwaukee, but the Boston players were assuming the Tigers would hold onto their lead and win. "We can't let this loss worry us," Aparicio said. "After all, we're still in first place." Boston Manager Eddie Kasko declined to make a prediction for the final series.

"If I knew what was going to happen, I wouldn't have to go to Detroit," he said. "I'd either go home, or go to Oakland."

The Oakland Athletics have clinched the Western Division title and will be the home team in the best-of-5 playoffs which open next Saturday.

Manager Earl Weaver of the Orioles, who were dethroned after winning the division title in each of the past three seasons, also declined to pick a winner for fear of "hurting somebody's feelings."

"What difference does it make to me who takes my check to the bank this year," he said. "I'll try to get it back next year."

"But this is the way it should be" Weaver said: "The club that wins two out of three is the champion."

Mike Cuellar pitched an eight-hitter and Bobby Grich delivered a tie breaking home run to win Sunday's game. Brooks Robinson contributed two sparkling defensive plays for the Orioles, who made three double plays including one which ended the game after Dwight Evans and Doug Griffin rapped one-out singles in the ninth.

Cuellar notched his 18th victory with the help of Grich's home run in the sixth inning off Boston starter Lynn McGlothen, 8-7.

The Orioles had taken a 1-0 lead in the third inning when Dave Johnson walked, moved around to third on two bouncers and scored on Boog Powell's single.

Cuellar, 18-12, gave up the tying run in the sixth as the Red Sox rallied two out. Reggie Smith singled, Rico Petrocelli walked and then Carlton Fisk singled home the tying run.

Unrelated Thoughts

Come on,...Get it On!

Notice how the new cheers are getting with it. Next, we'll be censored from national television.

Playing at Harvard for the first time brought on archaic thoughts, such as, win one for the Gipper or Throw them to the lions.

The Harvard Crimson were crimson Saturday.

How about Simon and Garfunkel's Sounds of Silence at a football game. Sure makes one want to go out and cheer!

Now that the Minutemen has become the new nickname for UMass sport teams, will we be calling them the MIN-MEN?

The big boys in the Top Ten love to run up the score. Oklahoma 52-3. Nebraska 49-0. Michigan 41-13. It makes you wonder why other teams would want to play them!

Oklahoma gained 505 total yards against Clemson. Even a freshman, Joe Washington, scored on a 61 yard run. Maybe they should be restricted to using only their regulars. At least, they will tire after awhile.

Is it true that the Sooners recruit benchwarmers just to run up the scores?

Boston College, until recently number 1 in New England, doesn't seem the same this year, as the Eagles have dropped two of their first three games. Maybe this year UMass won't be the underdog.

Foxboro mystique once again came to the rescue of the Pats, as the Redskins' kicker choked in the final minutes by missing the tying field goal from the twenty. George Blanda, where are you?

At least the Pats are developing a style. First, you let your opponent score to build up their confidence. Then, you come back to take the lead. Finally, you give them the chance to snatch victory back, only to leave them crying in their beer.

The Old Gang sure has slowed down. When Pat punter Studstill had his punt blocked in the final going, just one more step would have made the loose ball a TD, rather than a safety.

Whatever happened to Say Hey? When Willie Mays joined the Mets, many were ready to concede the NL East flag, but now they languish 15 games back.

Yaztremski came through again Saturday, homering for the second time in two days. After the Sox started winning the fans forgot to razz Yaz, and the forgotten one responded to once again become a slugger (12 hrs.).

Too bad Ted Williams had to resign, but Texas owner Short gave away most of his talent. Ask Detroit. (Coleman, Rodriguez, Brinkman, and Howard are a few of the old Senators with the Tigers.)

NFL Monday night football is improving. Two losers, the Giants and Eagles will battle. It compares to Texas-Milwaukee in baseball.

Gage Recommended For Vice-Chancellor

By NATHAN GORENSTEIN

Acting Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs Robert Gage has been recommended for permanent appointment to that post, Chancellor Randolph Bromery announced last night.

Bromery, speaking at a meeting of the Student Executive Committee said the vice-chancellor search committee voted unanimously in favor of Gage.

Gage has been acting-Vice Chancellor since Bromery's appointment as chancellor last October following the resignation of Oswald Tippo in a budget dispute with University President Robert Wood.

The Senate Executive Committee also voted to uphold a contested election in Brown House and heard a report from SGA President Larry Ladd on filling the seven student seats in the Athletic Council.

Bromery, reporting to the Executive Committee as was specified in the search committee bill passed by the Senate last year, said he "concurred" with the search committee's recommendation.

Immediately after the announcement given in executive session, the Executive Committee voted unanimously to accept the recommendation.

The search committee originally recommended two candidates for the post. However the other candidate, Robert Gourdet dropped out a week ago, leaving Gage as the sole candidate.

In their report the search committee said Gage had "integrity", "tenacity and determination", was "extremely fair, open and honest" and could inter-act with all segments of the campus.

Bromery will recommend Gage to the Board of Trustees at their monthly meeting, being held tomorrow in the Campus Center. It is expected the Board will appoint Gage as Vice-Chancellor.

Previous to his appointment as acting vice-chancellor Gage had been director of Health Services here at UMass for eleven years.

The Executive Committee turned down a request from John Bohn, one of four candidates for two Senate seats from Brown House, that the Brown House Senate election be invalidated because of improper procedure.

Bohn claimed that a locked ballot box had not been used, and that all voters were not required to present proof that they lived in the dormitory.

Brown House Moderator Suzanne Gentees said that a locked ballot box had not been used because she did not have the key for the lock, but that the ballot box was behind a counter and there was "no way anybody could have gotten to the box."

Gentees added that all voters were either known to her or had their ID's checked.

Bohn came in third in the election, loosing a senate seat by three votes to Les Murray.

SGA President Ladd told the Executive Committee that a screening committee had chosen seven nominees out of 17 candidates for the seven student seats on the Athletic Council. Ladd said he had interviewed five of the seven students and was concerned that the current nominees would not be "broadly representative of the campus."

He said all the seven candidates were "sympathetic" to the athletic program, the reverse of the problem Ladd said he had forseen for the last year. Ladd said he would try to recruit candidates that represented the "entire spectrum" of student opinion.

Boltwood Project Revised

By NANCY BASMAJIAN

The Boltwood-Belchertown project involves student volunteers from the five college area working the Belchertown State School for the retarded. There are no prerequisites as to a volunteer's experience or academic major, and the program is implemented and staffed entirely by students.

The Project originated in early September, 1969, from the Boltwood House, a service house at Amherst College. Through student correspondence with representatives of the Massachusetts Department of Mental Health and a finalization meeting at Boltwood House, the program began in 1970.

The program exists today, after substantial revision and improvement, under the coordination of Burt Frazman, the "buffer zone" between Boltwood and the staff at Belchertown. There are fourteen student supervisors who underwent a state funded training program this past summer.

Also, during the summer twelve new volunteer programs were designed for this year. There are four units for children ranging up to sixteen years old, Living and Learning, physical education and sex education units for adolescent residents, community skills for residents who are nearly ready to leave Belchertown and live on their own, arts and crafts, a music program which is the only adult program, and the Infirmary for those who are confined to beds or wheelchairs.

The twelfth program is a Saturday night coffee house by which the most capable residents are exposed to realistic social situations – the kind of interrelationship with people that they will have to face upon leaving Belchertown. Most of the programs involve a one night a week commitment, and usually the relationship between volunteer and resident develops to the point where the volunteer's absence for even one night will greatly disappoint the resident.

For both volunteer and resident, the Boltwood-Belchertown Project is an adventure in sharing. The residents receive the close attention and social contact that they cannot possibly get from the scantily staffed institution, where for example, there is approximately one psychologist for every two hundred residents, and where the attendants must take care of both the buildings and the residents.

Coordinator Burt Frazman says, "They're just people like us...What they have been denied most is a chance for human interaction." They need "...people who'll care about them, listen to them, talk to them." The volunteers get an opportunity to do field work in their major field, learn about their own strengths and inhibitions, and feel needed by another person.

For those people who do not wish to be in close contact with the residents, there are other areas of involvement, such as physical improvement of residence equipment, administration and funding, and transportation of volunteers.

The project is dependent on local student governments for operational expenses, while salaries for student supervisors come from the state Student Intern Program.

The best way to state briefly what the Boltwood-Belchertown Project is all about is to quote Burt Frazman when he said, "I'd like to see Boltwood break all the patterns of institutional behavior that these people have been living with...They really are just people."

Ricci Protests Committee's Task

By ROBERT MEDEIROS

UMass Professor Benjamin Ricci says he will not participate in the selection of a permanent superintendent at the Belchertown State School until certain corrections are made in the selection process.

"I refuse to participate in this shoddy display of democratic selection by an appointed committee," stated Ricci, the president of the Belchertown Friends Association, in a recent letter to Dr. Helen Reinherz, chairwoman of the Mental Health-Mental Retardation Advisory Council.

Ricci is a member of a seven-man committee that was appointed by state Mental Health Commissioner Dr. Milton Greenblatt to find a successor for Dr. Roland A. Nagle who announced his resignation as superintendent on June 12 effective Sept. 2.

Ricci is also the leading organizer of a class-action suit against the Dept. of Mental Health. The suit filed last February in U.S. District Court in Boston charges that the state has been negligent in the care of residents at the Belchertown State School for the retarded.

Dr. Ricci said the search committee has presented two candidates for the post to a larger committee of mental health and Belchertown representatives. He added that the candidates will probably be interviewed by Commissioner Greenblatt this week.

"The selection process must be more orderly and deliberate," Ricci continued. "I wish to emphasize that I have neither the reason to reject nor accept the two active candidates."

"I wish by my protestation," he wrote to Dr. Reinherz, "to gain the support of your group in order that we might establish an orderly procedure for selecting a replacement immediately upon the stated intention of resignation by a superintendent."

Dr. Rudy Magnone, Belchertown's regional administrator for mental retardation, said the department has sent two representatives to the congress with the same goal.

However, Ricci said he was notified by Dr. Magnone that "we must act, for if we do not decide this week, we shall lose both candidates."

Ricci said he refuses to be "pressured into making a decision."

Dr. Magnone said it is possible that one of the two candidates may be appointed this week by the Commissioner depending on what happens in Montreal.

According to Dr. Magnone, "the department has not advertised the opening in national and international journals as far as I know," but he said he has been in contact with interested candidates in six or seven states.

Meanwhile, House Speaker David M. Bartley, D-Holyoke, revealed last week that a special legislative commission would probe charges by a citizens' group that DMH has been negligent in its care of emotionally disturbed and retarded children.

Party Representatives Debate In Hampden Commons Tonight

By STUART GONDELMAN
Southwest Bureau

Project 10 and the Southwest Director's office are sponsoring a debate tonight in Hampden Dining Commons between representatives of the Democratic, Republican, and Socialist Workers' Party at 8 o'clock, according to David Hoffman, Assistant Director for Academic Development of Project 10.

The one and one-half hour debate will include Don Gurewitz, U.S. Senate candidate of the Socialist Workers Party; Dale Read, the youngest member of the Republican State Committee and an official of the State Health Department; and David Strohm, State Student Coordinator for McGovern, said Hoffman.

He added that Strohm received his B.A. in government at Dartmouth and is presently a doctoral student in political Science, a Harvard Teaching Fellow, and a member of Boston Mayor Kevin White's Policy Planning Committee.

Moderating the panel will be Southwest Director John Hunt.

The purpose of this debate, according to Hoffman, is to inform students about the issues in this election year.

Hoffman said the format of the debate would be as follows: ten minutes apiece for opening statements, a half hour of rebuttal between the candidates, and a half hour for questions from the audiences. At this point, Hoffman expects "a flurry of pointed questions.

There are two additional panelists, Don Glickstein and Matt Tackeff. Glickstein is a McGovern supporter, and Tackeff for Nixon, is chairman of Young Americans for Freedom in Mass. Both Tackeff and Glickstein will join in the panel to help direct questions to the three spokesman.

WMUA is carrying the debate live over the radio.

Hoffman said this debate is one of a series of political events planned for this year. These debates are supposed to "provide an opportunity for intellectual debate on topical issues" for all students in Southwest.

Hoffman indicated that other political events are planned for Southwest. These include an October 11 workshop on "Commune and Community Building" led by Peter Rabbit, a 35 year old "hippie" living in Drop City, a commune in Colorado; and a discussion with Allen Weinstein, a professor at Smith and author of the book Prelude to Populism, on October 22. His topic will be "McGovern, Bryan, and Wallace: Three Generations of Populism in American Politics."

Correction

Prof. Joe Frank, Head of the English Department, does not believe there should be "a four-year required English program", as he was quoted in yesterday's Collegian. He does believe that every student should have one year of formal exposure to problems of communication and self-expression. Otherwise, he said, "he or she may be poisoned by the type of pollution in our linguistic environment represented by phrases like "protective reaction".

Grad. Sen. Delays Action on SUG Reform

By WALTER LALIBERTE

The Graduate Student Senate met last night and sent to committee the Undergraduate Student Senate act to reform the Student Union Governing Board.

The action means that the controversy concerning SUG Board reorganization will not be resolved for at least two more weeks, when the Graduate Student Senate will meet again.

In other business last night, Dean Appleley discussed problems facing the UMass Grad School and its prospects for the future.

After hours of debate, the Senate voted to approve a motion by Senator Bill Ohley to table the proposal. Citing lack of time to consider the measure and that it was the first meeting of the newly elected Senate, the grads voted 25 to 8 to delay action.

Patti Asack of the Undergraduate Student Senate reported that the Chancellor once had to suspend the SUG Board constitution in order to balance their budget. She said she was "incensed over SUG Board irresponsibility."

In defense of the present Board, Guy Ross, former member of both the Grad Senate and the SUG Board, blamed Student Senate President Larry Ladd for the problem. He said, "Larry has admitted that he has used the SUG Board as a dumping ground for some of his political appointments." To work under the new proposal would be impossible, he added.

Some Senators voiced hesitation about extending Senate control over SUG Board decisions. Mike Curren, a Senator and SUG Board member, cautioned against involvement in administrative dealings between the Board and the Chancellor.

Earlier, Dean Appleley of the Graduate School answered questions from the Senate. He noted a decline in Federally-sponsored fellowships and agreed that money will be the School's major problem in the future. He also said a comprehensive report on the future of the Grad School will be available near the beginning of next year.

Three Die, Six Injured In Belchertown Crash

BELCHERTOWN, Mass. (AP) — Three men were killed and six injured Monday when a Boston & Maine Railroad freight train plowed head-on into a Central Vermont Railroad freight train that had stopped on the single track, police said.

None of the injuries of the six were serious.

State Police identified the dead as Harold G. Bullard, 62, of Brattleboro, Vt., engineer on the Central train; Harold "Zeke" Green of Brattleboro, trainman for Central Vermont; Francis J. Griffin of Clinton, Mass., an employe of the Boston & Maine.

The six injured men were taken to Mary Lane Hospital in Ware where they were treated and released.

The injured were identified as Edward Greenlaw, 48, of Warren, the Boston and Maine engineer; Charles J. Boorsh of Auburn, a Boston & Maine trainman; Gordon Zarik, 34, of Auburn, of the Boston & Maine; Sherman Callahan, 52, of Springfield, Vt., a Central Vermont conductor; Harry Goryer, 50, of Brattleboro, a Central Vermont flagman; and Marvin Carley of Brattleboro, a Central Vermont conductor.

Student Teaching Applications Filing Deadline This Week

By ED FOGARTY

Senior English majors interested in student teaching for the secondary education certificate this spring should see either Gary Aho, Fred Robinson or Frances Stone in Bartlett 474 before the end of this week.

The English Department and the School of Education are now accepting student teachers on a selective basis, and approximately twenty-five of all applicants will be accepted into the program. To date there are 100 applicants.

Ms. Stone emphasized that any underclassman in the English Department should come to Bartlett 474 as soon as possible for counseling.

The selection process consists of five parts. The kinds of courses the student has taken as an undergraduate will be evaluated as to how they relate to a high school curriculum. Secondly the students academic record will be looked at, although a 4.0 cum does not necessarily mean that a student is accepted. Next the student must write a letter to the committee explaining what he thinks his attributes are for qualifying as a secondary school teacher. Then the applicant may obtain from the faculty of his choice recommendations as to his ability to teach. Finally the applicant appears before the committee for an interview.

"We feel", said Ms. Stone, "that this is a fair system of evaluation. It allows the student to be evaluated on more than one basis. This year we are looking to broaden our procedure and welcome any recommendations from students, faculty, and administration."

The reviewing board consists of fifteen members from the English Department, School of Education, and High School teachers.

The selective process was set-up last year in order to lessen the number of teachers entering the labor market, and to turn out a more qualified and highly motivated teacher. Also it serves a clearing house to inform students as to what are the latest developments in secondary education.

"Our office contains information on what is happening in secondary education in English, what's taught now, and what you can teach in the future," said Ms. Stone.

This year two members of the committee, Gary Aho and Fred Robinson are offering a course on the problems and realities of secondary education. The course confronts the student with the difficulties of teaching the various disciplines of English. Teachers from local and urban schools come in to share their experience as a teacher.

Any student who is a graduate and wants a secondary education certification should see Pat Sullivan of the School of Education.

ABA Head Wants New Ideas For "Innovative Approaches"

HARTFORD (AP) - The American Bar Association's new president, Robert W. Meserve, said Monday he wants ideas for "innovative approaches" to legal services for the poor.

He offered as an example prepaid legal insurance modeled in part after medical insurance plans. He called the concept "judicare."

Meserve said the ABA was disappointed at a recent setback in Congress for funding legal services agencies, but he said that government subsidies don't have to be the only approach to innovation.

"The availability of justice must never again depend on wealth," Meserve told the annual meeting of the Connecticut Bar Association.

"While it is quite evident that the legal needs of the poor cannot be met without some form of public financial subsidy," he said, "it would also seem clear that a wide range of those needs could be met" in programs using "traditional private lawyer-client relationships, sometimes, and in some forms, called judicare."

He used as an example an experiment now being conducted by the bar association in Shreveport, La., which he said "makes a broad range of legal services available to the members of a participating labor union."

Shellfish Sale Restrictions Lifted

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) - The New Hampshire Division of Public Health said today it has lifted all restrictions on the sale and consumption of shellfish in the state.

However, a spokesman said harvesting of clams and oysters by sport fishermen in New Hampshire still is restricted because of danger from the effects of red tide. There is no commercial harvesting in New Hampshire.

The division said the prohibition against sale was removed because some areas in adjacent states have been re-opened to commercial digging.

Dr. Hugh L.C. Wilkerson, acting director of public health, said today that testing of New Hampshire soft shell clams and oysters is continuing.

"The toxic levels of these clams and oysters has reduced markedly," he said, "but still remains considerably above the permissable amount allowed in food."

At a petition of 10 graduate senators, a special meeting will be called this Wednesday at 8:00 p.m. of the Graduate Senate.

Sole agenda item is the SUG Board. The agenda will be delivered by hand tomorrow.

In The Nation And The World

Danes Heavily Favor Common Market

COPENHAGEN (AP) - Danes quashed fears of a major hitch in Common Market expansion Monday by voting nearly 2 to 1 in favor of joining the European Economic Community.

The final tally was 1,950,000 for and 1,124,000 against, or a margin of 57 per cent of the total electorate to 32.9. The voter turnout of 89.9 per cent was an all-time record for this small Scandinavian nation.

Danish farmers voted solidly, as expected, for the Common Market, which will help their exports. The surprise of the election was that antimarket forces did not gain a majority even in their supposed stronghold, metropolitan Copenhagen.

The firm surge toward the EEC proved groundless the predictions that Denmark's poll would be affected by the narrow referendum victory for market opponents last week in Norway.

Prime Minister Jens Otto Krag's government, which negotiated Denmark's entry into the market, preached economic hardship, stern austerity policies and devaluation of the kroner if the vote went against joining. The Danish referendum was binding, whereas last week's Norwegian vote was advisory, with the final decision to be made by parliament.

The weather turned sunny for Denmark's voting day, but there was nevertheless an undertone of tension. It was the eighth day of a suspension of currency trading, decreed to protect the kroner after the Norwegian vote.

When the voting trend became evident Monday night, the Danish National Bank announced that currency trading will resume Tuesday morning.

Denmark, Norway and Britain have been scheduled to join the rich economic and trade bloc Jan. 1. The current members are France, West Germany, Italy, Belgium, the Netherlands and Luxembourg.

A couple of hundred youths, many of them just school children, marched to Copenhagen's Town Hall, a polling station, shouting "Denmark out," in an illegal attempt to put pressure on voters in the act of voting. Officials even forbade voters to wear "Yes" or "No" buttonhole badges into polling stations.

Casting his vote, Prime Minister Jens Otto Krag said he hoped "common sense will win" and that there would be occasion to drink a "cup of joy" in celebration of a "yes" to Denmark's entry into the European Community on Jan. 1, 1973.

Krag's Social—Democratic party minority government signed the treaty of accession last January at Brussels and parliament approved Danish membership by 141-34.

Trudeau Magic Seen Fading

WINNIPED, Manitoba (AP) - The magic of Pierre Elliott Trudeau seems to be wearing a little thin in western Canada. That could be costly for him.

The prime minister's personality carried him to a thumping 1968 victory, permitting his Liberal party to form a majority government. Now he is seeking a new mandate in elections Oct. 30. If Trudeau runs into a close contest in Ontario and elsewhere, any loss of luster in these wide-open Prairie provinces could lead to his inability to form anything but a minority government.

The campaign is just about getting into gear in the west. Many in Manitoba, Alberta, Saskatchewan and the Pacific province of British Columbia seem to feel themselves spectators, convinced the election will be decided by easterners before the polls close in the west.

In terms of personalities, no other party leader can hope to match Trudeau - certainly not Robert Stanfield, 58-year-old leader of the Conservatives, now the No. 2 party. But there are signs of irritation with Trudeau. He occasionally encounters hostility from members of his audiences. Some Liberals express annoyance with him. One sometimes hears him accused of arrogance.

Like their American counterparts, Canadian voters can be fickle. Although analysts remain wary about projections, they speculate that Trudeau, obliged to run on a record, can be forced now and then to the defensive. Some say his appeal to youth has waned now that he is 53 and no longer a swinging bachelor but a workaday husband and father.

The Socialists of the New Democratic party - NDP - challenge Trudeau's appeal to the young by offering change. Much of their local victory in provincial contests in the west - they now rule British Columbia, Saskatchewan and Manitoba - seems the result of a public quest for change, of a public restiveness rather than consideration of ideology.

Canadians often vote far differently in federal elections from their performances in provincial polling. There seems something in the voter's makeup impelling him to administer a rebuke now and again to his leaders, to startle them at the polls, shake them up.

Many in the west have a suspicion that Ottawa doesn't give these provinces a fair shake, a not surprising feeling in view of the big difference in eastern and western population.

The Liberals can hardly be unconcerned about the outlook. They could lose painfully in the far west while picking up nothing to balance it in the Prairies.

U.S. to Admit 1,000 Ugandan Asians

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States will admit 1,000 Ugandan Asians on a parole basis to this country, the State Department announced Monday.

They will be admitted in addition to those who will be given immigration visas in accordance with immigration law, department spokesman Charles W. Bray told a press conference.

"The attorney general will exercise his parole authority for this purpose so that we can admit to the United States those who have no valid claim to citizenship," Bray said.

Mass. Welfare Rolls Have Doubled

BOSTON (AP) — Massachusetts' welfare folls have doubled in the past four years while the state's population remained constant, according to the Massachusetts Public Welfare Council Monday.

The agency's report said the number of persons receiving welfare has jumped from 391,000 in 1968 to 723,000 in 1972. But it said this should not make welfare "the number one scapegoat on the Massachusetts political scene."

Bill to Bar X. Viet Visits Rejected

WASHINGTON (AP) — A bill to bar unauthorized visits by Americans to North Vietnam was rejected by the House today amid charges it could let the president block trips by journalists and families of prisoners-of-war.

The measure was beaten under procedures requiring approval by two-thirds of the congressman voting.

The legislation would have made it a felony punishable by up to 10 years in prison and a $10,000 fine for Americans to make trips to a country in armed conflict with the United States unless such a visit had the approval of the president.

Hit-And-Run Raids Staged By N. Viets

SAIGON (AP) — Enemy forces staged 100 hit-and-run attacks across South Vietnam in sudden upsurge of activity, and U.S. Navy jets attacked a North Vietnamese shipyard at Haiphong, the allied commands in Saigon reported Monday.

President Nguyen Van Thieu met in secret session with Maj. Gen. Alexander M. Haig, President Nixon's special envoy, to discuss talks in Paris and events in Indochina. As the men conferred for 2-1/2 hours, Thieu repeated his regime's public positions on war and peace in a state of the nation address read for him at the opening session of South Vietnam's National Assembly.

The series of apparently coordinated attacks, most of them shellings of military posts or towns, were termed by one U.S. analyst as "just continued harrassment." But it was the first time in more than two months that the North Vietnamese or Viet Cong had launched so many widespread assaults.

In Thailand, U.S. spokesmen reported that 36 mortars were fired at Ubon air base, one of eight Thai bases from which American planes strike at North Vietnam. No casualties were reported at the base, some 300 miles northeast of Bangkok.

Enemy mortar shells hit the airport at Kompot City in Cambodia. A government spokesman said nine civilian air passengers were killed and another 20 persons wounded. The spokesman said one mortar round hit a Cambodia Air Commercial DC3 passenger plane as it landed. However, crewmen of other planes reaching Phnom Penh from Kompot after the attack said the plane was parked and taking on passengers when it was hit.

The U.S. Command said Navy and Air Force jets flew more than 250 strikes against North Vietnam on Sunday, including a raid on Haiphong Shipyard No. 3 which pilots said was left in flames and billowing black smoke.

In a delayed report, the command said an Air Force F105 was downed by a surface to air missile Friday 43 miles west of Hanoi. Both crewmen were listed as missing.

The command has reported losing 103 jets over the North in the six months of resumed full-scale bombing, and 108 American airmen have been added to the missing list.

Haig, who arrived in Saigon on Sunday, is scheduled to depart for Washington on Tuesday after meetings with top U.S. military officials, Ambassador Ellsworth Bunker and Thieu. The White House said Haig was sent here to review the political and military situation, but informants said the general's chief purpose was to brief Thieu on the secret proceedings in Paris between Nixon adviser Henry A. Kissinger and North Vietnamese diplomats.

House Okays Skyjack Laws

WASHINGTON (AP) - Stiff legislation to permit death penalties against skyjackers and terrorists and to suspend U.S. air service to countries that harbor them passed the House Monday 354 to 2.

The bill was sent to House-Senate conferees for compromise with a similar Senate bill that would in addition authorize a new airport security force.

House Commerce Committee chairman Harley O. Staggers, D—W. Va., who will head House conferees, promised they will look favorably on a Senate provisions to expand use of gun and metal detecting devices for airports.

Both the House and Senate bills would authorize the President to suspend air service with any country he determines to be harboring or encouraging skyjackers or terrorism involving airliners. Service could be halted also to any third country that continues to maintain service with the offending country.

Viet Capitals Have Common Trait: Fear

(AP) - Time has settled over Hanoi like a plastic wrapper, sealing in the past. An old French tram clanks along main street, bicycles meander by. The few automobiles honking through the streets are relics from Soviet Union car lots.

Saigon has the tinsel veneer of a desert vacation boom town. Flashy motorcycles, sporty cars. Perfume, hair spray. Rich, poor.

These capitals of the two Vietnams that have been at war with each other for nearly 20 years, seem at first glance to have only one thing in common - Vietnamese people.

But after a few days in each place another shared quality becomes apparent. It is fear.

Fear gnaws at Hanoi with the first squawks of a loudspeaker system hanging from each main intersection. "American planes 70 kilometers out" says the authoritative female voice. Minutes later the voice again: "American planes 50 kilometers out."

Then the sirens wail. The people of Hanoi know that the bombers are within 40 kilometers. Their eyes search out the concrete bunkers built like cisterns into the streets. Air raid wardens push passers-by into large shelters beside Reunification Lake in the heart of the city.

A quiet settles over the city, broken by the staccato roar of antiaircraft guns if the aircraft come over the city. Or maybe the all clear sounds.

Saigon does not have the benefit of an alert system. The needle-shaped Russian-made 122 mm rockets that can spin in from the countryside give no warning. No rockets have fallen on Saigon lately, but the memories of the Saigonese are filled with the bad days of other years when as many as 30 at a time came crashing in on homes and market places. They know it could happen again.

Life goes on amidst the fear, but what a different life it is. Twenty years of warfare and ideological struggle seem to have brought out the extremes in Vietnamese character.

Hanoi is drab, a poor relative of other Communist capitals. The grand old French colonial buildings are tidy but faded. Paint peels off the rows of little shops in the densely populated quarters.

Discipline and dialectic is in the air. Other than the evergreens that splash emerald along the boulevards, the only bright colors comes from the posters that glorify heroes of the war or illustrate victories in fighting in the south.

The people dress in somber colors - black trousers, white shirts or blouses, khaki gray or blue jackets. The barmaid at the Hoa Binh Hotel in downtown Hanoi told me she owned only one white blouse and one pair of black trousers. "I wash them each night," she said, proud of her austerity.

I thought of the maids I employed in Saigon, arraying themselves in silken ao dai dresses and swinging beaded pocketbooks.

Nixon To Limit Arms

THURMONT, Md. (AP) President Nixon played host to Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko for an overnight visit to Camp David Monday as they prepared to put into effect historic arms-limitations agreements.

The two leaders will formally exchange instruments of ratification at the White House East Room Tuesday morning, with an array of top officials on hand.

The invitation to Camp David came as Nixon and Gromyko met for 70 minutes at the White House, beginning a round of meetings.

It was at Camp David, in the Maryland mountains, that President Eisenhower and then Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev held meetings in 1959. A brief era of good feeling that followed the meeting became known as the "Spirit of Camp David."

Under discussion Monday were a followup on the arms agreements and included such issues as treatment of Soviet Jews, trade, and a proposed European security conference. Among those invited to a working dinner Monday night at Camp David, along with Gromyko, were Soviet Ambassador Anatoly Dobrynin, Secretary of State William P. Rogers, national security adviser Henry A. Kissinger, Secretary of Agriculture Earl L. Butz and Secretary of Commerce Peter G. Peterson.

Butz helped negotiate the recent grain sale to the Soviet Union and Peterson has engaged in trade negotiations, including the question of settlement of $11 billion in lend-lease debts the Russians have owed since World War II.

At the ceremony Tuesday, Nixon will sign a proclamation declaring the U.S.-Soviet nuclear-arms-limitation treaty into effect. On Saturday he signed a congressional resolution approving the accompanying five-year interim offensive-arms-limitation agreement.

Nixon met also on Monday with Republican House leaders to pressure for congressional passage of a $250-billion ceiling on federal spending for fiscal 1973.

Presidential press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said Nixon intends to remain in the Washington area this week, attending to presidential business and congressional matters and will not go on the campaign trail.

Gartley's Father Will Not Ask For Apology From Laird

GREENVILLE, Maine (AP) - The father of a released prisoner of war spent a day hunting and thinking it over Monday, then said he won't ask Secretary of Defense Melvin Laird to apologize for not ruling out a court martial for the three men returned from Vietnam last week.

"There's nothing like a day of hunting to settle the mind," Gerald Gartley said. "And I know Laird wouldn't give me any satisfaction anyway....so what's the use."

Gartley, father of Navy Lt. Markham Gartley, had been angry over statement by Laird last Wednesday that charges could be brought against the men for allowing themselves to be used for propaganda purposes by the North Vietnamese.

"I was mad and I still am mad," said Gartley, who earlier in the day said he was going contact Laird and ask for an apology. "I don't think it was necessary for Melvin Laird to even bring this up ... these boys aren't criminals," Gartley said.

But, he added, "I'm too small potatoes for Laird to pay attention to. So I'm going to try to forget it."

In the first grade, when you were taught to read "Run Spot Run," you had to read it out loud, word-by-word. Later, in the second grade, you were asked to read silently. But you couldn't do it.

You stopped reading out loud, but you continued to say every word to yourself.

Chances are, you're still reading this way.

This means that you read only as fast as you talk. About 250 or 300 words per minute. (Guiness' Book of World Records lists John F. Kennedy as delivering the fastest speech on record; 327 words per minute.)

The Evelyn Wood Reading Dynamics Course teaches you to read without mentally saying each word to yourself. Instead of reading one word at a time, you'll learn to read groups of words.

To see how natural this is, look at the dot over the line in bold type.

grass is green
You immediately see all three words. Now look at the dot between the next two lines of type. and it grows
when it rains

With training, you'll learn to use your innate ability to see groups of words.

As an Evelyn Wood graduate, you'll be able to read between 1000 and 3000 words per minute . . . depending on the difficulty of the material.

At 1000 words per minute, you'll be able to study/read the Biography of Albert Einstein and finish each 240 word page in 15 seconds.

At 2000 words per minute, you'll absorb an entire issue of Time Magazine in 35 minutes.

At 3000 words per minute, you'll surprise yourself by reading the 499 pages of Exodus in 1 hour and 48 minutes.

These are documented statistics based on the results of the 450,000 people who have enrolled in the Evelyn Wood Course since its inception in 1959.

The course isn't complicated. There are no machines, no notes to take, and no memorizing.

95% of our graduates have improved their reading ability by an average of 4.7 times. Once in a while, a graduate's reading ability isn't improved by at least 3 times. The tuition is then completely refunded.

If you come to one of our free Mini-Lessons™ you'll see how speed reading works.

The Mini-Lesson is an hour-long peek at what the Evelyn Wood Course covers. We'll show you how it's possible to accelerate your speed without skipping a single word. You'll have a chance to try your hand at it. And before it's over, you'll actually increase your reading speed.

McG Demands Nixon Debate

WASHINGTON (AP) - Sen. George McGovern called President Nixon the worst leader in U.S. history, and Vice President Spiro T. Agnew said Monday McGovern's policies would invite worldwide aggression.

McGovern's running mate, Sargent Shriver said that a renewed Republican administration would bring wage dictatorship.

While three of the major candidates campaigned, the fourth, President Nixon, remained in Washington prodding the Democratic-controlled Congress to enact his $250-billion spending limit. He has no campaign travel plans for the week.

The Democratic presidential candidate began the day in Washington by asserting that the United States has never seen "official corruption as wide or as deep as the mess in Washington right now." He went on in Newark, N.J., to assert that Nixon has given the United States "the worst leadership in our national history."

McGovern sought to answer criticism that he has vacillated and damaged his credibility. He contended he has not ducked the hard issues of war, spending or tax reform, while Nixon has displayed "no constant principle except opportunism and political manipulation."

He again defended the decision to replace Sen. Thomas F. Eagleton as his running mate, referring to the matter for the first time in a formal speech.

McGovern moreover renewed his challenge to Nixon to debate him.

Nixon's press secretary, Ronald L. Ziegler, rejected any suggestions that Nixon is hiding during the campaign. He said the President is attending to official business while Congress is in session, and that he expects to have another news conference before November.

Agnew's forum in Washington was the same McGovern used earlier in the day-a meeting of editors of United Press International.

The vice president said that if the United States followed McGovern's defense and foreign programs, it would be "weak in will because of myopic isolation" and "weak in way, because of the...concomitant program of cutting our national defense budget to a level which would invite aggression."

Agnew told the editors the late President John F. Kennedy was right when he said this country must have conventional defenses strong enough so that no president faced with aggression would have to choose between surrender or nuclear devastation.

And he said McGovern's policies would lead exactly to this dilemma, as well as inviting aggression against allies around the world.

As for McGovern's remarks about corruption, Agnew termed them a reckless allegation inspired by "the prospect of defeat."

"It shows a lack of qualities a president should have," he said.

Shriver told an audience of labor union leaders in Minneapolis that in a second Nixon administration employers would use the Pay Board to knock down raises for workers: "You're going to have dictated wages-dictated from Washington."

Both in Minneapolis, where a tractor plant is being closed, and later in Rock Island, Ill., Shriver said too many employes are losing pension benefits, after years of work, because their companies fail or they are laid off. He called for legislation to insure such benefits and make them portable from job to job.

Shriver complained of what he called a Madison Avenue image-changing performed on Nixon and Agnew, saying "we want a president and vice president with one character, one face and one image."

The vice presidential candidate also denied that McGovern had advocated blanket amnesty for all draft evaders and deserters, federal legalization of abortion on demand or legalization of marujuana.

In other political developments:

—A Newsweek magazine poll said Nixon has a chance to carry all 50 states, leaving McGovern only with the District of Columbia's three electoral votes.

—The latest Gallup poll showed McGovern making some gains, but still 28 percentage points behind Nixon.

—Democratic National Chairman Jean Westwood said the Democratic voter-registration drive has picked up 4.5 million voters and expects to register an additional 3.5 million.

—Rep. Louis Stokes, D—Ohio, chairman of the Black Caucus in the House, said "the federal commitment to equality has been abandoned" and "we have no alternative but to support Sen. George McGovern."

—The American Civil Liberties Union filed suit in U.S. District Court attacking provisions of the Federal Election Campaign Act which, it said, inhibit expression of views by issue-oriented organizations and require them to disclose names of contributors.

Nixon Has Chance To Carry All 50 States

NEW YORK (AP) - President Nixon has a chance to win all 50 states in November and already has enough electoral votes "solid for him" to carry him to four more years in the White House, a Newsweek poll says.

The poll, published in this week's issue, shows Nixon with 277 electoral votes sewed up, with another 152 leaning toward him. Democrat George S. McGovern has only the District of Columbia solidly behind him, with its three electoral votes, Newsweek said.

West Virginia with six electoral votes was found leaning toward McGovern, while five states with 100 electoral votes-including California's 100-were listed as "uncertain."

A total of 270 electoral votes is needed to win.

A similar poll conducted in July found Nixon with 236 electoral votes solid for him and 61 leaning to him. McGovern had seven solid votes and 29 leaning to him. The balance was undecided.

In July, Newsweek said, McGovern's Republican home state of South Dakota was "leaning to him," with its four electoral votes. Now, McGovern was reported "barely even" in the prairie state.

Art For McG Auction Held

BOSTON (AP) — An Art for McGovern auction Monday night to raise money for the McGovern-Shriver presidential campaign brought out a crowd estimated at 300 by a spokesman.

Among those present at the Parker Street 470 gallery was Mrs. Joan Kennedy, wife of Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass. Mrs. Kennedy was honorary chairwoman of the affair.

Artists, collectors and supporting galleries donated the works to be sold. Included were 17th century Dutch drawings as well as contemporary sculpture and paintings.

Similar sales were planned in other cities.

Craft Center Offers Diversion From Routine

By STEPHEN FISHER

The UMass Craft Center (across from the Student Union Hatch) offers students an enjoyable, creative diversion from their routine schedule of classes and studies.

Penny Worman, Staff Assistant in the Student Affairs Office, instructs students in the various projects available. She reported that those students who have knowledge in a particular craft are generally willing to help other students with their work. One more full time instructor will be hired shortly to teach woodworking and photography, and to assist Penny with the instruction of the more than 100 students who use the Craft Center daily.

The Craft Center is paid for by student fees and is open to anyone with an interest in exercising his or her creativity. Instruction and the use of tools and work areas is absolutely free. The only cost to the student using this facility is for supplies, which are sold for cost price. The only rule at the center is that those with long hair must tie it back for safety purposes.

Possible projects include designing and constructing silver jewelry, leather articles, pottery, stained glass, and candles.

Also available are supplies and equipment for sewing, silkscreening, blockprinting, photograph developing, lapidary work, and doing minor repairs on items such as shoes or glasses. Woodworking tools will be purchased in the near future.

Also planned are seminars on making sheepskin jackets, Indian mocasins, copper enameling, and tapestry weaving.

The Craft Center is open Monday through Friday from 10 AM to 4 PM.

Frisco Police Bust On-Board Pot Party

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) - The promoter of boat ride called it an innocent "going away party" on San Francisco Bay-but police termed it the largest marijuana party ever held on local waters.

When the three-decked cruiser Harbor Emperor docked at Fisherman's Wharf Sunday night, police backed up their words by arresting 45 persons - including promoter David B. Morgan.

Morgan, who is due for sentencing next Tuesday for possession and sale of marijuana, explained that he had chartered the boat to say goodbye to his friends and raise funds to pay his attorney, Gordon Rockhill 38, of Redwood City. Rockhill also was arrested.

The Harbor Emperor took off for an evening sail with 330 passengers, a six-man rock band and three undercover narcotics inspectors dressed as deck attendants.

As the party progressed, the three inspectors reported by walkie-talkie radio that there were bags of marijuana on tables available for the taking. They said some guests were smoking hashhish in pipes and others were partaking of "a terrific variety" of pills.

"We could have made the arrests in the middle of the bay," said Inspector Arthur Gerrains, "but we were afraid of being thrown overboard."

So, he said, they waited until the cruise ship docked. The three inspectors then identified themselves as officers, sending passengers scrambling for the siderails to dump the drugs. Only those tabbed by the inspectors were arrested by 20 patrolmen and 10 inspectors waiting at the pier.

From his City Prison cell, Morgan said he knew only about 70 of the passengers personally and that many of them had sold tickets on his behalf at $3 apiece. He blamed "crashers" for the trouble and said he knew nothing about the narcotics.

Morgan, was booked for investigation of maintaining an establishment where narcotics were served, resisting arrest, and contributing to the delinquency of minors.

Those arrested and booked for investigation of furnishing and possessing narcotics included 40 men and five women.

Warden Adds Ears And Tongue

THOMASTON, Maine (AP) — The 27-year-old warden of the Maine State Prison has undertaken the job of adding compassionate ears and counseling tongues to already watchful eyes.

Garrell S. Mullaney sees the prison's 120-man guard force as "the front line", in rehabilitating the 370 convicted felons at the state's only maximum security institution.

Because the guards are with the inmates daily, the youthful warden feels they represent the best hope of achieving individual treatment of the prison population.

Three weeks ago, Mullaney assumed his duties in this coastal community, and became what is believed to be the youngest state penitentiary warden in the nation. His boss, Miss Ward E. Murphy, is listed as the only woman director of state corrections in the country.

The new warden walked into the middle of a boiling public controversy between the guards and inmates. The guards expressed fear for their safety after one officer was attacked.

The inmates say the guards must "change with the times", and were "using one isolated incident", for their own gain.

Mullaney hopes to build a bridge of "trust and understanding" between the two groups. He sees the day when inmates will take their problems to the guards, and the officers will respond with answers.

Except for one flare-up during the Attica trouble a year ago, the Maine prison has been relatively problem free. And, Mullaney admits that is going to help him and the prison staff to accomplish their goals.

"This institution has a flavor about it where people can work together. Both the residents and staff recognize that," he said.

Inmates who have served in out-of-state prisons, have told the warden they wouldn't want to go back," "because it's different here. There are no pipings, no muggings on the inside like in other states."

Maine is a primarily rural state with about a million residents. Most of the prison inmates were sentenced for the non-violent crime of larceny, although murder and drug-related offenses are on the rise annually.

The inmates, Mullaney contends, must be treated as individuals. And the guards, he continues, should do more than keep inmates in custody-they should play a key role in assuring that only problem free parolees are returned to the community.

Within hours after arriving here, Mullaney met with the guards and inmates as groups. Then-using evenings and weekends-he has "gone inside", to talk with each prisoner individually.

The rap sessions between the warden and inmates cover topics ranging from problems at home, to a need for special-width shoes.

Mullaney says some day he hopes the guards will be handling these talks, although his door will always be open.

"I want the residents to be able to stand-up on their own merits. And, I want the officers to be able to give the answers. That forces mutual respect," he states.

The prison has a psychiatrist on duty one day a week, and a full-time psychologist. The guards, says Mullaney, can provide "immediate feedback", to the prisoners.

To prepare for their new role as "more than custodians", the warden feels his officers need more training in the areas of psychology and sociology. They presently receive a 30-day basic course, and attend monthly in-service training sessions during the fall and winter months.

Mullaney is seeking more money-$10,000 is budgeted for the current year-to emphasize treatment, along with security in the guards' training.

Make It Work

By this time, all of you are probably bored from hearing about voter registration. Well I'm going to bore you some more. Maybe if I do that, you'll be so sick of hearing about voter registration, that you'll get out and register. The truth of the matter is that with all the publicity going around about voter registration, there's still a large percentage of students who have not yet registered.

Why haven't these students registered? Well, if you ask them they might tell you that it doesn't do any good anyhow. They'll tell you that the whole system is corrupt and that by voting, they'd just be contributing to the corruption. However, this excuse doesn't make sense, for if there really is corruption, then that's all the more reason for voting. How else are we to rid ourselves of this corruption than to vote out those corrupt individuals? If, in fact, you believe that all the candidates running are corrupt, then maybe you should examine the meaning of the word, for you would probably fall into that "corrupt" category also.

So after dispensing with this excuse of corruption (for surely everyone at UMass is corrupt in one way or another), one often encounters the excuse that the individual usually means one of two things: either that person is not familiar with any of the candidates running, or he dislikes one or two policies of each. In the case of the former, that person should take the time out to buy a few newspapers (for one is never sufficient because each has certain political leanings) and review the policies of the various candidates. In the case of the latter, the only thing can be said is that no one is going to agree with everyone about everything and therefore an overall outlook of each candidate's policies and previous record is required.

Well, now we're down to the people who say that it's too much of a hassle to register or that they're just not interested in politics. These are the dangerous people, for apathy is the most widespread reason for bad government in the history of the world. If it weren't for a general apathy towards government, Hitler would have come and gone, instead of lingering around until his chance arose. If it weren't for a general apathy, then we never would have had to endure such poor presidents as Grant and Harding. And if it weren't for a general apathy, the threat of "the Spiro of '76" would not be lingering above us. Those who practice the art of apathy are the real criminals within our society and they are responsible for the ills of the nation.

There are twenty-five million eligible new voters for the 1972 elections. A new voting force this large would have been unimaginable some 25 years ago, but now it is a reality. Whether or not this force will mean anything is questionable, but the fact that it does exist is not. It's up to you to make it work, or to let it fall into the obscurity of history.

Use Your Government

Student Senate elections are, for the most part, over, and the new Senators will be taking their seats Wednesday night.

There are in excess of 23,000 students on this campus who are not in the Senate, but that doesn't mean that there isn't room in Student Government for you.

First of all, there are eight standing committees of the Senate, none of which require membership in the Senate in order to be seated on one. All one need do is go to the Senate office in the Student Activities area of the Campus Center and tell someone there that you're interested in joining a committee. They'll put you in contact with the right person, and they'll be glad to have you.

There is room for people who want to work in Area government, which is growing in importance every year. There's also the possibility of getting involved in the Student Judiciary as an Advocate or even a judge. For those interested in athletics, applications for the Athletic Council are available in the Senate Office.

Student Government on this campus has great potential, but the key to its success lies in students. If there aren't enough people working for student government there won't be anyone to speak up when a rent increase or a change in academic policy is asked for. Student Government is what students make it, so let's make it something good.

Baseball Apathy

o the Red Sox have won and o they're in first place but o no one cares anymore because baseball and the good things in life are dead

normally i would be screaming at those bums, the Red Sox, because my team, the Yanks, those Bronx Bombers, who everybody knows, Mel Stottlemyre would be a three hundred game winner if he had just had a little hitting in the lean years, them Yanks would be in first place but then came the drought for the Yanks, and i had to temporarily be with the Sox in '67, and it felt kinda good because everyone else was shouting with us and of course, i really had to swallow my pride when the damn Mets won in that cage of plastic, shea stadium, but it was neat seeing them beat the shit out of the Orioles, who were where the Yanks used to be, and besides, everyone was together again for Marvelous Marv and now that the Yanks have been eliminated, because even if they won all their games and the Sox lost all theirs, the Sox would be losing to Detroit, who the Yanks would lose to–it's all very complicated and even Ned Martin said he didn't understand it–i don't mind that too much either, you see, the Yanks will finish in second place, just behind the Sox, and that is where they should be, forever in competition with the Boston people and damn the rest of the league

what bothers me is that no one cares

sure, the Red Sox kinda snuck up on everybody, and some misanthropes even say that they don't deserve to be in first, but dammit, the american league east is the toughest division in the majors, and if you don't believe me, just wait until the playoffs and the series but no one here is excited about the race, they just wanna smoke dope and get drunk and listen to the grateful dead and boogie and christ, they were even watching the football game between the university of illinois and state of washington, who cares what happens to them, instead of the Detroit-Brewers game, where Scotty got another homer am i a hopeless romantic?

am i the last patriot?

why don't no one care no more?

Yelling At TV

WASHINGTON–I went over to Strybaum's house the other night about dinner time and walked into the living room. There was Strybaum screaming at the television set.

I looked shocked and Ada, his wife, pulled me over to the corner. "He's been doing that every night," Ada said. "It's either Cronkite or Chancellor–it doesn't matter. Ever since the election campaign started he's done nothing but yell at the set. I'm starting to worry about him."

President Nixon came on the set, speaking at a fund-raising dinner somewhere, and said, "And I promise that there will be no tax raises in the next four years if I am re-elected President of the United States."

"LIAR!" Strybaum yelled. "YOU KNOW DAMN WELL YOU'RE GOING TO HAVE TO RAISE TAXES. WHAT DO YOU TAKE ME FOR? SOME KIND OF BLITHERING IDIOT?"

"Strybaum," I said, "don't take it so personally. It's an election year."

Sen. McGovern came on the screen and said, "And I promise if I am elected I will see that the government gives financial aid to Catholic schools."

"HORSEFEATHERS!" Strybaum shouted. (Though I must be honest and admit he didn't say "feathers.") "YOU CAN'T GIVE MONEY TO CATHOLIC SCHOOLS. IT'S UNCONSTITUTIONAL AND YOU KNOW IT, YOU BUM!"

Ada said, "Adolph, even if he can't do it, let him say he can. He needs the votes."

Strybaum said, "I'm sick and tired of sitting here night after night and watching these jokers lie through their teeth."

Atty. Gen. Kleindienst came on with his big grin and said, "I am happy to report that the crime rate is down throughout the country, thanks to the Nixon Administration's strong law-enforcement programs."

"BULLDOZER!" Strybaum yelled. "YOU CAN'T WALK FROM YOUR OFFICE TO YOUR CAR WITHOUT GETTING MUGGED! WHAT KIND OF MANURE ARE YOU HANDING OUT TO US?"

"Strybaum," I pleaded, "let the man think it if he wants to. According to his statistics crime is going down. He has to make the President look good."

"We shouldn't have to put up with it," Strybaum said. "They think they can go on the tube any time they want to and expect us to swallow any malarkey they hand out. Well, I've had it, and I'm going to let them know how I feel."

Sargent Shriver appeared on the screen. "And I want to tell you, my fellow Americans, I am sick and tired of going into a supermarket and paying 37 cents for a quart of milk so the dairy interests can fatten the Republican Campaign Chest."

"WHEN WAS THE LAST TIME YOU WENT TO A SUPERMARKET, SARGE?" Strybaum shouted. "WHEN WAS THE LAST TIME ANY KENNEDY WAS IN A SUPERMARKET?"

"It's hopeless," Ada said to me. "He's determined not to let anyone get away with anything while he's watching TV."

"Strybaum," I asked, "what good does it do to yell at your set? They can't hear you."

"They may not hear me. But if everyone in this country yells at his set at the same time, they'll hear us," he replied. "Besides, it makes me feel good. Why don't you try it?"

To placate him I said I would. John Mitchell came on the screen and said, "I know nothing about the Watergate bugging case and I had nothing to do with it."

"YOU'RE LYING, JOHN!" I yelled, "AND MARTHA KNOWS IT, TOO!"

I felt terrible.

Live Together

To The Editors:

A few comments concerning Jim Michaelson's letter of 9/29/72.

First of all, is the American culture really exclusive of Judaic influences? Such rash proclamations can perhaps be remedied by studying something we commonly (but perhaps indiscriminately) refer to as history.

Secondly, what is really so wrong with a "melting pot," if we are both speaking of the term as connoting an integrated society, inclusive of people representing many varied ways of life and practices of custom? We, as human beings with intellects, should be able to rise above the superficial differences among ourselves and live together as people, right? Perhaps it sounds idealistic, but this sort of life style has worked (Read your history of Boston's West End circa 1950 - I lived there), and it had better begin to be the trend again.

We are all Americans, regardless of how badly we feel the country is being governed. We might as well live together as Americans. Nobody is telling anybody else to "melt" if it means cast away one's culture and background, because it really is next to impossible for one to reject his heritage. I am surprised and disappointed that a person of college age can be such a staunch segregationist. And before you cry racism and discrimination, take a look at my nose and measure it for its discriminatory possibilities - I really don't care.

Incidentally, I would appreciate being spared the necessity of writing post-editorial defensive letters in the future if responses to my editorials remained to the point, such as was Susan J. Roy's. If you want to complain about ethnic discrimination, please do not include my name - I am discriminating against you only on your editorial philosophies. The culture of America, whether you like it or not, is NOT exclusively Christian, for the Christian religions have all stemmed basically from Hebrew Law - not Hindu, Buddhist, or Confiucianist. Please grind your disillusioned axe on your own stone, Jim Michaelson.

Finally, I would like to thank Sue Roy for elaborating on my editorial. It is flattering to be placed on a level with Elija Mohammud and the Catholic Church, but these are not my stations. I do not claim an answer for a desperate woman's solution to an unwanted child - I hope each of these women can find the best solution. I only try to speak for that woman who is not that scared, that desperate, or that in need of help, and is being led by outside forces to seek abortion. If there have never been such cases in Third World areas, then I am mistaken in believing so.

Safe Cyclists

To The Editor:

For some time now the Bicycle Paths Committee has been considering ways of improving bicycling conditions in Amherst. As part of this effort, we have been observing the present habits of bicyclists.

From our observations, many cyclists apparently are woefully unaware of certain basic laws established for their safety. The law requires cyclists riding in the streets to operate as if they were vehicles, observing traffic signals, riding on the right hand side of the road with the traffic, and keeping both hands "on the wheel" except when signaling.

However I have seen cyclists ignore a police signal and nearly collide with a group of school children or a car. I have noted many bikes being ridden in the wrong direction against the traffic, a risky procedure. I observed a ten-speeder racing down North Pleasant Street holding a huge bundle with both hands. How could he apply his hand brakes?? Two other ten-speeders passed carrying passengers on their cross bars. One fell in a heap in the travel lane, but luckily escaped unhurt. As vehicles, bicycles operating at night are required to have appropriate lighting, yet many bikes can be seen (or perhaps I should say "can't be seen"!) at night with no lights at all.

Such habits as these are suicidal as well as illegal. If we hope for improved bicycling conditions, perhaps we as bicyclists should assume the responsibility of learning and abiding by the bicycle laws as a first step toward safer biking.

Copies of the Town bicycle regulations can be found in the booklet "You and Your Bike" available in the Town Clerk's Office. In addition, one may register bikes there for 50¢ as a deterrent to theft.

Realities Demand

To The Editor:

Although I happen to disagree entirely with Messieurs Imperato and Fogarty in "Back to the Land" (MDC Oct. 2) what particularly offended me was the manner in which their argument was presented. It was a shameless collection of empty phrases and overblown rhetoric.

First they say "Students are seeking to avoid the experience of reality, and live the illusion of a past age." Are they saying that a person's attempt at living a certain experience is not a real experience? Are they so presumptuous as to say what is or what is not real? Is it the thrust of their argument that living in an apartment is more real than living in a farmhouse?

"America's present population is 80% urban." Where did they get that statistic? That statement could only make sense if urban were defined as any population concentration of at least 5,000. So what do they mean by "urban"?

"The realities demand an orientation toward urban living." Demand. Man, that's a mighty strong word. Dear Mom and Dad, the realities demand that I move out of Hadley and into New York City. Don't ask me why, they just do. Here's a beauty: Anti-urbanism "continues to be a ball and chain on our progress toward readjusting our values." Sounds like a hometown booster speaking before a Rotary gathering.

Ahhh, the ramparts of preserving the rural ethic vs. "the ramparts of formulating a new set of values more consistent with the world we live in." That's a real nice closing, a real rouser. They'd make terrific political speech writers.

Come on guys. Come back with an intelligent argument and cut the crap. Convince me that city life is fun. I'm willing to listen, but speak in plain English. Don't lay a Parade Magazine-type students-are-copping-out numbcr on us.

Inflamed Politics

To The Editor:

Having just moved to Yankee-land, the land of liberalism, Kennedys, etc., it is indeed interesting to read the right-wing ranting and raving of people like Mr. Matt Tackeff. He and his ilk are so outraged with "unadulterated murder" and Student Senate "racism" that they fail to see these very things in themselves.

On the eve of the 1968 Olympics, hundreds of Mexicans were massacred in the Plaza de las Tres Culturas by the lackeys of U.S. imperialism while thousands of others were arrested (discriminately and indiscriminately), imprisoned, tortured, and executed. Of course, Mr. Tackeff, these were merely half-breed, Communist-inspired revolutionaries who might have "injected politics" into a fraternal, international athletic meet. Just as those yellow gooks in Indochina and the Phillipines are threatening to further the spread of Communism throughout Asia. And the same goes for those upstart, Commie niggers in Angola, Mozambique, South Africa, and Rhodesia. And don't forget about those murderous and sneaky Palestinians.

I wonder if the words "revolution" or "national liberation" exist in your vocabulary. Millions of people, mainly Third World people, are at this moment fighting and dying and winning against national oppression and imperialism while you sit down to write another letter of concern about racism in the Student Senate. Granted, racism exists in that body, but fortunately, the most insidious form of racism left it with your resignation.

A Ticket To Ride

To The Editor:

This is addressed to the poor fools who are for Nixon or McGovern. Yes, you have been taken for a ride. To the people who wrote the letter in Monday's paper which denounced McGovern....I agree with you completely. But don't think Richard Nixon is any better because he is not.

For the past thirty years this country has been drifting slowly but surely toward a socialist dictatorship which would be ruled by a clique of the very rich (i.e. the Fords, Kennedy's Rockefellers, etc.). It is now at the point that instead of going more to the left, the United States should move back toward the right. If this is done, America will surely come home as McGovern wants it to. But don't think for a minute that George is the right man for the Presidency. The best man for that job is Congressman John G. Schmitz who is running on the American Independent ticket. The reason he is not well known is that this clique that I spoke of before doesn't want the public to be aware of him and they have the apparent power to limit the publicity he gets. It has gone to the point that in fifteen states, including Massachusetts, he is not on the ballot and one will have to vote for him as a write-in (John G. Schmitz and Thomas J. Anderson, for anyone who wants to know how he would be written in.). This clique feels that if the American Party is "hidden", they can go on with their plans to use Nixon or McGovern as pawns in their game plan of moving the U.S. toward a socialist state which would enslave every single individual in this country and the rest of the world, as well.

I have heard a lot of bull about how McGovern cares about the "Ordinary Joe" but it is obvious to me that he does not. If one really wants to support the average working man, he should vote for Schmitz. To support this last statement, let me state portions of the American Party platform and explain them: 1) Restoration of the Free Enterprise System without Federal control except for taxes. This socialist crap is what has been raising taxes and producing inflation. The removal of welfare and tax loopholes would reduce the economic problem greatly and Schmitz has pledged to just that. 2) Withdraw the U.S. from the U.N. (which is the biggest bull-shitting, do-nothing organization the world has ever known). This would permit America to live as a free and soverign nation without any outside interference and would prevent America from interfering with another country. 3) End this business with Red China, a nation which not only is supplying men and arms to North Vietnam but is the main supplier of illegal narcotic drugs to the United States. Why make friends with someone who is trying to destroy you? 4) Cut out all foreign aid to Communist Russia and all other Communist countries. It has been estimated that if the free world stopped all foreign aid to Iron Curtain countries, the latter would collapse within six months.

There is much more of their platform than what is mentioned above but, because of lack of time and space it is impossible for me to do it here. But if anyone wants more information, he can go to the "Schmitz for President" headquarters located at 87 Main St. in Easthampton. There, pamphlets, books and such are sold at nominal cost. I feel the information their material contains is vital for each and every American to know.

Chess Club Hosts Open Tourney

The September chess program of the UMass Chess Club culminated last weekend in the Third Annual UMass Open chess tournament. This year's event was the biggest ever, with 77 players and a $400 prize fund. Tied for first with perfect 5-0 scores were John Peters of North Scituate and Jim Shepherd of South Hadley.

Each of the first-place winners received $62.50. The championship trophy went to Peters because he had faced stronger opposition than Shepherd. Pre-tournament ratings prepared by the U.S. Chess Federation ranked Shepherd ninth, so his fine finish was a surprise. It included wins over fifth-ranked Lou Petithory of Cheshire and sixth-ranked Harold Dondis, chess columnist for the Boston Globe.

The pre-tournament ratings, which are based on past performance, were also used to divide the players into classes for prize money competition. The Class A trophy was won by Petithory with 4-1. First in Class B was Shepherd. Eric Larsen of Springfield won the Class C prize with 3-1/2 - 1-1/2 (a drawn game gives each player half a point). Tops in Class D was Fred Haynes of East Longmeadow, who scored 3-2. Area students won the other prizes: Marc Shea of UMass took Class E with 3-2, and Andy Gordon of Hampshire College was best Unrated with 4-1.

An unusually large number of players (27, or 35%) were newcomers to tournament chess. Many had played in one of the earlier events sponsored by the UMass Chess Club (a simultaneous exhibition and two novice tournaments). Chess clubs and tournaments across the country have been welcoming many new players ever since Bobby Fischer's victory put chess in the news. This weekend's tournament was co-sponsored by the UMass Chess Club and the Massachusetts Chess Association; the tournament director was Barry Cohen.

Upcoming chess events include the UMass Chess Club Fall Championship, which will be played one game per week beginning Tuesday, Oct. 10, in the UMass Campus Center, and the Franklin-Hampshire Closed Championship tournament on Saturday, Oct. 28, also at the Campus Center. Full details on these tournaments are available at any of the regular meetings of the UMass Chess Club, which are held every Tuesday and Wednesday night at 7:30 p.m. in the Campus Center, Room 804-808. Both these events are sanctioned by the U.S. Chess Federation and each contestant will receive a rating based on his or her results.

Health Services

Are You In Need Of Influenza Vaccine?

Influenza, a common respiratory illness occurring in the United States each year, is periodically in epidemic form. Influenza vaccines have been variably effective and have offered a rather brief period of protection against this disease. Control of epidemic influenza in the general student population is, therefore, not possible through routine vaccinations. The Health Services, therefore, recommends that influenza vaccine be administered only to certain individuals who are at a greater risk because of chronic medical conditions. We recommend annual vaccinations for persons who have the following chronic conditions.

1. Congential and rheumatic heart disease
2. Hypertensive heart disease
3. Chronic pulmonary diseases such as asthma, chronic bronchitis, cystic fibrosis, bronchiectasis and emphysema
4. Diabetes and other chronic metabolic conditions

Those students who would be eligible for vaccination under the above mentioned criteria and who have never received an influenza vaccine before should call the Health Services for an appointment in the Immunization Clinic (5-0057) for a primary series of injections. Two injections must be given 6-8 weeks apart and should be concluded by mid November. For those who have received influenza vaccine in the past year, only a single booster dose is required. Because the vaccine is prepared from viruses grown in embryonated eggs, persons who are allergic to eggs should not receive the vaccine.

These services are only available to students. If you have questions about influenza vaccines, you may consult Mrs. Adair at the Health Services.

O'Neill To Speak On Space

Professor Gerard K. O'Neill of Princeton University will give the second lecture in the Science and Public Policy Series at Hampshire College. He will speak on "The Colonization of Space" on Wednesday, October 4, at 8 p.m. in the main lecture hall of the Academic Building at Hampshire.

Professor O'Neill's field of research since 1954 has been high energy physics. He was the first to propose the storage ring concept (1956), initially derided and eventually adopted as a principal instrument for nuclear research. Since 1956 he has continued to do experiments with and without colliding light beams. He has also published in the field of orbital astronomy techniques.

A Swarthmore graduate, Professor O'Neill earned his Ph.D. at Cornell University, where he was an Atomic Energy Commission Fellow. He has been a member of the faculty at Princeton since 1954. Formerly a member of the board of editors of the Review of Scientific Instruments, he is a Fellow of the American Physical Society.

The Science and Public Policy Lecture Series, sponsored by Hampshire College's School of Natural Science and Mathematics, is open to the public. Lectures are held on Wednesdays at 8 p.m.

Birth Control

For the second year in a row, the Student Senate Women's Committee will be making birth control handbooks available to students. The handbooks were purchased with student tax money, and were the most comprehensive and up-to-date possible, within budget limitations. If possible, at the same time the infirmary will distribute information about related services at the University. Distribution points will be in dorm lobbies, student union, campus center, women's centers, and possibly some of the academic buildings.

For next year, the committee is thinking about publishing their own handbook. If you are interested in this project, or in finding out about the committee, please contact Mary Earnest or Mira Marshall at the Student Senate office 5-0341.

The Equivalent Of 7 Hiroshima A-Bombs Are Being Dropped On Indochina Each And Every Month

And that's after six years of protest!

Explosives equal to 420 Hiroshima A-bombs have already been dropped on Vietnam.

Millions of men, women and children have been killed, maimed or left homeless as a result of the bombing.

—and this is what President Nixon calls a policy of "great restraint"!

He tells us he is winding down the war – and then says that unless North Vietnam accepts his terms, there will be no reduction of the bombing. (As a matter of fact, there will probably be a further escalation.)

"Those who have had a chance for four years and could not produce peace, should not be given another chance," Nixon, October 9, 1968.

On this October 9th, it will be four years. Can our conscience stand the guilt of another four years of this kind of immorality under Richard Nixon?

What are the justifications we are given for this wasting of Vietnam and its people? To protect the people of South Vietnam from communism? To maintain democracy?

The regime we are defending suspends elections, muzzles the press, jails and tortures its political opponents. The people we are supposed to be saving are being systematically killed.

To the survivors, our fight to contain communism in Southeast Asia (at the same time that we are making business deals with communist countries) can only be viewed as hypocritical fanaticism, indistinguishable from that which we have sworn to oppose.

Even as the bombing and killing have been escalated, most Americans appear to have tuned out on what's happening in Indochina. The Nixon Administration is counting on the American conscience to care only about U.S. casualties, not about the lives of Vietnamese.

Do we really not care about the people we kill?

Americans will not always be able to ignore the consequences of our actions. We will be asked: How could it happen? Where were you? What did you do?

Your dollars are crucial. Your dollars can stop the killing. Make it possible for George McGovern to awaken the people before November 7.

President McGovern would end the war.

People of conscience must make this final sacrifice: contribute your utmost!

This is our last chance to make a difference.

Dear Senator McGovern:

I too feel compelled to do my utmost to end the war in Vietnam – and I know that requires the sacrificial giving of dollars to help you awaken every American. Enclosed is my contribution of $25 (or the closest to that figure I can manage).

Peace.

Veterans Using G.I. Bill Increasing To Two Million

Veterans training under the Vietnam Era G.I. Bill are expected to pass the two million mark in 1972, the Veterans Administration reported today.

The estimate is based on a statistical report that revealed that 1.9 million veterans and servicemen used G.I. Bill education benefits during fiscal year 1972, an 18 percent gain over the previous year.

Administrator of Veterans Affairs Donald E. Johnson pointed out that 3.4 million trainees had used their benefits as of the end of August.

"During the first six years of the Bill, the number of trainees had exceeded the 13 year total for the Korean Conflict G.I. Bill by almost a million," Johnson pointed out.

During 12 years of the World War II G.I. Bill, 7.8 million of the 15.3 million World War II veterans, or 45.3 percent, received some form of training. About 13.8 percent attended college compared to 21.9 percent among Vietnam Era veterans and 20.1 percent for Korean Conflict veterans.

These additional enrollment statistics were revealed in the VA report–

Veterans in colleges and universities rose by 16 percent over the previous year–from 917,000 to 1.06 million.

Below college level enrollment rose by 22 percent–from 522,000 to 638,000.

On-the-job training, through which most trainees are preparing for trade and industrial occupations, rose by 11 percent–from 146,000 to 162,000.

Vocational rehabilitation training for service disabled veterans rose four percent–from 30,500 to 31,700.

Dependent's educational assistance - for wives, widows and children of certain veterans and servicemen - rose by almost nine percent–from 8,800 to 9,600 for wives (nine percent) and from 50,700 to 55,000 for children (8.4 percent.)

Eligibility for G.I. Educational Assistance extends to veterans with 180 days active military service provided any part of it was served after Jan. 31, 1955.

Cows To Move Off Campus

In a ceremony tomorrow at 2 p.m., ground will be broken for the first building of the UMass agricultural research facility in South Deerfield.

It will be an H-shaped dairy animal research building located on a 1000-acre farm site along the west bank of the Connecticut River just north of the Sunderland bridge. When completed in the spring of 1973 it will house the dairy herd and research cows now located in farm buildings at the west edge of the main campus.

The move of the dairy operation is the first phase of a program that will eventually see nearly all of the farm animals and equipment now at the central campus moved to the South Deerfield facility. The relocation has been planned since the early 1960's, when it first became apparent that the cropland taken to support the farm at the central campus would be needed for the expanding physical plant of UMass.

At the ceremony Wednesday, College of Food and Natural Resources Dean Arless A. Spielman will preside. In addition to President Robert Wood and Amherst Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery, invited guests include members of the UMass Board of Trustees and Executive Secretary Phillip Good and other officers of the Massachusetts Farm Bureau.

The new building is a one-story concrete block structure designed by James A. Britton of Greenfield. The contractor is A.R. Green and Sons of Holyoke and the total cost, with equipment, is $618,000. It will have a free stall area, milking room, milk storage tank and other facilities of a modern dairy barn, plus some additional facilities for research.

The UMass College of Food and Natural Resources has 157 dairy animals, including a 62-head Holstein milking herd, 45 research animals and 50 youngstock. It also has 38 horses, all but five of them Morgans, 49 Hereford and Angus beef cattle and 172 sheep. They are now housed on the main campus and at Tillson Farm, an agricultural research area east of the main campus.

Their major use is teaching and research in the department of veterinary and animal sciences. Nearly all of them will be moved to South Deerfield as the building program there progresses.

The 1000-acre South Deerfield site is almost all tillable farm land. It was acquired through purchases from private owners beginning in 1961.

WFCR Sets Radio Journalism Precedent

Yesterday WFCR (88.5 FM) began a new concept in radio journalism with The Evening News, a program braodcast at 10:30 p.m. each evening Tuesday through Friday and at 11 p.m. on Mondays.

The Evening News takes a look at local and regional events with a fresh eye. Instead of attempting to cram all the day's news into a single broadcast, The Evening News selects two or three stories of significance and treats them in detail. The program tries to present all sides of a story and gives the listener all the background information needed to fully comprehend the meaning of events.

The kind of stories covered on the program are different from those covered by other local media. The stories are of significance in the every day lives of people. Examples are the full meaning of Springfield's racial imbalance problem in the public schools and how the issue can be resolved or what will happen in Connecticut now that the birth control law has been struck down by the courts for a second time.

Following The Evening News at 11 p.m. Tuesday through Friday, WFCR will present Interview, a thirty-minute discussion program hosted by Art Cohen. Topics and guests will range from visiting writers and scientists to local people with a story to tell.

WFCR is a non-commercial, public radio station in Amherst operated with the advice and support of the Five College Consortium (Amherst, Hampshire, Mount Holyoke, and Smith Colleges and the University of Massachusetts).

Women's Tennis Looks Strong

By STEVE FERBER

When Sally Ogilvie is asked about her women's tennis team she just smiles. But then again, with the kind of lineup she's able to put out on the court, that's all you'd be doing. This year Miss Ogilvie has the kind of lineup you look at and say, "Wow what a great recruiting job," but the only catch is that no one was recruited. They just descended on her one fall day, and she's been smiling ever since.

Last Thursday, the (are you ready) Minutewomen, better known as the UMass netwomen downed Salem state rather soundlv in 7-0 fashion, dropping but one set. This afternoon they'll be on their home courts again. This time its Westfield State at 3 pm, and everyone that find themselves at the Boyden Courts this afternoon will be watching a team with both strength and depth, a novelty for Women's tennis at UMass.

Now as we go down the lineup, take note of the home towns, because only half the starting team were living in Massachusetts last year. At the number one slot is an exchange student. She's Cathy Morris, a powerful lefthander, who comes from the University of Alabama. Against Salem State last Thursday she won 6-4, 6-4, having a little more trouble than had been expected.

Out-of-stater number two is Ann Foley, a freshman from White Plains, New York. She was extended last week, but came out on top; the match going 6-3, 2-6, 6-3.

Diane Green, playing third singles, also comes from New York, and she's a Long Islander, her home town being Patchogue. She is also a freshman and had an extremely easy time of it last week, winning 6-0, 6-2.

Completing the list of singles players is Caron Tsapatsaris, yet another freshmen. This resident of Lowell Mass. found her way to victory in straight sets 6-1, 6-3.

Doubles time and first doubles find Robbie Sanders paired with Betty Londergan. Sanders comes from East Brunswick, New Jersey, and Londergan from Wilmington, Mass. The two have quite a bright future, especially if their 6-0, 6-0 win is any indication.

Two instate girls are paired at second doubles, being Carol Mottau, a junior, and Iris Sanekoff, from Dennis and Needham respectively. Similarly they had few problems, winning 6-2, 6-1.

The ninth and tenth women of the starting squad play third doubles, their names: Muffi Trafton, from Princton, and Patty Heslam, from Fitchburg (although Heslam was down in St. Petersburg Florida last year).

Last spring Westfield State, today's oppoents, were beaten by Salem State, last week's foes; but since an entire revamping of the UMass team has taken place, who knows what other quality females have dropped in on opposing women coaches.

They'll be eight fall matches in all for Miss Ogilvie and her netwomen, against such opponents as Fitchburg State, Springfield, Mount Holyoke, Southern Conn., and Smith College. The season will wrap up late this month with the New England's at Yale University. Miss Ogilvie is planning on taking two singles and one doubles team to that New England tournament.

"I'm very impressed with the newcomers," related Miss Ogilvie and of course she has nothing to complain about when we look at the age of her top girls; most of them are freshmen. Having held practices Monday thru Thursday from 4-6 all fall she feels her team will be in good shape to match the likes of Mt. Holyoke, Springfield and Smith, three of her toughest opponents.

Martin Looks For Revenge: Tigers and His Own

By MARK VOGLER

Manager Billy Martin and his Detroit Tigers have good reason to remember the year 1967. It was one of those years that the American League features every so often, in which the teams are so close that anybody can sneak in.

And that's exactly what happened in '67. The Minnesota Twins (who Martin was coaching for at the time) and the Detroit Tigers had impressive shots at the A.L. flag in the closing days. Yet, both squads put on amazing choking exhibitions.

The Tigers fell apart in California, dropping a double header to the fifth-place Angels on the final day. Meanwhile, Martin bitterly witnessed Minnesota lose its final two contests to the Boston Red Sox.

The result--Dick Williams' BoSox snuck in the back door, emerging as the American League Champions. Yep, '67 was one of those years.

And now, five years later, the American League East is having one of those years. Martin and the Tigers are once again involved--with this time, Martin presiding as their manager.

It's kind of hard to put the nightmare of '67 out of their minds, because history has an unpredictable habit of repeating itself.

The American League season, which ends Wednesday, could see the Eastern Division Title end on that final day--just as it did in '67.

The battle is between two teams now. Martin's Tigers are one. The Boston Red Sox, ironically, are the other. And just as in '67, the Sox will have great deal to say in the matter, for they will wind up the season with their contender.

Martin's record as a manager is another matter of significance. In 1969 as a rookie skipper, he guided the Twins to a Western Division Crown - but the squad suffered three straight setbacks to Baltimore in the American League playoffs. Shortly after, Martin was dropped by Twin owner Calvin Griffin "because he didn't fit the mold of the organization's management."

In the fall of 1970 he was hired by the Tigers to manage. Last year the Bengals finished second in the American League East, 12 games behind Baltimore.

Martin's brief record is impressive, but too consistent. Second place is fine, though finishing as the runnerup consistently is hazardous to a manager's health from the point of view of the owner.

"Nothing beats No. 1. No. 2 isn't good enough" especially if it happens for a third time. The pressure just may be on Martin to produce a champion this year, or he may be on the outs with the Detroit organization.

But Martin's mind is undoubtably more on his team's big showdown with the BoSox this week. They have an advantage over '67 in that they are the host team. And at least this time, the Tigers will be facing the challenger head-to-head.

Should Detroit manage to get by Boston, Mr. Martin wouldn't totally settle the score of '67. The American League playoffs would be next on the agenda.

The Tigers would go at it with the powerful Oakland Athletics, managed by Dick William--the man who tempered the "Impossible Dream" the year that the Tigers took their dejecting dip with the Twins.

Both Martin and the Tigers must therefore avenge themselves on two fronts. The Boston Red Sox are first. Dick Williams is on deck.

Harriers Open At Northeastern

By JOHN BOCK

When people talk about the weather this time of the year most of the comments end up with the familiar epithet, "It's real football weather." And so it is.

It's also real cross-country weather.

Today the atmospheric conditions promise to be near perfect for the season opener at 3:30 p.m. at Franklin Park in Boston.

In their first race under a new name, the Minutemen face the number one and two teams in New England –Harvard University and Providence College.

Both teams go into this race two meets ahead of UMass in experience and that could tell a tale.

One tale that has been told is the Crimson's 20-36 crunch over Northeastern (ranked third in New England).

What do the two teams have that UMass doesn't?

Harvard has sophomore Rick Rogas, a flashy speedster out of Albuquerque, New Mexico, who has run the Franklin Park course a second slower than former UMass New England Champ Ron Wayne.

The Providence College has a sophomore standout in Tom Smith who has run number one for them in their first two meets.

For Coach Ken O'Brien these two men stand in the way of a one-two finish in the meet, but that is all that will prevent them from a win.

"We are in as good shape as any team we will meet this early in the season. We are in better shape than last year and I think our late opening could work to our advantage because the boys have been taking the workouts easy and this keeps injuries to a minimum and the anxieties low.

"Harvard has surprised me with their early season showing," O'Brien continued, "but they are always tough in the beginning. I thought Northeastern had a little more than they showed."

The top men, and again it will be a while before there is a Number One man, are sophomores Bill Gillan and Randy Thomas who have run the best practice overall.

Co-Captains Rick Barry and Doug O'Connell are in the top five who have been enjoying better than average pre-season workouts.

Coach O'Brien expects that the team who is able to break up the other two teams' top five men will come out of the race on top. The Minutemen have as good a chance as any to be that team.

The test is at hand as the toughest teams on the schedule come first, when UMass has had no previous meet experience.

It will be a test of guts and psych.

Remember that when you talk about the weather.

Harvard Postscript: Some Reactions

By EARLE BARROLL

From the halls of One Washington Mall, Whitmore and Boyden, the following comments on a UMass football upset over Harvard:

ROBERT C. WOOD, President: "It was just terrific...And no accident! Harvard was obviously outclassed."

RANDOLPH BROMERY, Chancellor: "It was no fluke. A good solid win. We outplayed them and just beat them, period.

"It was a good win for the morale of the team and I'm hoping that the campus will respond to the team and come out and support them at the Stadium where attendance has been down in recent years.

"The win also had a big effect on the Alumni. After the game there was a very large gathering of UMass Alumni at a cocktail party."

"I'm very happy first of all for coach Dick MacPherson and then his team."

DAVID BISCHOFF, Associate Provost and Dean of the School of Physical Education: "You hope that this is the type of thing that universities and student enthusiasm are made out of.

"Those people who have thought of us as being a bush league operation in the foothills of the Berkshires were proved wrong."

"I'm hoping that this will have a positive effect on the student's enthusiasm for their university of which athletics is a part."

"This win means a lot to the coaches, the players and the people who are closely involved with the team...It also means an awful lot to the students who look at the University as the kind of place they'd like it to be."

FRANK McINERNEY, Director of Athletics: "First of all I want to preface my comments in saying that I'm looking at this event in the perspective of an Alumnus of this University ('54) and a long time Western-Mass. resident who has a sense of what it was like to be an "Aggie".

"As an alumnus I'm proud of the new buildings and the rising education of this school, but these are intangibles. Symbolically it takes events to communicate to people.

"What I saw Saturday at Harvard Stadium was a well drilled team that went out and performed beautifully. They showed the calibre of kid they were when they picked themselves up after Harvard's first play (76 yard td run) and went on to dominate the game.

"This performance communicated to the people of Boston."

"After the game I saw the UMass Alumni standing it seemed a foot taller because of this win. It was an enormous ego trip and hopefully it got back to the University."

"It's so easy today to find something wrong with just about everything we do. But this was a very positive kind of thing to happen to this school, for athletes and non-athletes."

"These guys are to be commended. They took us up a step on the ladder in the view of the Boston people. Saturday was a very big day in the onward climb of UMass and we stand higher because of these guys."

Sox Dumped, 4-1 Backs Against Wall

DETROIT (AP) - Mickey Lolich struck out 15 batters while Aurelio Rodriguez drove in three runs with a homer and a pair of singles as the Detroit Tigers trimmed the Boston Red Sox 4-1 Monday night in the opener of a three-game series that will determine baseball's American League East champion.

A split of the final two games Tuesday night and Wednesday would give Detroit the title and advance the Tigers to the AL playoffs against West Champion Oakland beginning Saturday. Boston must sweep the two remaining games to win the division.

Lolich, whose previous high this season was 11 strikeouts, allowed just six hits before a screaming Tiger Stadium crowd of 51,518.

The fans began roaring early as Lolich, 22-14, struck out Reggie Smith and Rico Petrocelli with two runners on base in the first inning. In the bottom of the inning, Al Kaline homered off rookie John Curtis, 11-8, his 10th of the season and third in three days.

Kaline has a 10-game hitting streak, going 20-for-40 to raise his average to .319 in his 20th season.

Rodriguez' homer, his second in two games, came in the fifth. Then in the sixth, Kaline opened with a single, moved up on Duke Sims' sacrifice and scored on Rodriguez' single.

The Tigers picked up their final run in the eighth when Kaline opened with his third hit, a single. Sims bunted, but when catcher Carlton Fisk threw wildly, Kaline reached third and Sims first on the error. Reliever Bob Veale got the next two outs but Rodriguez delivered another single against Bob Bolin for the Tigers' wrapup run.

Boston scored its run in the third, but the Red Sox were deprived of a bigger inning when Luis Aparicio fell down rounding third base. Tommy Harper had singled and taken third on Aparicio's single, before scoring on a 420-foot double by Carl Yastrzemski.

On Yaz' hit, Aparicio slipped rounding third and had to hustle back, only to find Yastrzemski a couple of feet from third. Yaz was subsequently tagged out and Smith ended the threat by taking a third strike.

Judge Says Erving Must Play For ABA

NEW YORK (AP) - A federal judge barred Julius Erving Monday from playing for any team other than the American Basketball Association's Virginia Squires.

Erving, who jumped to Atlanta of the rival National Basketball Association after his rookie season last year, has been playing with the Hawks in preseason games. And on Monday, NBA Commissioner Walter Kennedy fined the Hawks another $25,000 for using him.

When Erving left the Squires last season, the ABA team filed suit to prevent him from playing anywhere else. In U.S. District Court in Brooklyn, N.Y., Monday, Judge Edward R. Neaher ruled in the Squires' favor, issuing a preliminary injunction to bar Erving from playing with any team but Virginia.

The Erving case became even more complicated after he jumped to Atlanta when the Milwaukee Bucks drafted him one day before the Hawks signed him last April.

Kennedy ruled the 6-foot-6 star rightfully belonged to the Bucks and prohibited Atlanta from using him.

On Sept. 23 and 24, however, the Hawks used him in games against Kentucky of the ABA and, last Monday, Kennedy fined the Hawks $25,000 for disobeying his directive.

Yanks Lose

NEW YORK (AP) - Lefthander Ken Brett fired a sixhitter and the Milwaukee Brewers busted an eighth inning tie with three runs and defeated the New York Yankees 6-1 in American League baseball Monday night.

The loss dropped the Yankees into fourth place in the East Division, one-half game behind idle Baltimore.

A Day For MacPherson

IVY TOWER, CAMBRIDGE, MASS.— The Harvard Yard was full with tailgaters from years gone by. The Crimson Band had pompous pre-game smiles. The ageless stadium adorned with the ivy that covered its historic tradition, stood motionless as the Crimson and the newly-named Minutemen took the field in what historians will say was the finest hour in the new era of UMass football.

Yes, the young rebels from Amherst stuck it to the Eastern traditionalists in a form and fashion that kept the Ivies in awe and disbelief. But better yet the so-called "Sleeping Giant from the Berkshires" has proven to our neighbors at the other end of the pike that the colonials are back after ten years of waiting. This could be the year the Eagles sweat, but we'll take them one at a time and now is the time to savor the slapping of the Johns' and the scaling of the Ivy Tower.

Sure the Johns' were stunned. But there were reasons why the stadium lay motionless for the last half hour of Saturday's spectacle. And although they were a treat, and Peil, Paul and my man Steve were outspoken against the Johns' all afternoon, the day belonged to MacPherson.

When Mac led his chargers into the lion's den Saturday afternoon you could just sense that we were ready. One of the chief's first duties was to shake Marie Romanus' hand (captain of the cheerleaders), and thank her for being with him.

He strutted slowly between his men patting them and cautioning them against fear. He somehow reinforced within the minds of his squad just how important it was for us to be here in the backyard of the Ivies and just what a courageous effort on their part might mean to the rest of the University of Massachusetts.

Yes, the man is humble and instead of gloating over his triumph with the Boston Press (whom we haven't seen in a while), he shared this moment of ecstacy with the students. At a press conference following the game, Mac said nothing of his coaching gem, thanked the Holy Lord above, called Joe Restic a gentleman, praised everyone he could find, but the students took preference. This is the MacPherson Way. Get used to it gang because you're going to love his style and if the chance comes your way you're going to love the man who has brought respectability back to UMass football.

"This is a win I want to share with the whole campus. It's been a great day for UMass football, but also for any student of this University." Mac went on, "I want these men to be respected by the student body and I want the students to grow right alongside our young men. This was a day that by all means everyone on campus can share. Our young men are growing and there's more to come."

There's just too much love in the MacPherson camp for the Minutemen to be unsuccessful. The coaching staff is so close. The players have exuded so much admiration for the man that it almost makes them feel that they'd be letting him down by defeat. UMass football is an emotional, happy contingency, and Harvard ran up against not only the talent and experience of the Metallo's and Pennington's, but the Johns' met Mac's family, and they were humbled and belittled at the feet of the Almight MacPherson.

Did you get a chance to see the man on the sidelines? He was a sight. You'd swear that Mac was the captain of the cheerleaders. He was on the field more than off. He sprinted from side to side encouraging his mates and administering to the coaching staff. When Tom Bradshaw recovered that key fumble, sealing victory, Mac leaped at full extension with arms raised in ecstasy. When Walt Parker caught that key touchdown pass from Peil, I thought the man would dent the Boston skyline.

And when the long awaited seconds choked whatever life the Crimson had and the Johns' headed for the exits, the clouds blackened the Harvard Yard, and his duty had been done, Mac wiped his brow, and listened as the cheerleaders and Revelers saluted their king with the chant, "Here's to Mac."

A slow tear could barely be seen on the side of his tarnished contenance.

Mac showed himself to us with his performance against the Johns'. He wants to take UMass football to the people. Not only did he prove he was an excellent coach (Peil's preparation to read the defense, running against the wind and throwing with, punting on fourth and six inches from the John 40, Palau's coffin corner, etc.), but Mac wanted to share this one with us. And this Wednesday the man will meet with you and tell you why he so desperately wants you with him. (The UMass-Harvard game film will be shown, full length in color on Wednesday night n a place to be determined by tomorrow.)

How many football coaches do you know that ask the visiting Maine cheerleaders if everything is OK, or jump and scream in jubilant tones with the players, or offer the most momentous win in the school's history to the students at Massachusetts. Yes, Mac loves us. How many UMass coaches have been willing to take the time and come out and meet the students? Well, Mac has taken the time and believe me, it will be well worth your time and your effort to meet this man. Not only as a coach, but a human being.

In the UMass locker room after the game, all hell broke loose but the best was yet to come. There to share the moment that may never be relived was Chancellor Randolph Bromery, Dean David Bischoff, Athletic Director Frank McInerney, and Edward Lashamn, Vice President of the University. Figure it out for yourself. these men were impressed, it meant more than words for UMass football to see these men there.

Round 2 Of Budget Battle Begins Today

By ROBERT MEDEIROS

The budget battle over state money for UMass will resume today when the University trustees reconsider here their previously submitted $98 million budget.

But, today's battle is expected only to set the stage for future confrontations between the UMass administration and Gov. Francis W. Sargent's office.

An informed source says the trustees will not make any cuts from the fiscal 1974 budget, while a Sargent spokesman says the trustees' inaction on the budget would represent only a "show of force."

The trustees accepted the budget at their Aug. 29 meeting in Boston and voted to subject the budget to future "refinement and reduction." The action came after Sargent asked his fellow trustees to exercise utmost care in reviewing their request and making it reflect economies.

UMass based its request for a $26 million increase over this year's appropriation on the opening of the new campus at Columbia Point, the move into the Basic and Clinical Science Building and steam plant at the UMass Worcester campus and the first graduating class of the medical school.

The University is planning also for a 7 per cent jump in enrollment at its three campuses: 860 additional students at Amherst, 1,000 at Boston and 40 at Worcester.

The spokesman said that if the trustees refuse to make the necessary cuts today, the cuts will be made anyway, by people outside of the University.

"Everybody knows the budget is going to be cut, it's only a question of how much and who is to do the cutting," he said.

State Educational Affairs Secretary Joseph M. Cronin, who is expected to attend today's meeting, asked trustee chairman Joseph P. Healey in a letter to reconsider the budget.

The spokesman said it was "Secretary Cronin's idea that the trustees should be making the cuts and not people outside the University."

However, UMass President Robert C. Wood said anyone who "suggests that the trustees take on the job of the budget director of the Commonwealth and make those kind of judgements is being irresponsible."

"The trustees have the responsibility to see that the amount requested in terms of the University is a responsible request and that it represents a good turn of the dollar in terms of higher education," he said.

Wood added that the $98 million figure represented a cut of $6.6 million from the requests of the three campuses.

Both Cronin and Sargent have pointed to recommendations of the Carnegie Commission on Higher Education for use as guidelines in making the '74 budget.

In fact, Sargent told the trustees that they should take a good look at some of the recommendations of the commission, because his education and budget chiefs would be using them as major criteria in evaluating that budget.

Commission Chairman Clark Kerr stated in a Boston Globe article that the governor could be wrong in applying certain recommendations of the report.

He warned that the development of public higher education in Massachusetts will be "stunted" if the development of UMass is "impeded by too stringent budgets."

Sargent's spokesman said the "governor's concern is not explicitly with UMass. It is with the state's total higher education budget."

He said UMass became the first state-funded agency to publicly release its requested budget, and it came at a time when the public and legislators are demanding lower taxes.

The governor, his aide said, had no other choice but to make a stand against the requested $26 million increase.

Athletic Council Still Issue

By A.J. BASTARACHE

Last year, controversy and, reportedly, a storm of hard feelings raged when then Student Senate President Lee Sandwen and his followers worked to accrue a stronger voice for the student body concerning the spending of the Athletic Fees (which every student must pay before being allowed to register). Although all parties concerned agreed from the beginning of the Fall Semester that a heavier student representation was needed, disagreements over the exact proportion of students to faculty/alumni kept the issue alive and disputed throughout the '71-'72 academic year.

This year, as a result of the final Faculty Senate vote on the matter, the Athletic Council will consist of 8 faculty members and 7 students.

Prof. George Richardson, Chairman of the Athletic Council, said that five of the non-student members are faculty or staff appointed by the Faculty Senate Committee on Committees; and three are alumni, who also must be faculty or staff, appointed by the Associate Alumni. Prof. Richardson comments that he is pleased with the 8-7 compromise, although it is a compromise.

Larry Ladd, who is now the president of the Student Government Association, is not pleased with the compromise. Ladd says, "I thought the whole issue was control over the athletic fee,—the athletic budget. We still don't have control over the athletic budget." Ladd says that he would prefer to have a financial committee composed solely of students to be within the Athletic Council.

Ladd spoke unhesitatingly about the Council's potential: "The Athletic Council has no formal power; no organization on campus has formal power, but there is informal power." Ladd says that previously this "informal" power was vested in a "close-knit group of old war buddies", predicted that "there's no way it'll be a private club again."

Mr. Frank McInerney, brand-new Athletic Director here at UMass, also responded to the question of the Council's power: "My understanding is that the Athletic Council is purely advisory." McInerney says there is no way of knowing how strong the student influence will be, "You can't predict the motivation and the issues which will appear. If the students on the council mesh, they can form a bloc." He commented that seven students form a substantial number to be sitting on the board.

The personality, perspective and drive of each student who will be seated on the council therefore seems to bear heavily on how well the student body will be heard concerning the direction of the athletic program. However, several voices are questioning the quality of the candidates who have been before the screening board.

Larry Ladd says most of the candidates were "jocks". His Executive Assistant Neil Kirstein headed the screening board and commented, "Everyone who showed had vested interests—like hockey rinks, going 'big-time', etc. We were looking for a broad spectrum." Kent Best, one of the candidates, agreed that for the most part only athletic interests seemed to be represented.

Even the screening board itself seemed to reflect a lack of interest in the Athletic Council. Of those invited, only Kirstein and Prof. Richardson appeared. Al Keyes was to represent the Third World Alliance on the board, and Roy Perdue was the scheduled Area President. A Student Senator had been selected to participate in the screening, but the senator appeared as a candidate rather than a screener.

Ladd plans to submit the names of the candidates to the Student Senate for approval tonight. Until the students are selected, and start working on the Council, there will be no way to judge whether or not last year's controversy served any greater purpose than to fill the pages of some issues of the Collegian.

SW Political Debate

By AVIS YUNI

A two hour political debate sponsored by Project 10 and the Southwest Director's office was held last night in the Hampden Dining Commons between representative members of the Democratic, Republican, and Socialist Workers' Party.

Southwest Director John Hunt moderated the six member panel consisting of the three representatives - Don Guewitz, U.S. Senate candidate of the Socialist Workers Party, Dale Read, the youngest member of the Republican State Committee and an official of the State Health Department, and David Strohm, State Student Coordinator for McGovern - three students - Kelly Hirman (for Linda Jeness), Don Glickstein (for McGovern), and Matt Tackeff (for Nixon).

The debate began with each representative making a ten minute statement of his nominee's goals and ideals, and contrasting them with those of the other candidates.

Gurewitz, the first to speak, feels that his candidate, Linda Jeness, presents "a genuine radical alternative on the ballot in November." He feels that his party, the Socialist Workers Party, is the one for those who are fed up with the Republican and Democratic Parties. Saying the other two can't really speak for the majority of the workers, he's not only for breaking with them, but with the whole system and replacing it with socialism.

Nixon's representative, Dale Read, began by saying that "under Richard Nixon we have moved from an era of confrontation to an era of negotiation." Read said he was talking of the fact that for the first time, representatives of major nations of the world have met and come to a major detant.

Discussing Vietnam, he says that Nixon has cut the war costs by two thirds since he's been in office and ended American ground combat, only advisors are there now. He stated that "Richard Nixon never made the statement 'I have a secret plan to end the Vietnam War.'" Nixon's plan isn't secret, it's very clear. With complete cease fire, release of all POW's and elections in Vietnam under the supervision of all the parties there, we will get out.

The McGovern representative, David Strohm, felt that his job at this debate was to convince the students that they should get involved. Gurewitz had talked of McGovern's betrayal of the gay, women's, black, and anti-war caucases at the Democratic convention. Strohm replied to this by saying that while betrayal can mean many different things, in this election it means to abstain from electoral politics.

He went on to say that McGovern doesn't feel that these issues (the gay, women, etc.) are in the scope of national politics. They are not issues to be dealt with in a campaign. The Vietnamese War, the economy, these are the issues of the election, not the others.

A short break followed these ten minute speeches, and the representatives answered questions directed at them by the three student panelists. The answers were limited to three minutes and each got a chance to make a comment on the question. Questions were asked concerning Nixon and his feelings on and record concerning civil liberties, U.S. action to the Soviet objectives in the Middle East, abortion and women's rights, and the position of each candidate on when the war shall be ended and how.

Questions from members of the audience in the dining commons were accepted next, on things such as Nixon's plans for the unemployed.

WMPIRG Town Meeting

Student organizers of the Western Mass. Public Interest Research Group (WMPIRG) have announced that a "town meeting" for undergraduate students to establish a planning board here at the University will be held tomorrow at 7:30 in the Commonwealth Room of the Student Union.

According to the WMPIRG By-Laws (WMPIRG is a non-profit corporation), students at each of the participating schools (Mt. Holyoke, Hampshire, Williams, and Springfield Colleges, as well as the University) must organize a local planning board. This board's primary functions will include: developing research projects, recruiting and organizing students, and most importantly, electing representatives to serve on the WMPIRG Board of Directors.

The Board of Directors will formulate policy, direct the hired professional staff, encourage students at other institutions to organize, and allocate other resources. The University is entitled to fill four slots on the Board and each of the other four schools are allotted one seat each.

Up to this point affairs have been handled by student volunteers who had expressed an interest in establishing and supporting WMPIRG at the University.

Tomorrow evening's meeting will be open to all in the University community and chaired by a neutral party. Undergraduate students who wish to have a voice in the operation and future of WMPIRG are encouraged to attend and to run for any of the positions that will be determined that evening.

Third World Alliance Meets Tonight

Tonight, at 8:00 PM in SBA (School of Business Administration) 120 the Third World Alliance will be holding it's first meeting of the semester. All Third World students on campus are urged to attend the meeting, where problems relating to academic life will be examined.

A spokesman for the Alliance released the following statement yesterday in conjunction with the meeting: "It is imperitive that all newly elected Third World student senators and Third World students who will be involved in University politics at all levels be at this meeting.

"We have many issues which lay unresolved because of last semester's termination, (admissions, representations of minority students in student government and the Athletic Dept.) and many new problems which are now developing (Fine Arts Council and DVP).

"It is to our advantage to start dealing now so that the weight shifters (administrators, faculty and various committees) won't dare pile no heavy stuff on us in the coming days."

"On campus students come out of the dorms, off-campus students come out of the town houses. There's a lot of work to be done for you, which only you can do."

English Department Defends Rhetoric

By ARNOLD NEWBERGER

Faculty supporters of the Rhetoric Requirement informed the Academic Affairs Committee last night of "the line they will take in front of the Faculty Senate" when they try to convince the Senate of the requirement's validity.

The meeting came after the release of an Academic Affairs report which called for the abolition of the Rhetoric Requirement.

English Department Head Joseph Frank told the weekly meeting that the requirement is justified for two "ideological" reasons.

"The requirement is justified because we are living in an atmosphere of extreme verbal pollution-in an age of Nixonism-when we kill North Vietnamese women and children and call it protective reaction and because every mature individual must be able to express himself."

Frank admitted that there were problems with the program. A major problem is that of screening potential teaching assistants he said. Incidents of some teaching assistants not requiring work and sometimes not coming to class were mentioned by Frank, but he added that "there would be closer supervision of the teaching assistants in the future and that better screening processes were being developed."

English professor Walker Gibson who has been involved in the Rhetoric program since its beginning in 1969, told the meeting that the Rhetoric Program does not focus on "remedial skills" only.

"The program is focused on teaching people to be knowledgable consumers of language, not just producers. So that when the government changes the name of the War Department to Defense Department students should know what is taking place."

Student committee members countered these arguments by saying that while there is a need for the Rhetoric Program, the requirement aspect made the program less effective. These sentiments were echoed by College of Arts and Sciences Dean Jeremiah Allen.

"The main problem of the program is a logistical one. If the requirement went away then perhaps the main problems would go away as well. As the number of sections decreased then perhaps the TA load would go down."

No action was taken at the meeting — it was as Professor Mal Sellers termed it, "a social evening only".

Sellers is the acting director of the Rhetoric Program and he argued that his program was not being given a fair chance.

"The Rhetoric Program was started two years ago as an experiment and many people around the country are watching the UMass Rhetoric Program to see if it works. If it is abolished here after only two years it will have an affect around the country."

He added that while he agrees with the program's critics that better screening procedures and more courses are needed, "the program is not being given the chance."

Committee Chairman Nick Apostola said after the meeting that the program had in fact been given the chance. "When the program began in 1969 its directors were given a free hand to make the program work. It wasn't until students began calling for the abolition of the requirement last year that reform began."

The committee's recommendations to abolish the Rhetoric Requirement will be brought before the Student Senate at this weeks session. Passage by the Senate seems assured but Faculty Senate action is not expected for some time.

So, a lot of what's happening is wrong.

That's what Kathy Rick, Todd Baumgardt, "Tennessee Woodall," Judy Moroney and Ken French like to talk about.

They've served with Peace Corps and VISTA and are on campus today in the Center from 9:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m.

Dorm Conditions Protested

By STEVE TRIPOLI

About thirty students from Sylvan and Orchard Hill Areas, incensed over a cutback in janitorial service that they claim has left their dorms in an "intolerable" state of filth, brought their case before the Rents and Fees Committee of the Student Senate last night.

The students' gripes center around two specific areas. In Sylvan, the chief problem is the cleaning of bathrooms, lack of which has, according to Sylvan Area President Mickey Harris, left a "thin layer of slime" on shower floors and a general unhygienic condition throughout. On the Hill the chief problem is the removal of trash, especially on weekends. Students there claim that the pile of trash and garbage that builds up is unhealthy, with an accompanying terrible odor. There is also the problem in both areas of corridors and rugs (in Sylvan) not being cleaned.

Rents and Fees Chairman Mike Gregory told the students that the reason for the poor service is that when the possibility of a rent hike came up last spring the committee decided on the janitorial cutback as an alternative to a rent increase in Sylvan and an alternative to an increase larger than the one levied on residents of the Hill.

Chuck Hampton of the Housing Office informed the Sylvan people that there was a possibility of getting $5,000 for use in alleviating the problem there due to the fact that there is more occupancy than anticipated in the area. Some of the possibilities for use of the money are the buying of equipment such as vacuum cleaners for the cleaning of rugs, plastic bags for trash disposal, or the hiring of another janitor for the remainder of the fiscal year.

At the moment, orders have gone out for Physical Plant Director George Norton to activate two more janitors for the East Area of Campus. It is not yet certain where they will go, but East Area custodial Supervisor Bob Allen indicated that Sylvan would probably be the first area to get a janitor, with Orchard Hill next if two are available. If both areas get a janitor, the janitor would act as a "floater", going from dorm to dorm in the area where needed.

Another option that the students at the meeting seemed to favor was that of a small rent hike next semester to be used for the hiring of a janitor or janitors. For the time being, the students are going to go back to their areas and try to get some sort of consensus opinion on what to do. This will be reported to Rents and Fees, and the Committee will make recommendations to Vice Chancellor for Administrative Services Thomas Campion, who has already indicated a willingness to deal with the situation as best as possible.

Gregory stressed that he would be happy to have students from the areas on the committee to help in solving these problems. Harris indicated that he will look into the possibility of getting someone from Sylvan to sit on the committee so that Sylvan's interests will be represented if such a situation should arise again, with the other areas hopefully doing the same.

Absentee Voting in Campus Center

By JEFFREY LEVIN

Beginning today, October 4, the University and State Communications Council (USCC) will have a table set up on the concourse level of the Campus Center to facilitate students wishing to vote by absentee ballot in the November 7, election. Students merely have to pick up a post-paid card from the table, address it and mail it.

The USCC is an informational resource group, funded by the Student Senate, helping to represent students viewpoints in state government.

The Council serves UMass students in a variety of ways. It has a legislative library of bills that have been filed in the Massachusetts state legislature. It also has a Legislative Research Council, which allows students work with a state legislator on a bill and receive academic credit.

In the past, the USCC has been instrumental in the fight against tuition increases. Also, as a result of research done by the Council, the legislation that added a student trustee to the UMass Board of Trustees was formulated.

In the spring of 1971, the USCC brought the Education Committee of the state legislature here to the School of Education for a series of workshops. The workshops, which covered topics such as trends in education were viewed favorably by those legislators who participated.

The Council is in the process of planning a number of programs for this year. In about three weeks, it will sponsor a debate featuring the candidates for state representative from Amherst. According to Dennis Arouca, Vice-Chairman of the USCC, a large turnout will be anticipated because of the importance of the state representative in Boston to students at UMass.

A newsletter is published by the Council which contains a synopsis of what students are doing and where their interests are. It is sent to the trustees, and state administrators who deal with the University.

The organization also will publish a series of articles in the COLLEGIAN, to explain questions, such as that concerning the graduated income tax, which will appear on the November ballot.

According to Arouca, an attempt will be made to bring men like Corrections Commissioner John Boone, Secretary of Human Services Peter Goldmark, and Senatorial candidate John Droney here to speak on issues that students are concerned with.

The USCC is open for membership to all students, and welcomes any new ideas about students' viewpoints. The group has an office located in room 123 of the Campus Center, the telephone number is 5-0217.

Open Rehearsal of Beaux Arts Trio

The Beaux Arts Trio will hold an open rehearsal today, in Bowker Auditorium at 4:30 P.M. This event is open to the public without charge and is part of the Fine Arts Council's on-going series of informal encounters with artists appearing at the University.

The Beaux Arts Trio is appearing in the First Chamber Music Series event of the series. At that time the Trio will perform works by Mozart, Charles Ives and Beethoven and it is assumed that they will work on this repertoire during their open rehearsal also.

Today's open rehearsal will provide students and others with an opportunity to meet the artists off the concert platform in a relaxed, informal atmosphere. There will be time alloted for questions and answers as well as some music-in-the making.

Denmark Votes To Join Common Market

BRUSSELS (AP) — Denmark's 2-1 vote to join the Common Market assured the appearance Jan. 1 of a strong new community of nine nations with ambitions to take an important role in world affairs alongside the United States, the Soviet Union and China.

The decision restored confidence to leaders of the organization, which had been discouraged by Norway's negative vote last week.

Sicco Mansholt, head of the community's executive commission, said Tuesday he hopes that not only Norway but Sweden, Switzerland and Spain will eventually join.

He made it clear to British Labor party leaders that they would have a tough job pulling Britain out of the market to negotiate a better treaty. Nine countries have ratified the treaty, he pointed out. The Labor party has criticized terms of the treaty signed by the ruling Conservative party and ratified by Parliament.

So far the Common Market has concerned itself mostly with setting up a customs union and a joint farm policy. Mansholt urged more attention to such matters as ending border checks by men in uniform at frontiers within the Common Market, and arranging for university students to earn credits in their own countries for courses taken in other Common Market countries.

The original Common Market consisted of France, Italy, West Germany, Holland, Belgium and Luxembourg. They will be joined Jan. 1 by Britain, Ireland and Denmark.

In Denmark the first effects of the vote showed in the relief and satisfaction of government and businessmen. The discount rate was dropped to 7 per cent from 8 per cent. Foreign currency trading resumed. Stocks soared on the Copenhagen exchange in the biggest spurt since the end of World War II.

Prime Minister Jens Otto Krag, a strong supporter of membership in the Common Market, resigned after the referendum in a surprise move. Krag said it was a personal decision.

A summit meeting of Common Market representatives, will be held in Paris Oct. 19 and 20. The main action coming from the meeting probably will be to set up a European monetary fund to help bring the values of the member countries' currencies closer together, and to support any of the currencies in trouble.

China Raps US-Soviet Arms Agreement

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP) — China ridiculed on Tuesday the U.S.-Soviet arms agreement and said it marked "the beginning of a new stage in the...nuclear arms race."

The Chinese deputy foreign minister, Chiao Kuan-hua, made the charge in the United Nations within hours of the Washington ceremony in which President Nixon and Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko of the Soviet Union put the accords formally into force.

It was the first Chinese policy speech to the general Assembly since Peking replaced Taiwan last year.

"The world is at the crossroads," Chiao declared, "and so is the United Nations. If the United Nations is to regain its prestige and play its due role, it must...free itself from the manipulation and control by the big powers."

The White House ceremony marked the final steps on a treaty limiting defensive weapons. The formal treaty followed an executive accord signed by Nixon and Soviet leaders in their Moscow summit last May.

"These agreements," said Chiao, "only stipulate some limitation on the quantity of certain categories of nuclear weapons in the possession of the Soviet Union and the United States, but impose no limitation at all on their quality. Nor do they mention a single word about the destruction of nuclear weapons.

"This can by no means be regarded as a step towards nuclear disarmament."

"On the contrary, this marks the beginning of a new stage in the Soviet-U.S. nuclear arms race," Chiao said.

"Before the ink on the agreements had dried, the one hastened to test new-type nuclear weapons and the other expressed its intention to make a big increase immediately in its military expenditure. How can this be described as reducing the threat of a nuclear war? We hold that no fond illusion should be cherished about these agreements."

Terrorists Attack US Base In Thailand

SAIGON (AP) — Terrorists launched another attack on a U.S. air base in Thailand as reports said Tuesday that Thai-based aircraft had switched from targets in North Vietnam to head off an enemy buildup in Laos.

Informants in Saigon reported that the swing-wing F111 fighter-bombers, which are based in Thailand, had been pulled out of combat after the loss last Thursday of one of the lanes in North Vietnam. U.S. Command spokesman refused to confirm or deny the report of the pullback of the F111s.

In Washington the Pentagon said the jets would continue in combat.

The North Vietnamese said they shot down one F111 on Thursday, the first day of their return to combat in Indochina since 1968. But the Pentagon said it was jnable to explain the plane's disappearance.

In Bangkok, Thai officials reported that security forces sweeping the area around Udorn air base killed two terrorists involved in Monday night's raid on the U.S. Air Force headquarters base in northeast Thailand.

One of the attackers and a Thai guard were killed in the initial attack which took place around midnight when seven sappers broke into the base complex.

Two American and two Thai security guards were wounded in the firefight that followed.

Thai sources said one of the attackers was captured. He was said to be a Meo hill tribesman, one of a group of nomadic mountain people who have been in revolt against the central government for several years.

The attack on Udorn, 300 miles northeast of Bangkok was the second assault on U.S. Air Force installations in 24 hours. The first was a mortar bombardment of the fighter-bomber base at Ubon Sunday night.

There were no casualties in the Ubon attack, which was the first base in Thailand ever shelled by mortar fire.

The eight U.S. bases in Thailand, used for the bombing campaigns in North Vietnam, South Vietnam and Laos, have been placed on full alert.

As American forces have been withdrawn from South Vietnam, the U.S. Air Force in Thailand has expanded. Recent increases have brought U.S. strength at eight major bases in Thailand to some 48,000 men and hundreds of war planes.

The Air Force announced that Thai-based U.S. fighter-bombers attacked two North Vietnamese air fields and military barracks complexes along the Laos border west of Hanoi.

Military sources said there has been a major increase of troops and supplies in the border region preparatory to the dry season due to begin in Laos this month.

In Brief

Aircraft Sabotage Treaties

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate ratified Tuesday an international treaty providing for worldwide "severe penalties" for sabotage and other illegal acts jeopardizing the safety of civil aircraft.

It provides for arrest and prosecution or extradition in any signatory nation for violence aboard aircraft in flight, planting bombs, sabotage to aircraft or navigational equipment, and communication of false information endangering aircraft in flight.

Parochial Students Get Tax Credit

WASHINGTON (AP) — Legislation to provide tax credits against tuition paid by parents of children in parochial and other non-public schools was approved Tuesday by the House Ways and Means Committee.

The bill would grant a credit against income taxes for half such tuition, up to a maximum of $400 tuition for each child, a limit of $200 credit.

This would not be a tax deduction but the amount of taxes forgiven.

POW Gets Back Pay

(AP) — Lt. Mark Gartley met Tuesday with a Navy finance official to discuss the back pay he will receive for the four years he spent as a prisoner of war in North Vietnam.

Senate Passes Bill For Aged

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Senate Tuesday passed, 90 to 0, a bill to strengthen and expand government programs to aid senior citizens.

The Administration on Aging, created in 1965 by the Older Americans Act, would be reorganized within the Health, Education and Welfare Department in an effort to give it greater standing and influence.

The bill also would establish a bipartisan Older Americans Advocacy Commission whose six members would act as advocates for the aging throughout the government, evaluate existing programs, and make policy recommendations.

The commission members, serving on a part-time basis, would be independent of any government department and employ their own staff.

The bill will go to conference with the House whose bill does not vary in major points from that of the Senate.

U.S. Navy cruiser Newport News fires her eight-inch guns earlier this year off the coast of North Vietnam. Early Sunday, Saigon time, an explosion in one of the eight-inch gun turrets killed 19 sailors and injured 10 others. The Newport News is now enroute to Subic Bay Base in the Philippines for repairs. V.C. Claim Responsibility For Newport News Explosion

ABOARD THE USS NEWPORT NEWS (AP) — "Fire in turret two! Fire in turret two!"

That was the call that rang out across this ship - the world's largest gun cruiser - early last Sunday off Vietnam.

The fire, preceded by an explosion, apparently was caused by a shell that went off in one of the ship's three triple-mount guns during a firing mission.

When the fire was out, 19 sailors were dead and 37 others injured, 7 of them seriously. Most of the injuries and possibly three of the deaths were caused by smoke inhalation.

Capt. Walter F. Zartman, skipper of the 21,000-ton ship, said dense, black smoke enveloped the entire forward section of the ship. Turret two is just forward of the bridge.

Chief Hull Technician Robert Holloway, 34, was one of the first men to reach the turret. The Portsmouth, Va., native was closely followed by Hull Technician 3. C. Bill Care of Lebanon, Pa.

"I was in my rack reading a letter from my wife when I heard a noise that sounded unusual," Holloway recounted Tuesday after the ship reached the Philippines. "It was sometime between 12:30 and 1 in the morning.

"My first reaction was that we had hit a mine. When I heard the call to general quarters, I grabbed my clothes and ran." Care, 22, was on watch on the after deck when the explosion occurred.

Holloway reached the turret's right door first. "I felt it and it was hot. Then we found we couldn't get it open. I forget what we used, a wrench or something."

Care said he could only see a distance of "5 or 10 inches. Then I saw two bodies just inside the door. Once we got them out we knew they were dead."

He said it is not known yet why the shell exploded in the barrel.

In a broadcast on Liberation radio, the Viet Cong claimed responsibility for the blast. The broadcast said "liberation forces in Quang Tri attacked a U.S. cruiser of Newport News size that was indiscriminantly shelling Quang Tri City. This cruiser was severely damaged with three big guns destroyed and dozens of Americans killed or wounded."

Thai Bases Attacked

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Enemy forces have graduated to the use of mortars in attacking air bases in Thailand. This is a development the U.S. Air Force has dreaded.

Mortars were used for the first time in Sunday's attack on the Thai-U.S. base at Ubon. Four previous attacks on the bases, dating to 1968, were with small arms and satchel charges. These raids were poorly executed and easily driven off, so that for seven years the Thai bases have been a relatively trouble-free sanctuary for U.S. Air Force planes used in the Vietnam war.

The inroduction of mortars puts 48,000 American airmen and hundreds of fighter-bombers, B52s and assorted electronic-warfare planes within range of enemy guns for the first time in the war.

Although American officials said Sunday's 36-round barrage did no significant damage to Ubon, the prospect of damage and casualties in future attacks is real.

Udorn, Ubon, and Nakorn Phanon bases are particularly vulnerable. They are situated close to the Mekong River, which is a major highway for infiltration and supply from Laos.

Takhli, Korat and Utapao are farther away from the border but still could be vulnerable to accurate mortar fire.

All bases are situated in rough, thinly populated country that gives good cover to mortar teams. Although most aircraft are kept in revetments, well directed mortar fire could still cause havoc, as shown in raids on American air bases in South Vietnam over the years.

American counter-insurgency advisers to the Thai government anticipated that the Communists sometime would use heavier, longer range weapons. The puzzle was why they had not brought them to bear before. The generally accepted view was the insurgents in Thailand were not ready to use what U.S. officials call crew-served weapons.

"It takes a pretty sophisticated level of training to get the mortars in place without being detected, then fire them accurately enough to hit something," one senior official said.

The Thais insist that most attacks on the air bases have been performed by North Vietnamese. Americans describe the attackers as unidentified.

Nixon Rips Off Taxpayers

WASHINGTON (AP) - Replacement of the heating system at President Nixon's seaside residence in San Clemente, Calif., was paid for with taxpayers' money because the previous system was "in such a condition that it was a threat to the President's safety," a Secret Service spokesman said Tuesday.

The spokesman would not specify what was the matter with the previous system, or even what kind of system it was. He said he did not want it to appear the agency was favoring any particular type of heating system. The new system is electric.

Use of some $13,500 in public funds to replace the system was reported Tuesday by syndicated columnist Jack Anderson, who also said Secret Service officials told him it was replaced because of concern for the President's safety.

Autopsies on VD Victims End

WASHINGTON (AP)- Autopsy procedures connected with a controversial 40-year federal syphilis experiment in Alabama have quietly ended.

The action came several weeks ago when the pathologist who had been performing the autopsies refused to have anything further to do with the U.S. Public Health Service syphilis experiment, called the Tuskegee Study. Its existence was disclosed in July.

The cost of the autopsies and subsequent burial of participants in the Tuskegee Study has been underwritten for the past 40 years by the Milbank Memorial Fund, a philanthropic foundation with headquarters in New York.

Dr. Leroy E. Burney, president of the foundation and a former U.S. surgeon general said in an interview Tuesday he was notified several weeks ago that no further autopsies would be performed.

Dr. Donald Pirozzi, an official at the PHS' Center for Disease Control in Atlanta which supervises the experiment, confirmed that the autopsies have been permanently halted.

"We were notified that the pathologist who had been performing the autopsies at the Tuskegee Institute refused to do any more," Pirozzi said. "We go along with that. That's fine."

He said the PHS would make no effort to find another doctor to take the pathologist's place. Neither Burney nor Pirozzi identified the pathologist.

During the course of the Tuskegee Study, begun in 1932, more than 430 syphilitic black men from the Tuskegee, Ala., area never received treatment for their disease so that PHS doctors could determine through eventual autopsies what damage the untreated syphilis had done.

At least 28 of the men died as a direct result of untreated syphilis.

The Department of Health, Education and Welfare, the PHS parent agency, currently has the Tuskegee Study under investigation.

The Tuskegee Institute is a nearly all-black university on the outskirts of Tuskegee.

L. H. Foster, the school's president, said in an interview that the institute does not have an active role in the syphilis experiment, but has permitted use of its facilities for the autopsies and has acted as a fiscal agent for the Milbank Fund.

Boston Gives McG Big Greeting

BOSTON (AP)-Sen. George S. McGovern charged the Nixon administration Tuesday with being a "moral affront" to the nation and with trying to take the credit for legislation it originally opposed.

Addressing an overflow crowd at Boston's Post Office Square, the Democratic presidential nominee said the Nixon administration "is the biggest moral affront to the standards of our country of any other administration in the history of this nation."

Policemen at the rally said the crowd which filled the area and spilled into a half-dozen side streets. Later, Capt. Jeremiah Hagerty of the city's police department fixed the official crowd estimate at 60,000.

Regardless of the actual size of the crowd, newsmen who have covered the McGovern campaign agreed it was at least as large as the biggest previous crowd, and they said it was more vocal than any previous group.

"I want everyone in America to see this crowd on television today," McGovern said. Among those who also addressed the rally were former Sen. Eugene McCarthy of Minnesota and former House Speaker John W. McCormack of Boston.

If the war were laid aside, McGovern said, the central issue of the campaign is to "take government out of the hands of narrow, selfish people and restore it to the hands of the people."

He continued the theme of corruption within the administration, quoting a recent statement on nationwide television by his wife, Eleanor, that Nixon's was a "corrupt regime."

McGovern also charged that the administration now is trying to take credit for an increase in Social Security checks "implies that older people are indebted to Mr. Nixon for the added income," McGovern said. "The truth is that this administration fought this increase every step of the way."

When Nixon signed the bill on July 1, McGovern said, "he denounced it as 'fiscally irresponsible and inflationary.' But now he points to it with pride in his note to older people in today's mail.

Committee Rejects Watergate Probe

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House Banking Committee voted Tuesday against a proposed investigation of financial aspects of the break-in at the national Democratic headquarters.

The 20-15 vote dashed Democratic hopes for public hearings before the November election with such subpoenaed witnesses as former Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell, former Commerce Secretary Maurice H. Stans and other leaders of President Nixon's campaign organization.

Campaign '72

However, Rep. Henry S. Reuss, D-Wis., vowed he would try to get the committee to change its mind. He said he is counting on "the force of public opinion to bring some pressure" on members-Republican as well as Democratic-who refused to authorize the investigation.

All 14 Republican committee members present and 6 Democrats voted against the investigation.

Chairman Wright Patman, D-Tex., said, "This is just one inning in a battle to lay these facts before the American people...."

Seven men have been indicted on charges resulting from the June break-in and alleged electronic bugging of the Democrats' office at the Watergate complex in Washington. Four of them have had connections either with the White House or the Republican campaign organization, but top Republican leaders have said the break-in was done without their knowledge.

Opponents of the investigation, led by Reps. Garry Brown, R-Mich., and Robert G. Stephens, Jr., D-Ga., said Tuesday it would be impossible to conduct a public investigation without prejudicing the trial of seven men.

Reuss and others contended that the investigation would focus on such matters as the use of a Mexican bank to transfer campaign funds to one in Florida and the allegation that a campaign contribution influenced the speedy granting of a national bank charter. None of the indicted men, they said, was on the list of those to be subpoenaed.

Their trials and the trial of a civil suit brought by the Democratic National Committee will not be held until after the election.

The Grad 'Ziggerat' Is Into Phase II

By CINDY GONET

Will the university ever build its tower to the sky, its "ziggerat" to the heavens? The Planning Office at Munson is hoping to reach Cloud 9 in the construction of Phase 2 of the Graduate Research Center.

Mr. Jack Littlefield, director of the office, said projected Phase 2 of the Research Center will include two sister towers adjoining the 17-story building nearly completed.

Construction of Phase 1 was begun in May 1968 by general contractors D. O'Connell's Sons, Inc. The Phase 1 building complex consists of a computer wing, physical science library, chemistry, the first tower, and a service building. The departments housed include Chemistry, Biochemistry, and Polymer Science.

The 17-story pillar is primarily a lab building. The completion date is December 1972. This tower will be occupied by classes in the spring.

O'Connel's Sons was the low bidder for the complex at $18.8-million. Federal funds contributed were $3.5-million state aid donations met the remaining $15.3-million.

The planned completion of the two towers in Phase 2 will be January, 1975, Littlefield told MDC. He went on to say that the Center would most likely be the last major construction on campus.

O'Connell's Sons, who will also contract Phase 2, bid low at $11.5-million. All funds will come from state taxes. This phase will include additional physics labs, but mainly offices and classrooms. The area covered by the completed project will be 482,000 gross square feet.

Parking for the area has not been determined. The Parking Council has reviewed the situation and hopes to expand all areas to the periphery of campus.

Phasing in architecture is a relatively new concept. This procedure saves taxpayers money in that all utility connections are built into the primary phase of construction. When there is need of additional space, phases are added onto the major sites; thereby avoiding costly heating and pipe installation. The phasing process of architecture should allow the first part of the complex to look complete without additions.

The architects of both phases are Campbell, Aldrich & McNulty. These creators have also designed SBA and Whitmore Administration Building.

Corona Pleads Innocent To Mass Murders

FAIRFIELD, Calif. (AP) - The 25 murders Juan Corona is accused of were committed by a homosexual masochist playing the part of a woman and not Corona, his lawyer said today in opening defense arguments.

"Juan Corona is hopelessly heterosexual...and hopelessly in love with his wife," defense attorney Richard Hawk told a jury that leaned forward in its chairs to listen.

Corona will testify in his own defense, Hawk also revealed.

He said witnesses for the defense will testify Corona was at home during the five hours when one of the victims was murdered. This is the only time span that authorities have pinpointed for any of the 25 deaths.

Corona has pleaded innocent to the stabbing and hacking deaths of the 25 men whose bodies were dug from peach orchards north of Yuba City in the spring of 1971.

Major Dope Ring Busted

MIAMI (AP) — U.S. Customs agents said Tuesday they had broken a smuggling ring with the arrests of nine men and the confiscation of 617 pounds of marijuana.

Agents said the ring had conspired to smuggle 38,000 pounds of marijuana into the United States from Jamaica. They said the marijuana found its way to customers in Miami, New York and California.

The marijuana was confiscated Sunday, agents said, when they found it packed in 10 cylindrical containers in the back of a pickup truck which had collected the contraband from a Miami glass and mirror shop under surveillance by federal agents.

Agents said they believed the marijuana was smuggled into the Bahamas by aircraft and to Miami by boat.

Charged with conspiracy to smuggle marijuana were Gregory D. Ramos, 40; William D. Hambelton, 47; Robert L. Schultz, 26, and Robert Burns, all of Miami; Robert A. McDonald, 25, Miami Springs; John L. Kevin, 22, North Miami; Mansfield Sanders, 38, Dania, Fla.; Francis R. Stevenson, 35, Covina, Calif., and George H. Goulden, 55, New York City.

SW Janitor Cutbacks Viewed Negatively

By LINDA CRAVEN

Several Southwest Heads of Residence have expressed their negative views towards this year's cutbacks in janitorial services, citing weekend trash build-up as the largest problem.

In a series of interviews conducted this week in Southwest, Heads of Residence and students were asked questions concerning the recent cutback in the janitorial staff.

Martha Ball, Head of Residence at Emerson, said that she was not aware of the cutback to a great extent; however, she indicated that there was a very extensive pile up of trash over the weekends, as there is no janitorial service at that time.

Emerson realized a comparatively minor cutback, changing from four full time janitors to three and a half (one man spending half a day at Emerson and half a day in another dorm).

Ball said another reason that the cutback was not felt to a greater degree is that the janitors are a very dedicated group of people, apparently very concerned about the problem at hand.

Gwendolyn Clayborne, Melville's head of residence, sympathizes greatly with the janitors, realizing their increased workload. "The janitors don't like it" she said, and indicated that the janitors of Melville had no say in the rearrangement of their working hours.

Clayborne attributed this to the definite lack of communication between the janitors and their supervisors, and to the fact that janitors, being the lowest paid people in the UMass working force, get the least respect and consideration.

Along with Ball, Clayborne agreed weekend trash was the largest problem.

Patterson's head of residence, Dorothy Burke, says that she has received many complaints from students about the janitorial cutback. However, she indicated that the students of Patterson make an effort to pitch in and help with the work that the janitors now do not have time for.

She attributes to the fact that this is Pattersons first year as a coed dorm and that the students seem to take pride in their dorm, as it is "their own".

The dorm which has felt the cutback to the most extent is Washington Tower, their staff being cut from six to four janitors.

Peter Brown, Residence Director of Washington Lower, has received petitions from students on two floors demanding action. Brown said that the main problem is the maintenance of the bathrooms. "They're a pit," he said.

However, Brown indicated that the students do help greatly in picking up the public areas used by all of the students and that he himself will often vacuum the fifth floor lounge.

Brown cited that Washington Middle and Upper, not being coed as Lower is, extremely filthy, and there was a lack of student cooperation in those two houses concerning cleaning.

Brown sees no reason why UMass, as opposed to many private schools, did not have work-study students instead of professional janitors. He realizes that because of the strength of the janitor's union this policy could not be incorporated at UMass at such a late date.

Philip Chanin, Head of Residence of John Q. Adams Lower says he has not noticed any difference in the dorm since the cutback. However he added that he is in and out of the dorm and never really sees what goes on in that department.

Also Eileen Steward, Residence director of John Q. Adams Middle, has noticed no apparent difference. She attributes this to the fact that she is segregated in the lounge apartment, and does not live on the floors.

A large number of the students are very aware of the recent janitorial cutback, and were extremely willing to answer questions when asked.

The general consensus seems to be that the students notice the cutback in two general areas - the bathrooms and trashrooms. One student from Coolidge, Margaret O'Brien, complained about the build up of trash in the trashroom over the weekends, which seems to be the most common grievance from students.

Barrus Files Tax Proposal

By MDC STAFF

NORTHAMPTON - State Sen. John D. Barrus, R—Goshen, today said he will file legislation granting communities the authority to establish a property tax abatement schedule for those over 65.

"It is not my intention to replace the present law with this new concept, but to give communities an opportunity to adopt a much more lenient abatement schedule," he said.

The present law requires communities to grant abatements to those over 70 for property taxes within certain limits.

The Republican lawmaker said his legislation would give the community the option of establishing the minimum age down to 65, setting broad income and valuation limits, and reducing or eliminating the length of ownership required.

"It seems to me that some communities may think that it is good business to grant abatements to the retired persons if it means these people can stay in their homes," he continued. "This relieves the community of concern for additional school costs and continued development of elderly housing projects.

"We have imposed substantial deterents to retired persons staying in Massachusetts, and for this reason, economically speaking, I believe we have reached a point of diminishing returns."

Barrus is running for re-election against state Rep. John W. Olver, D—Amherst in the Franklin-Hampshire District.

Collins Publicizes Campaign Donors

By MDC STAFF

State Representative nominee James G. Collins today made public the names of financial contributors to his successful primary campaign.

The democratic candidate reported receiving contributions amounting to a total of $1,137.97 during the period between May 5 and Sept. 15. The average contribution was $19.62.

In releasing the names of his contributors, Collins said: "I am publicly disclosing the names of contributors to show that this is an open campaign sponsored by ordinary citizens and not by secret slush funds or big-moneyed special interests."

He said he will continue to campaign door-to-door throughout the seven towns of the 2nd Hampshire District.

"I believe that campaign victories should be earned and not bought," he added.

Collins finished second in the September primary to state Rep. James Nolan, D—Ware, and will be facing Nolan and Republicans William Whitlock of Belchertown and Nathaniel Reed of Amherst for the two district seats in November.

The following are the names of contributors to the Collins campaign between May 5-September 15, 1972, along with addresses and amounts:

Belchertown RR Crash To Be Investigated

BELCHERTOWN, Mass. (AP)- An investigation begins today to find out which train was on the wrong track when two freights collided head-on Monday, killing three train workers.

Crews worked Tuesday to clear a double curved stretch of Central Vermont Railroad track where a Boston & Maine freight train slammed into a stopped Central Vermont train.

"One of the trains was on the track when it should have been on a siding," said a spokesman for the Canadian National Railroad, which owns the Central Vermont.

"One of them got a go signal when it shouldn't have," he said.

There are no mechanical signals on the single-track line, the spokesman said, and both railroads give train engineers daily written instructions on when they can be on the track and when they must sit on sidings and let other trains pass.

The instructions may have been wrong, the spokesman said, or one of the trains may have moved when it shouldn't have.

"There was nothing apparent on the surface that was wrong," the spokesman said. "It's something that will have to be investigated by both railroads."

State police estimated the damage at $250,000 and identified the dead as Harold G. Bullard, 62, of Brattleboro, Vt., engineer of the Central Vermont train; Harold Green of Brattleboro, Central Vermont trainman, and Francis J. Griffin of Clinton, Mass., an employe of the Boston & Maine.

Six others were injured and were treated and released.

Officials said the B&M train had just left Wheelwright heading north from Warren to Northampton, traveling about 25 miles an hour, when it slammed into the Central Vermont train.

The other train had just left Amherst heading south from Brattleboro to Palmer. It had stopped on a curve to check a loose brake hose.

Officials said the Central Vermont train was an hour behind schedule.

Both engines were destroyed, and several freight cars badly damaged, officials said.

Southwest Assembly elections will be held tonight in all residence halls.

Rhetoric Must Go

Tonight the Student Senate will be considering the Academic Affairs Report on the Rhetoric Requirement; tomorrow evening the Academic Matters Committee of the Faculty Senate will be considering that same report. Last spring the Academic Matters Committee voted to recommend abolishment of the Rhetoric Requirement pending the report of Academic Affairs. It now has been released and the wheels have been set in motion once more.

We concur with the Academic Affairs Report and urge that the Student Senate give the report its blessings so that Academic Matters will know where the students stand on this issue. The present requirement is a reform over the previous English/Speech requirement which didn't work either. It is time that all segments of the University take to heart the statement of the Dean's Rhetoric Committee of 1969: "...no series of courses in Rhetoric...can claim to turn students into skillful writers and speakers in a year's time." That is what the students have been saying for years. Academic Affairs has set about to prove it; they have in their report, and the TA's can do nothing but affirm those feelings.

It is time that the faculty recognize the hopelessness of reform in a Program that defies to be good when required. Academic Matters, don't back down now. Reaffirm your motion of last spring and ask the Faculty Senate to abolish the Rhetoric Requirement.

A Good Five Sense Cigar

The trouble with you is the trouble with me
Got two good eyes but you still can't see
Hunter & Garcia

Sighted people have a problem. Their dependence on one particular sense is both incredible and unfortunate. Amost all of us allow our sense of sight to dominate our sense experience. Marshall McLuhan blames Johann Gutenberg, but we're all equally guilty.

My ire was aroused today when I read the Education section of the current issue of Time. Under a picture of one of Jack Shadoian's sections of "The Gangster in Film & Literature" was an article about off-beat courses taught at various universities across the country. The article concludes with the following statement.

"At the University of Massachusetts in Amherst, the English Department got students interested in reading the classics--Aeschylus' Agamemnon and Shakespeare's Macbeth--by adding movies like "The Godfather" to the assignment list and calling the course 'The Gangster in Film and Literature.'"

Needless to say, my shaky UMie pride was rubbed the wrong way by the implications present in the article. I watch Sesame Street because I want to, and I took "The Gangster in Film & Literature" to see the movies, not to read plays I read in junior year of high school and several times since. Furthermore, I do not believe Charlie Eidsvik designed the course to sneak Shakespeare past his students.

After I recovered from Time's grave insult, however, I realized that although there is a tremendous difference between watching a film and reading, films still utilize only two senses, sight and hearing. In the end, film is another visual medium, and while it does a student good to take an occasional course which isn't primarily a ready course, it doesn't do much by way of creating the total sensory person.

I wasn't going to write about the Grateful Dead concert of Monday night, but it just happens to lend itself here. Monday evening serves as an example of the use of all of one's senses. Everyone went to "see" the Dead, but they really went to hear them. There was music, there were the Grateful Dead standing there for all to see, and there was a light show. Two senses down, three to go.

There wasn't all that much to touch, but the concrete floor, although rather stiff, felt very good. When exhausted from dancing at the end of a long song, one could lie back and feel the coolness of the floor blend happily with one's warm, perspiring body. (It's better if you're not wearing a shirt.) The smells present were limited but nevertheless mingled with the smell of 10,000 perspring bodies. As for tastes, one could take successive drags off of a Camel, a joint, a beer, and a Coke. (I particularly recommend beer

These sensory experiences were, I admit, rather limited. I wouldn't like to think that smoke is a peak experience for either the tastebuds or the nostrils. I merely wish to posit that Monday night, with all the smoke, coke, dope, colors, and music, was a fuller sensory experience than was watching High Sierra Monday afternoon.

There is a second side of the sighted person's problem, which is that he/she does not appreciate the gift of sight. The next time a blind person walks past you, uncomplaining, tapping in front of him to avoid unseen obstacles, admire him for his remarkable ability to get along in a world made for sighted people, but thank your god or your dog that you can see. One of the major reasons we overdepend on sight is because our culture demands it. Our pleasures as well as our duties demand that we be able to see. There are few copies of Playboy in braille. The blind cannot play bridge, football, or Macduff without special equipment generally unavailable to them. Be glad you can see, but use your other senses as well. Single-sensedness, like chastity, is its own punishment.

It is ironic that this polemic appears in print. If you are not to ignore it, then you must deal with it through your eyes, your visual sense. We might all do better to read less, but most everyone who reads the Collegian, required to read, by the Registry of Motor Vehicles as well as by professors, by colleagues, and by force of habit. If you already know how to read, it's too late now. Truthfully, I hope someone reads this. I do not, however, wish to appeal solely to your visually sense.

I therefore include, in today's column, the following items: Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, a pile of leaves in which to romp naked, sweet and sour pork for two, a bouquet of lilacs, and autographed copies of Bobby Orr and Katherine Ross. Ecstacy is a multi-sensory experience.

America Needs McGovern

What does America really want? At this particular point in time with respect to the various national polls, it appears to be Richard M. Nixon and his brand of "Responsible Government." I don't feel a need to refute or agree with them, as historically they have at times been proven wrong, and it is impossible to tell by any means other than the election itself where allegiances actually are, or who will be the best candidate on November 7th in the minds of Americans.

When you look at the response of our country as a whole to the IT&T affair, the Watergate incident, and the milk and Wheat scandals that were scandals only in Washington, you begin to question the average American's opinion of our system and its components. In a survey taken prior to the Conventions this summer, the participants were asked to list twenty given occupations in the order of their respectability. Politicians were number nineteen, and used car salesmen were twenty. In another national survey, 80% of all politicians were considered to be corrupt in one way or another. Even if this illustrates a low-key expectation of corruption in politics today, it certainly brings us to question the integrity of our system, which even being far from perfect should rate better than this.

With our burgeoning and expanding bureaucracy, the individual constituent is becoming increasingly isolated from Government and his effect upon it. Being aware of this separation and ineffectuality, is it perhaps easier to overlook or ignore a scandal and its relevance when administration officials refer to them as "rubbish", taking their word for it merely out of convenience? Would people really care even if consistent refutation and denials of issues "not kosher" were not there? Where do you draw the line in a Democracy between individual responsibility and the institutionalized repression of effectuality that admittedly is inescapable? A good number of questions are raised in this respect, and it is difficult to detect a consentual mood, because if asked, the general response would likely be one of indignation. "Of course I realize who and what is best for our country." However it is quite easy to see that in spite of the fact that the Vietnam war is incredibly again a plus issue, welfare rolls are up 3%, inflation and the cost of living are still on the increase and Political Espionage is persisting and growing, Richard M. Nixon appears to be the people's choice.

This has to be changed. George McGovern represents what has to be done to this country to save it from itself. Four More Years would not only represent Nixon, but also the decadent imprintation and growth within the Ethos of America. This is not a slur upon the rationality of our country, but rather an indication of how a trust and faith given a man in 1968 could be twisted and lost in the realms of favoritism and self-perpetuation. This is unfortunately possible in today's society with its vastness of media and bureaucracy, where it is becoming increasingly evident.

George McGovern has attempted to bring the Democratic process back to the people with the McGovern-Frazier Commission On Delegate Party Reform, and his continual attempts in the Senate and within his lifestyle to represent the individual. The individual, to whom we must demonstrate the necessity of this change, despite adversity to it, and status-quo security that seems to withhold consideration of it.

If the polls hold true as they are today on November 7th, it will not be a defeat for George McGovern, but rather a victory for the declining elements and deterrents to a true Responsible Government.

Mark L. Mawrence is Chairman of the Students For McGovern Steering Committee.

Letters To The Editor

Four More Years Or Three More Months?

To The Editor:

There is a whole gamut of issues confronting society today and they have unavoidable bearings on you and me and everyone else. The War, inflation, conservation, unemployment, corruption, education, sex and race discrimination, etc., etc. There is also an election confronting us. On November 7th, many of us will have our first opportunity to play an active role in choosing exactly who is going to represent and/or govern us. We will be electing representatives to the state legislature. Rep. John Olver is challenging incumbent Sen. John Barrus. If you heard both of them speak at last Wednesday's Student Senate meeting you would probably realize that the status quo of Senator Barrus' 'old-line' politics is no longer acceptable. In the race for state representative, there is little doubt in my mind that Jim Collins, like Olver, should and will receive widespread student support in his bid for election and in these races, and in other local contests, the student vote may well be the determining factor. It's unfortunate that U.S. Rep. Silvio Conte is running unchallenged and that we are confronted with a U.S. seantorial race which pits 'law and order' John Droney against the 'do nothing, sell-out liberalism' of Edward Brooke. These two races are predictable and unfortunate for they breed cynicism, but there are other pressing issues. There is an election for the President of the United States. Will it be four more years....or THREE MORE MONTHS?

Can we really expect to achieve significant change? No one can really answer that question, but if you don't do everything within your realm to influence change, then don't harp and bitch when you don't like what you see. If you are registered to vote, then vote. Vote here in the Amherst area, or go home to vote, or write to your town clerk immediately and request an absentee ballot (do not delay). If you are not registered or you know you won't take the initiative to go home to vote, or you know you just won't ever get around to writing for an absentee ballot, then get yourself down to the town clerk's office (in Amherst it's above the Police Station) and register. This Saturday, October 7, is the LAST DAY TO REGISTER to vote in the November 7 general election.

One final note: If and when you receive an absentee ballot, do not open and/or mark it until you are in the presence of a Notary Public (Notary Publics can be found in the Student Activities area on the ground level of the Campus Center).

Don't throw away a single chance. Register and Vote.

John G. Schmitz

To The Editor:

I read with jubilation the letter from Mr. Estelle (Oct. 3) and wondered why so many people are blind to the obvious assets of John G. Schmitz.

Mr. Estelle mentions four points of The American Party platform, and I wish to elaborate on these points.

(1) "Restoration of the Free Enterprise System without Federal control except for taxes." This would free our industrial giants like; A.T.&T. DuPont (to include G.G.M.), General Foods, and others of such size and inclination, to continue to grow and advance to benefit all Mankind.

(2) "Withdraw the U.S. from the U.N." This would really prevent the U.S. from interfering with another country, and would force them to come to us for trade.

(3) "End this business with Red China." Definitely! Just because they make up 20-25% of the world population is no reason to admit that they exist.

(4) "Cut out all foreign aid to Communist Russia, and other Communist countries." Certainly, why should we be the ones to show them that a blend of Capitalism and Socialism may be the answer to their problems, or ours for that matter.

I join Mr. Estelle in urging all voters to vote The American Party ticket, a ticket that will ride us to isolationism and revive that old campaign cheer, "SIEG HEIL!"

Blood Needed

To The Editor:

Ruth Macdonald, a senior at the University, is currently hospitalized in Cooley-Dickinson Hospital. Ruthie has a rare blood disease which is destroying her blood platelets. Her treatment involves massive transfusions. She needs a great deal of blood.

I am asking everyone who knows Ruthie, and anyone else who is a potential blood donor, to give blood to Ruth Macdonald. You can give blood at any Red Cross Center or at Cooley-Dickinson Hospital. There are donation hours at the hospital, but blood may be given all day on Tuesdays. Ruth Macdonald (note the spelling) should be named as a recipient when you give blood. If you have any questions, I can be reached at 546-5177. Thank you.

Glickstein Answered

To The Editor:

Mr. Glickstein's article in yesterday's paper prompts me to say a few words in defense of Boston baseball fans. He is not, let me assure him, the only one out there who cares. Indeed he professes to be a Yankee fan: just where does he get off? --Certainly not at Kenmore or Fenway. (That's a joke for you IRT freaks.)

Let me point out a few things to Mr. Glickstein. The Red Sox drew over 1,400,000 fans to tiny Fenway Park, despite the fact that last year's drawing card, Vida Blue, appeared not at all at Fenway Park, as opposed to twice a year ago. Until All-Star break, the team was mired in the second division. Rico Petrocelli was 14th among third basemen in a player's poll. Carl Yastrzemski was batting a hefty .230, Reggie Smith and Tommy Harper were no great shakes either, and I won't even mention Danny Cater. Marty Pattin was 2-8. Finally, home games were cancelled because of the strike. Yet the crowds were good all year, not just when the team was winning. yes, mr. glickstein, somebody else cares. i care.

Editorial Points

We hope, as Don Glickstein seems to, that the Red Sox win the pennant. However, it must be said that on Monday night, the Grateful Dead played much better than the Red Sox did.

SUG Board Defended

To The Editor:

As the SUG Board issue drags on it is becoming apparent to an increasing number of students that Larry Ladd, president of SGA, is handling the affair with all the grace of a three-legged rhinoceros. But, unlike many student senators, the SUG Board wants to discuss issues, not personalities. So let's look at the issues and contrast the student senate document with the presently valid SUG Board constitution.

First, the senate document would have 14 undergrads appointed to the Board by the SGA president. But can the SGA president be trusted to appoint qualified candidates when he has openly admitted to the use of the SUG Board as a "dumping grounds" for political outcasts of the senate? The SUG Board constitution now provides for elections for all seats, undergraduate and graduate, in late October of this year. Appointments would serve only to wedge another step between the Board and the student body. Elections provide for direct accountability of SUG Board representatives to a defined constituency.

Second, the student senate document requires, by SGA policy, 25% of the student body to sign a petition for a referendum to be held on any given issue. That would amount to around 4,000 undergraduate signatures. Under the present SUG Board constitution, an issue would be put to a referendum upon presentation of a petition signed by 10% of the student body. That would amount to around 1600 signatures. The student who wants a referendum will appreciate the difference of 2400 signatures.

Third, the senate proposal does not allow for representation proportional to area population. The SUG Board constitution allows for such representation. It is difficult to believe that after the senate has admittedly failed in their appointment system, they are eager to go back to the same unsatisfactory method.

Fourth, there is the matter of the mechanism the senate chose to utilize in passing their document. No negotiations were sought with the SUG Board. SUG Board members received copies of the senate document the day following its introduction to the senate. The senate refused to table the document to allow time for senators to have a chance to examine the SUG Board amendments (which were initiated last year) passed at the next meeting of the Board.

Of course there are other issues. I am anxious to discuss those issues with any interested student, including senators. The Board as a whole has already passed a motion expressing its willingness to discuss the problems with representatives from the senate.

The SUG Board wants to report to and be directly accountable to the student body-the senate, power crazed, wants the SUG Board to report to them. We can only hope that the Graduate Senate will defeat this bill. Then the acute personality clash will end, and the SUG Board and the senate can both accomplish something constructive. Surely both bodies have more to do with their time than to engage in a power struggle. The SUG Board is ready and willing to start anew, despite the demoralizing effect of the senate attacks. Let's end the war and act like responsible bodies.

Read This Quickly

To The Editor:

Once again, the Evelyn Wood Reading Dynamics Course has plastered the campus with its broadsides:

"Read between 1000 and 3000 words per minute."

As a student in the Reading Program of the School of Education, I would like to point out some facts that students should be aware of before they dish out hundreds of dollars for reading improvement programs.

1) Evelyn Wood does not teach you how to read at 1000 words per minute; that is physiologically impossible. They teach you better skimming skills.

2) Anyone can increase the rate of their reading by merely concentrating better. Increased rate, however, does not mean increased comprehension. A student should try to vary his rate, depending on the type of material he or she is reading. In reading technical science, for example, a student's rate should usually decrease, and it is neither improper nor unusual to read a passage several times.

3) Study skills are exactly that -- skills, and Evelyn Wood does help some students learn the skills involved in studying. For those with a limited budget, however, I recommend a book that can be ordered from any book store for under three or so dollars: How To Study In College by Walter Pauk. In a word, studying requires discipline. If spending a hundred dollars motivates a student to discipline himself, that is fine. If not, buy the book, or speak to someone in the Counseling Center at Whitmore, as they too, have the competence to teach study skills.

In addition to being less misleading in their advertising, one can only hope that Evelyn Wood will have the courage and responsibility to take down all of their posters from every wall, bathroom, door, tree, bulletin board, and ground on campus. Their visual pollution, we can do without.

Welfare Fraud Convictions

BOSTON (AP) - Restitutions totalling $44,357 were ordered as a result of convictions in welfare fraud cases in August investigated by the state Bureau of Welfare Auditing.

Twenty-three guilty verdicts were reached in 28 cases of alleged fraud prosecuted in August, the bureau said. It investigated 369 complaints in all that month.

Of these, said Director Raymond F. Jowdy, 301 charged that a recipient had unreported income, and there were 13 complaints alleging fraud by welfare vendors.

Must Meet Pollution Laws

PITTSFIELD, Mass. (AP) - General Electric Co.'s request for a variance from a state air pollution regulation on fuel oil will be denied by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, Rep. Silvio O. Conte, R—Mass., said Tuesday.

General Electric Co.'s request for a variance from a state air pollution regulation on fuel oil will be denied by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, Rep. Silvio O. Conte, R—Mass., said Tuesday.

Conte said EPA Administrator William Ruckelshaus will reject GE's request to continue burning conventional 2.2 percent sulfur-content oil, as opposed to the one per cent sulfur oil required as of Oct. 1.

State approval of the GE variance had prompted a dozen Berkshire firms to request similar variances, all pending.

The firms claim it would be an economic hardship and an unnecessary precaution to require the low-sulfur fuel oil in the Berkshires, where they claim quality is above state standards.

Cannot Pay Phone Bills

HOLYOKE, Mass. (AP) - Two Holyoke hospitals announced Tuesday they will not pay the New England Telephone Co. rate increases that went into effect Aug. 16.

"We are simply pinned to the wall," said the administrators of Holyoke and Providence hospitals. They said they would hold the extra charges in escow until the Federal Price Commission determines whether the new rates are allowable.

Owen F. Connolly, administrator of Providence Hospital, and Harold B. Pine, of Holyoke Hospital, said in a joint announcement that until approval of the new rates has been received they would pay the telephone company a monthly amount equal to the previous year's charges.

Connolly said a conservative estimate of the additonal cost due to the new rates has been received they would pay the telephone company a monthly amount equal to the previous year's charges.

Connolly said a conservative estimate of the additional cost due to the new rates would be $1,000 a month for his hospital.

S. American Presidents at B.U.

BOSTON (AP) - Two former South American presidents will be members of a roundtable panel discussion at a two-day session at the Center for Latin American Development Studies at Boston University.

Former Presidents Carlos Lleras Restrepo of Columbia and Eduardo Frei of Chile will be among those taking part in the discussion, called "Quo Vadis Latin America," which begins Thursday.

Discussion will center on the political, economic and social future of Latin America.

Federal Indictment on RI Man

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) - A Rhode Island man sought under a federal indictment charging fraud in Oklahoma attempted to run down an FBI agent Monday before he was arrested at Johnston, R.I., the FBI said Tuesday.

Arnold Larson, FBI special agent in charge here, said Louis Salvatore Baccari, indicted on a count of fraud in the purchase of an Oklahoma quartrhorse, was arrested at his Johnston home about an hour after he allegedly attempted to run over an FBI agent with his car.

Larson said Baccari was taken before a federal magistrate and bond was set at $5,000 on the Oklahoma charge and the added charge of assaulting a federal officer.

Baccari is one of two men charged in a federal indictment here last month with allegedly developing a scheme to defraud Pelham Quarterhorse Ranch at Norman last Nov. 26.

Nader Releases First Volume in "American Default" Series

WASHINGTON (AP) - Ralph Nader Tuesday released the first volume of what he promised will be an encyclopedic study of Congress, declaring it "the Great American Default."

"The White House and the president are emerging in the United States as a new kind of monarchy," said Nader in a news conference heralding the release of a paperback book entitled "Who Runs Congress? The President, Big Business or You."

The over-all conclusion of the book is that the President and big business dominate Congress, but the people could control it if they would lobby their congressmen vigorously, vote out the bad ones and hold the others accountable.

"But until they do so, the proud lords of legislapion can frolic in the pool, sleep quietly at their desk, vote themselves pork-barrel legislation, accept the money of special interests, capitulate to the president, obstruct important legislation, and be reassured by the knowledge that it is extremely unlikely that these pleasures and powers will ever be taken away," says the book.

In his news conference Nader answered the who-runs-Congress question this way:

"We are in the midst of a very serious constitutional crisis. Congress under the Constitution is really the pre-eminent branch. Unfortunately....Congress has abdicated its responsibilities to powerful committee chairmen, executive bureaucracy and special-interest groups."

The book is just a small part of a planned series of 20 to 30 volumes, involving over 1,000 volunteers and costing nearly $200,000. Nader said it is intended as a tool to enable citizens to recapture control of the legislature, and thus the government.

The consumer advocate says he is paying for the project personally out of speaking fees and royalties on books.

The book, published at $1.95 by Bantam, is written by Mark J. Green, James M. Fellows and David R. Zwick, all products of Harvard University or its Law School.

The project also includes profiles of 488 senators and congressmen--all those in office in 1972 except those who are retiring. They run 20 to 40 pages each and are published at $1 each by Grossman, with discounts for quantity purchases. A complete set in 12 volumes costs $450.

The profiles are based in part on 96-page questionaires submitted to every senator and congressman. At least dozen refused to fill them out, and others would answer only some of the 633 questions.

The book calls the new Federal Election Campaign Act of 1972 better than the old 1925 Corrupt Practices Act, but says the new law is full of loopholes, too.

One sign that Congress did not intend the new law "to veer into the realm of seriousness," the book says, is that it left enforcement to "the same old crew that chuckled through the old law: the House clerk, the Senate Secretary, and the Justice Department."

The book says that lobbying-disclosure laws are even more primitive than the campaign-finance laws. In both areas, it recommends that citizens be given the right to go to court to seek enforcement when the Justice Department "looks the other way."

Committee chairmen are the real leaders of Congress, the book says, and names Rep. Wilbur Mills, D—Ark., chairman of the Ways and Means Committee; Rep. F. Edward Hebert, D—La., chairman of the Armed Services Committee, and Rep. William R. Poage, D—Tex., chairman of the Agriculture Committee, as among the most powerful.

"Mills has set himself apart from his House colleagues by his brilliant understanding of complicated tax codes and by his sheer endurance," the book says. "Beyond that, he has consolidated his clout by skillful Machiavellian maneuvering."

Hebert is credited with inquiring into the My Lai massacre and waste in military contracts, but the book says that in the absence of scandal "he goes down the line with the Pentagon."

The book accuses Poage of "redneckism" in his opposition to minimum wage for migrant workers and appropriations for emergency hunger and medical needs. "This is power at its crudest - the power to keep thousands of people hungry," the book says.

One section of the book which classes congressmen, according to their work styles, includes these assessments:

Sen. William Proxmire, D—Wis. - An "overachieved" who has shaken off an early reputation as an aggressive maverick and has been effective in limiting defense spending, in ethics reform and other areas.

Rep. Robert Nix, D—Pa - An "underachiever" who has "modestly remained an entire upknown, both in his district and in the Capitol." It says Nix is the second-most-popular black representative, whose election is ensured by the Philadelphia machine, "but once in Congress, Nix does little but take up space."

Rep. John Rooney, D—N.Y. - An "invisible powerhouse" who as chairman of an Appropriations subcommittee favors the FBI and the Maritime Administration, but "shows only contempt" for the State and Justice Departments and the Judiciary.

Other members are classified as "absentees" and "attenders." The book says Sen. George McGovern, D—S.D., attended only 51 per cent of the time time this year. On the other hand, Sen. Margaret Chase Smith, R—Maine, once made 2,941 consecutive roll calls, Rep. William Natcher, D—Ky., made 2,705 in a row, and Rep. Charles E. Bennett, D—Fla., has not missed a single one of 2,242 votes during 19 years in the House.

Jewish Students Honor Dead

By STEVEN KAMPLER

Victims of recent Arab Terrorism in Israel, Munich, and London were remembered last Thursday evening in a short, but touching ceremony sponsored by the Concerned Jewish Students (C.J.S.). The candle-lit memorial service took place in the Cape Cod room at the student union and was attended by approximately 125 individuals from the five-college area, including many Israeli members of the University of Massachusetts community.

The ceremony was opened with the reading of several news articles describing the mass slaughters at Lod airport in Tel-Aviv, at Munich, and the killing of an Israeli diplomat in London. Then, Herbie Levine and Gidon Ariel, read off the names of the eleven members of the Israeli Olympic team. Several of those murdered by the Terrorists were personal friends of Levine and Ariel, who studied with them at the Wingate Institute for Physical Education in Israel. This was followed by Lisa Litant's singing of Jaques Brel's "If we only have Love".

Rabbi Korval, spiritual leader at UMass, then chanted a Jewish prayer for the dead-"God Full of Compassion" in Hebrew and English. This was followed by former Israeli Olympic team member, George Eisen's reading the "Kaddish", which is the traditional Jewish prayer for mourners.

A memorial candle was lit after the kaddish had been chanted and was left burning for a 24 hour period of mourning. The Ceremony was then closed with the singing of the Israeli Anthem - of Hope - "Hatikvah".

Amherst Peace Group Gives Medical Help

On Saturday, October 14, a group from the Amherst area will cross into Canada with cash gifts to purchase medical supplies to help victims of the Vietnam War.

This will be the seventh pilgrimage of the Amherst Area Peace Action Committee. Since 1967 the Committee has crossed six times into Canada, with funds for the purchase of medical relief supplies.

The Amherst group gives the money to the Canadian Friends Service Committee, which purchases the medical supplies from Canadian drug manufacturers who provide them at cost. The supplies are then forwarded to the Red Cross of North Vietnam, South Vietnam, and the National Liberation Front.

According to the U.S. Treasury Department, giving medical aid to the victims of the Vietnam War, north and south, may be considered illegal, in terms of the provisions of the Trading with the Enemy Act.

Contributions are in the form of cash or checks made out to cash, and given to committee members, who include Milton and Jane Mayer (Deerfield), Allison Kaufhold (Gill), Michael Rice (Hatfield), Marshall Smith (Haydenville), and Ruth Hammen, Alice Scheffey, Leone Stein, Jay and Betty Savareid, Jules Chametzky and Anne Halley Chametzky, David, Mary and Rosalind Clark (Amherst). The crossings are sponsored by the Mt. Toby Monthly Meeting of Friends.

A collection will be taken up on each of the Five-College campuses during the next week. Those wishing to join the crossing are invited to meet at Woolman Hill, Deerfield, Mass., at 9:00 a.m. on October 14. The caravan will proceed from Woolman Hill to Derby Line, Vermont, with the donations, and return to Amherst that night.

Election Clearinghouse Open

The Department of Political Science is sponsoring a special project called Elections '72. The Elections '72 project will serve as an information clearing-house between UMass students and candidates and their campaign organizations. Specifically, it will provide candidates a means of communicating their interest in volunteers to students who want to work in a political campaign. And, it will provide students with names of candidates and campaign organizations seeking help.

The orientation of the Elections '72 project is non-partisan. The Elections '72 project will not favor any particular party, candidate or point of view. The Department of Political Science believes the project can perform a positive public service, while maintaining a definite political neutrality. In addition to helping students get into a campaign, the Elections '72 project will sponsor a post-election lecture which will analyze the 1972 elections.

If any student wants information concerning a campaign or wishes to work for a candidate, he, or she, should see Peter Poor in 206 Thompson, or call 545-2850. They will have some campaign literature available.

Study In Greece Program

Study In Greece, Inc. is a unique foreign study program in Athens, Greece in which a student from any major can study for five and a half months with a personally designed program to fit his own interests and goals. The program revolves around private tutorials, classes at a local college, and a field placement.

The student may elect to take courses at U.S. accredited Pierce College in Athens where he has the opportunity to pursue formal instruction in any field, in addition to meeting other English-speaking students and professors from many different cultures. If the student wishes to continue his learning outside of the college classroom, he has the opportunity to work in tutorials with outstanding specialists in almost every field. Some of the areas of emphasis to date have been sociology, psychology, history, botany, economics, art, music, religion, drama, folk arts, and philosophy.

Also included in the program is an independent study experience in which the student involves himself in some aspect of the Greek culture and investigates it for approximately one month. In past sessions students have lived with Greek families, taught English while living in a Greek village, learned how to weave rugs, and one student collected wildflowers for a botanical museum.

Students on the program are encouraged to travel and explore on their own, although there are many group trips to various regions and islands of Greece. The program provides an excellent opportunity for any student who has the desire to discover and learn in a foreign country.

Any students who are interested should attend the meeting on October 17 in the Student Union Commonwealth Room at 7:30 to hear speakers and have your questions answered.

FALL FASHION NEWS

Announcing a gorgeous collection of Red Eye seperates by Aileen at the PUT ON, University Store, Campus Center.

They feature the return of the classics: sweaters (in sets), shirts, wide comfortable pants — "baggies", and plaids.

Fall rust and green join in a pair of baggies with two important features: cuffs and emphasis on the waist with shirring.

This pair is, believe-it-or-not, a jacquard knit and not a woven plaid. They are fully machine washable.

They could team with a classic turtleneck and the perfect female version of the "pipe-and-slippers" sweater of a professor. Notice another Fall fashion plus on the sleeves, novelty knit designs; here we have pine trees.

The classic shirt is even more classic in gingham, with the added bonus of being knit and washable. Emphasizing the bust and shoulders (a la 1940's) by adding a cropped vest in stripe.

The complete collection includes tweedes (in knits), more sweaters with novelty knit-work, and plaids, more plaids. Bring your saddle shoes and complete "the look" at the PUT ON, University Store, Campus Center.

Anesthesia Side Effects Probed

BOSTON (AP) — A National Institutes of Health study reporter Tuesday says that there is additional evidence suggesting that anesthesia can interfere with the body's immune response and possibly make patients more susceptible to infection and the spread of some cancer cells.

Dr. Bruce F. Cullen, assistant professor of anesthesiology at the University of Washington in Seattle, said the study added evidence to other research which has suggested anesthesia's interference with normal immune function.

In the report to the annual meeting of the American Society of Anesthesiologists, Dr. Cullen emphasized that the study does not definitely prove that anesthesia during surgery leads to increased infections.

"Although the data suggests this is true," Dr. Cullen said, "the test does not say definitely that anesthesia causes patients to be more susceptible to infection."

The latest study was conducted at the NIH Clinical Center in Bethesda, Md., where Dr. Cullen is a member of the Anesthesiology Department. He conducted the tests with Dr. Paul B. Chretien and Roxane B. Hume of the National Cancer Institute in Bethesda.

Blood was withdrawn from 18 patients before anesthesia and again during anesthesia, but before the surgery. The patients were anesthetized with the most commonly used agents, nine patients with halothane and nitrous oxide and nine others with nitrous oxide and intravenous thiopental and Innovar.

Dr. Cullen said leukocytes, white blood cells which attack foreign objects in the body, were separated from whole blood and tested for their ability to engulf foreign particles, in this case, bits of latex.

The study found that both forms of anesthesia reduced the white cells' ability to engulf the foreign particles.

"This inhibition is significant statistically," Dr. Cullen said, "but we're not sure it works this way in a patient. This test was an artificial one, using the latex, and how it wold work with bacteria is another thing."

Dr. Cullen said he is interested also in how anesthesia's effect on immune response could effect the body's defense against cancer.

"There have been studies which show that during cancer surgery, tumor cells are released into the circulatory system," Dr. Cullen said, "and it is thought that the body's immune system destroys them and prevents them from growing elsewhere. If anesthesia interferes, it also could affect this response."

Dr. Cullen said more research is needed to find out if the anesthesia itself interferes with immune response, or whether the anesthesia triggers another factor which affects the body's immunology.

He said it is known that anesthesia triggers the release of hormones and theorized that perhaps hormones or another factor was the real agent affecting the immune response.

Dr. Cullen stressed that even though anesthesia is known to have many bad effects on many parts of the body, it is a now irrespacable tool in medicine which has helped millions of patients during surgery.

Dental Health Needs Reviewed By UMaine

PORTLAND, Maine (AP) - A University of Maine advisory group recommended Tuesday guaranteed incomes for dentists willing to practice in areas where their need is greatest.

"The purpose, generally, of such a proposal is to persuade dentists to practice privately in small communities which probably could not support practice on a straight unsubsidized fee-for-service basis," according to the final report of the Advisory Council on Dental Manpower Education.

The 21-member panel was appointed by University of Maine Chancellor Donald R. McNeil to recommend alternatives to meeting the state's dental health needs.

The report said the dentists selected for guaranteed incomes need not be new dental graduates. "The need could be served as well by experienced dentists, and many such people seem now to be interested in exchanging urban for rural practices," the report said.

One alternative the panel rejected was a dental school for Maine. Dr. McNeil said the panel did consider this, but eventually concluded "a dental school is not necessary."

The council also recommended continued recruitment of dentists from out of state, and continued support and possible expansion of the Maine-Tufts compact.

The compact provides state support for a limited number of Maine students to study dentistry at Tufts University in Medford, Mass.

Other recommendations included providing guidance and advice to incoming dentists, and having the university explore the possibility of establishing a two-year degree program in dental hygiene.

Another proposal, establishing a dental auxiliary program at the Bangor campus-already has been implemented.

Gallstones Now May Be Fished Out

WASHINGTON (AP) - Using a variation of the technique by which so-so golfers fish balls from ponds, surgeons have developed a new method for extracting gallstones overlooked during previous gallbladder surgery.

This was reported Tuesday to the American Roentgen Ray Society's annual meeting by Dr. H. Joachim Burhenne, a radiologist of San Francisco's Children Hospital and Adult Medical Center.

The 45-minute technique involves inserting a wire, with a tiny basket at its end, into a specially designed catheter tube substituted for the catheter originally used for drainage after the gallbladder surgery.

With X-ray guidance, the probing wire is guided through the catheter, fitted over a retained stone and then withdrawn, much like a golfer uses a basket-equipped pole to retrieve his ball from a waterway.

Burhenne reported successful use of the method in 17 of 18 patients. He said the method is designed to prevent sometimes highly risky second operations in patients who have had their gallbladders removed but are found to have retained stones in one of the ducts originally connected with the gallbladder.

He said such second operations now are required in approximately 5,000 American gallbladder surgery patients each year and have a high sickness and mortality rate.

IT SOUNDS INCREDIBLE

BUT EVELYN WOOD GRADUATES CAN READ THE GODFATHER IN 64 MINUTES

AT THAT SPEED, THE 477 PAGES COME ACROSS WITH MORE IMPACT THAN THE MOVIE. IN LIVING BLOOD, YOU MIGHT SAY.

Imagine what this ability can do for students. At 1000 words per minute, (that's 3 times faster than you read), Evelyn Wood graduates can devour a textbook like Hofstadtler's "American Political Tradition" and wrap up each chapter in 11 minutes.

This means instead of spending 800 hours a year reading—that's what a college freshman does—an Evelyn Wood graduate spends 170 hours. Without any drop in comprehension! Without any drop in retention!

If there ever was a time to do something about this, it's now.

Diamond Will Open On Broadway

HOLLYWOOD (AP) - He will step into the spotlight Thursday night, standing where Al Jolson once stood alone, and he'll sing songs so unique he can describe them only as "Neil Diamond music."

To millions of fans the description is magic. Diamond compositions-"Sweet Caroline," "I Am, I Said," "Stones" and more-have kept him perched at the top of music charts for three years.

The scheduled one-man show at Broadway's Winter Garden Theater in New York, an apex of Diamond's dizzying career rise, is nearly sold out. And it comes just after a triumphant stand at Hollywood's outdoor Greek Theater where fans hung from treetops to get a glimpse of the 30-year-old superstar.

The Schubert Organization, which is bringing Diamond to Broadway, calls him "an American original" and says it's the first time since Jolson that a pop song star has been showcased alone on Broadway.

Jolson appeared at the same theater in the 1920s and 1930s.

There will be 20 Diamond performances through Oct. 21, and one show will be beamed by satellite to Europe and Iron Curtain countries.

"It's going to be fantastic," exclaims Diamond. "First of all, to be on Broadway, but also at the Winter Garden. I was fired from four or five music publishers in that building!"

The lean, pensive, dark-haired Diamond was reflecting on the tough road to superstardom in a rare interview before leaving for New York. A native of Brooklyn, he now lives in Los Angeles with his wife and small son.

"I went through seven years of total failure," he recalls. "My average income was $300 per year...But it was exciting. I was learning that there was a way in which I could express myself."

The difficult past still lives in the subdued elegance of Diamond's Hollywood office where his first small press notice hangs beside his Brooklyn junior high school class picture. The solemn 12-year-old in the picture was already writing poems, "practical poetry, mostly to girls. I used to ask girls on dates that way."

One of two sons of a shopkeeper, Diamond recalls an insecure childhood of constant moves to new towns. "I was an outsider for the most part in each new school. But I always wanted to be something. That's why I took to writing so passionately."

When the Diamond family moved to Cheyenne, Wyo., Neil first started putting his words to music. "I got involved in country music," he recalls. "I realized that the cowboys who were singing were getting the girls."

His seven years of failure were spent in New York, composing songs on a $30 piano and peddling them to publishers who didn't buy.

Finally, the first breakthrough came. A songwriting-record production team spotted him and offered him his first recording contract. The record, "Cherry Cherry" backed with "Solitary Man," attracted immediate attention. Success had arrived.

By 1970, he was named the top-selling male singer on record. Since then, he has had five best-selling albums, several single-record hits and has performed to wild ovations in the great concert halls of the world.

Miller's New Play Probes The Chaotic

BOSTON (AP) - Arthur Miller's new play, "The Creation of the World and Other Business," fails. There is no apparent reason for its existence.

"I hope what it does is set out contemporary dilemmas against a background of the nature of human being in general," Miller said of it. "...my play is an attempt at probing why the chaotic and anarchic animal that we are continuously attempts to create this moral order."

But, it comes across the footlights as a philosophy seminar in good and evil.

Certainly, contemporary problems-war and violence-are discussed, but in the context of a dialogue on good and evil between God and Lucifer and their actions and counteractions.

Man is seen as confused and torn between the two, but because the conflict is presented as between supernatural beings and as the fall from grace of Adam and Eve and Cain, the play seems to offer little to humanity today that couldn't be handled as well in a classroom.

The play is Miller's first since "The Price," which played on Broadway in 1968 and was produced in Boston the following year. "Creation" opened a two-week tryout at the Colonial Theatre Monday night. From Boston, it is scheduled to play Washington and then Broadway.

The plot involves the creation of the world, the banishment of Adam and Eve from paradise and events through Cain's killing of Abel.

The show does have some things going for it. The set, designed by Boris Aronson, and the lighting by Tharon Musser are absolutely stunning.

The stage is covered with fiberglass with lights underneath, but it is the background gauze curtains, designs and lights that really make it.

The costumes by Hal George are inventive, and the body stockings worn by Adam and Eve would have been considered risque before the advent of total nudity on stage. It should be said that some of the language is needlessly crude.

The acting is fine with Hal Holbrook as Lucifer and Boston-born Susan Batson as Eve perhaps standing out above the others. Holbrook's looks and grace serve him well, and he does have the best lines in the play.

Economist at Amherst College

Professor Kenneth E. Boulding, director of the Institute of Behavioral Science at the University of Colorado, will speak at Amherst College, on Thursday, in the Converse Assembly Room, Converse Hall. His topic will be "Doomsday and All That."

His self-chosen subtitle, "Reflections on Apocalyptic Economics" bespeaks Professor Boulding's interest in general social science and political economy. His challenging book, published in 1968, is entitled "Beyond Economics" and was nominated for a National Book Award.

Born in Liverpool, England, in 1910, he earned his bachelor's and master's degrees from Oxford University. After service as a Commonwealth Fellow at The University of Chicago from 1932 to 1934, Professor Boulding took up permanent residence in the United States in 1937 and became an an American citizen in 1948. He is a Fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences and has received the John Bates Clark Medal of the American Economic Association, as well as the American Council of Learned Societies Prize for distinguished scholarship in the humanities.

Professor Boulding has served on the faculty of several universities and colleges and as an economist with the League of Nations Economic and Financial Section. His long tenure at the University of Michigan (1949-1967) included the directorship of the Center for Research on Conflict Resolution. He moved to the University of Colorado in 1968 and assumed his present position the following year.

Professor Boulding's lecture is the initial presentation for this academic year of the Amherst College Lecture Committee, and is open to the public without charge.

Repairs Begin on Concord Reformatory

CONCORD, Mass. (AP) - Workers began nailing plywood over 40 broken windows at Concord state prison Tuesday in response to two nights of prisoner unrest at the institution's 94-year-old east wing.

About 280 of the prison's 350 inmates roamed outside their cells Monday for the second straight night in protest of cold conditions caused by the lack of windows.

A prison spokesman said workers began Tuesday nailing up plywood planks as a temporary measure to keep out the cold. He said windows would be installed at a cost of about $12,000. Money for the project still is tied up in other state agencies and has not yet been released, the spokesman said.

Prison officials said there had been no violence involved in the disturbances, but that most of the prisoners refused to do their regular jobs and roamed about their cellblocks.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

☆ by SYDNEY OMARR ☆

Gemini is perhaps the liveliest of the zodiacal signs. These persons love a party, want to be on the move, possess an abundance of intellectual curiosity. Gemini is never satisfied merely to know something happened. Natives of this sign want to know "why" and they usually find the reasons. Gemini is the third sign of the zodiac, associated with number 5 and the planet Mercury. These are the restless people who laugh at the drop of a jest.

Powderpuff Football

By DIANE BISSONNETTE

Women's intramural activities were brought into full swing with powderpuff football action dominating the scene, on Sept. 18.

Five leagues will be participating in this season's intra-campus competition. Within these leagues are three of last year's division winners: the Mushrooms (Independent), Alpha Chi Beavers (Sorority), and the Melville Whalers (Residence).

Opening action saw the Baker Bombers destroy Dickinson 34-0. In other Scorpio League action that night, the scores were: the Lemons 22, Maroons 6; and the Packers 28, Redlights 6.

The J.Q.A. Redlights made a comeback the next week defeating the Lemons 25-2 and the Chadbourne Maroons 18-6.

Gail Cross, outstanding offensive flanker, scored eight touchdowns on running plays directed by Coach Bernie Burke.

Crampton's Koalas have dominated Aquarius league action by defeating the Field Goals 6-2. Rick Anderson and Spike Fagulas coached the Koalas to another big win over Van Meter 18-0. Other winners in this league were the Wheeler Trojans and the Dupas.

Defending champions, Melville Whalers have met up with some tough competition in the Leo League. Their current record stands at one win: 36-6 over the Pierpont Heads and one loss to the Roaring 20's, 26-0. Heading up the win column, the Coolidge 20's look like they could be on this year's "team to beat".

Last year's campus and independent winners, the Mushrooms are off to a winning start again this season with two impressive victories over the Ducks and the Alkies respectively.

Gamma Sig, representing the Sorority Minoan League are undefeated after two games. Capitalizing on a few errors made by the Chi Otees, Gamma Sig, behind quarterback Diane Janvier, outlasted their tough opponents in a close 14-12 victory. The fatal touchdown occurred soon after Chi Otee Barb Barry forgot to run the ball into the end zone after receiving a spiral pass from star quarterback, Terry Glass.

Coached by Joe McCarthy and Bob Rice, the Chi Otees dominated play 18-0 over the Kappa Crushers.

In the second week of play, Tri Sig took the big win of the Sorority Theban League over Sigma Kappa, 16-0. Defending Sorority champs the Alpa Chi Beavers defeated Pi Phi, 13-0.

Carlton

CHICAGO (AP) - Steve Carlton won his 27th game and Don Money and Greg Luzinski hit back-to-back home runs in both the third and fifth innings as the Philadelphia Phillies beat the Chicago Cubs 11-1 in a National League game Tuesday.

Bill Robinson started the Phillies to their first six-homer game of the season by hitting his eighth after Luzinski's single in the second. Left-hander Dan McGinn, making only his second 1972 start, was the victim of the Phillies' rapid start.

Larry Bowa doubled to open the third then Money and Luzinski hit their first pair of home runs. Lefty Larry Gura was the Cubs' second pitcher when Money hit his 15th homer of the season and Luzinski followed with his 18th. Carlton, beating Chicago for the third time in four starts, yielded eight hits. He struck out seven for a league-leading 310 total.

Carlton, bidding for his ninth shutout, lost it when the Cubs scored in the eighth after two were out on Carmen Fanzone's single and rookie Pat Bourque's double.

Chicago

BLOOMINGTON (AP) - Jim Geddes raced home from third for the winning run on a throwing error by catcher George Mitterwald as the Chicago White Sox beat the Minnesota Twins 5-4 in American League baseball Tuesday.

Pitcher Terry Forster had tied the game at 4-4 with two outs in the inning when he hit a pinch single to drive in Tony Muser, who had tripled. Ed Herrmann was walked intentionally after Muser's hit and Geddes ran for him.

Forster was attempting to steal second when Mitterwald's throw went into center field and Geddes scored.

Steve Braun had singled in the seventh inning, scoring pinch runner Rich Reese from second to give the Twins a 4-3 lead.

The Twins went ahead in the third with Rod Carew's single and Harmon Killebrew's double but the White Sox tied in the sixth with two runs, with singles by Jorge Orta, a triple by Jim Lyttle scoring Orta and a single by Muser scoring Lyttle.

Club X-Country

The first sponsored Sugarloaf Club cross-country run held in the Orchard area drew a field of 38 runners for two races. The first race over a 1.3 mile loop around the Orachard and up the observatory hill showed three runners together with 100 yards to go. Carl Jay, Charlotte Lettis and Al Walstad finished in that order within three seconds.

In the longer race (twice the 1.3 loop) Dan Ayers almost caught Tom Derderian in the last downhill.

Another race will be held on the same course next Sunday at 4 o'clock. The Sugarloaf Club is fielding a women's cross-country team this fall and seeking new members to compete in the Liberty Invitational in Concord, Mass., October 28 and the New England and Regional Championships later in the Fall. Bruins Want Sinden Back

BOSTON (AP) - The Boston Bruins say they are negotiating to rehire Harry Sinden, the coach who led the National Hockey League team to the Stanley Cup championship in 1970.

A Bruins spokesman said, however, that he was "100 per cent certain" that if Sinden did return, it would be in a capacity other than coach. Tom Johnson, who led the team to the Stanley Cup last season, currently is under contract for that spot.

Negotiations were continuing, a spokesman said Tuesday, but nothing had been settled.

"We've talked to Harry about coming back," said Weston Adams, the Bruins' president. "But I can't say that he's coming back with us, because it simply hasn't been decided yet."

Adams said the club would be sure to spell out Sinden's duties "so there won't be an overlapping in authority.

"We certainly don't intend to kick Milt Schmidt upstairs. We're perfectly satisfied with the job he's done as general manager."

"Besides," Adams said, "with expansion, the Braves the organization's American Hockey League club, the new league and everything else, the front office is twice as busy as ever before.

"So there should be a place in our organization for a talented guy like Sinden." Sinden left the Bruins in a salary dispute after working for them four years and joined the Sterling Homex Corp., a modular homes firms.

He coached Team Canada, which recently defeated the Russian all-star team.

Cross Country Team Beaten

By WALT POWERS

Yesterday at Franklin Park in Boston, Harvard ran away from the field in what was supposed to be a battle of New England contenders. The final score was: Harvard 23, Providence 48, and UMass 51.

Harvard seemed to benefit from its earlier meets. The Crimson started fast, sending their top four out in front. Though they weakened toward the end, only Tom Smith of Providence could catch them, finishing third. Randy Thomas, Bill Gillin, and Freshman Tom Maguire took sixth through eighth, but it wasn't enough to catch Harvard.

Providence ran just about even. It was so close, that had it been scored a dual meet, the Minutemen would have won, 27-28. But the lack of an earlier meet seemed to hurt them, and off-day runs by co-Captains Barry and O'Connel didn't help.

So for the UMass Cross-Country team, it was an inauspicious start. Coach Ken O'Brien admits that "We should have beaten Providence, but no matter how well we ran, we just couldn't have beaten Harvard."

Despite the loss, O'Brien was impressed with several performances, notably, those of Pete Criscim, Chris Chambers, and fast finishing Freshman Mike Conlin. With the first and perhaps toughest meet of the season under their belts, they should improve, but they won't have much time. Saturday they travel back to Franklin Park to face Northeaster and St. Johns of New York.

In the Junior Varsity, it was Harvard. Period. The Crimson dominated from the start, and romped home with the first three places, and seven of the top ten. Phil Broughton finished a strong sixth, and Mike Roy took eleventh. Final score: Harvard, 19, UMass 67, and Providence 68.

Sox Lose, 3-1, It's All Over

DETROIT (AP) - Al Kaline snapped a 1-1 tie with a run-scoring single in the seventh inning and two Boston fielding lapses led to another run as the Detroit Tigers edged the Red Sox 3-1 Tuesday night to capture baseball's American League Eastern Division championship.

The triumph puts the Tigers atop the Division by 1-1/2 games over Boston, making it impossible for the Red Sox to win the title even with a victory over Detroit in Wednesday's season finale.

Detroit will play Western Division champion Oakland in the first game of the best-of-five league playoffs beginning Saturday in California. It is the Tigers' first title since they won the world championship in 1968.

Dick McAuliffe, whose error in the first inning resulted in a Boston run, doubled with one out in the seventh off Luis Tiant and scored when Kaline slashed a 1-2 pitch to left field for a single. Kaline took second on the throw to the plate.

That gave Kaline 22 hits in his last 44 at bats and the 20-year-veteran has been the hottest Tiger hitter since their closing drive began.

Bill Lee relieved Tiant and Duke Sims followed Kaline's hit with a scratch single off shortstop Luis Aparicio's glove as Kaline took third.

Then Norm Cash bounced an easy grounder to the right of the mound which first baseman Carl Yastrzemski fielded, then dropped as he was ready to try and nail Kaline at the plate. Kaline crossed with the wrapup run.

Woody Fryman pitched four-hit ball before Chuck Seelbach relieved him with two out in the eighth. The save was Seelbach's 14th.

KC Sours on Lemon

KANSAS CITY (AP) - The Kansas City Royals dismissed Bob Lemon as manager Tuesday and replaced him with Jack McKeon, manager of the American League baseball club's Omaha farm team.

Owner Ewing Kauffman made the announcement at a news conference, and said Lemon would manage the Royals through their final series of the season, against the Texas Rangers, ending Wednesday night.

Kauffman, flanked by the outgoing and incoming managers and Cedric Tallis, executive vice president and general manager, said Lemon was dismissed because, "I want a young manager," and "I did not want to lose Jack McKeon from our organization."

McKeon is 41, Lemon 52.

"During the next 10 years," Kauffman said, "I expect to win at least five out of 10 pennants."

To do that, he said, it would be necessary to establish continuity of management, which Lemon would be unable to provide.

JV Football Starts Friday

By FRANK ANTOSIEWICZ

Three weeks have passed since practice began for the JV football team. Time is running out, as the opener for the team composed solely of freshmen, rapidly approaches. Friday at 2:30 will mark the initial appearance of these high school athletes as Minutemen.

Freshman Coach Bill Maxwell has been concentrating on trying to field a starting team consisting of the 22 best athletes. At the onset of practices, it seemed that everyone wanted to be an offensive back. Part of the coach's job was to convince these individuals to play where they would help the team effort the most. Rather than having seven fullbacks, he asked a few to switch to another position. This way there is depth at all positions and those that switched will have a chance to get more playing time.

Two fullbacks who switched have gained starting positions. Kevin McClay at weak guard and Robin Elkin at Defensive tackle have made the switch successfully. Others include Richie Bienia to defensive tackle, Jamie Torrance to defensive end, and Gary Pabis from quarterback to either flanker or tight end.

Due to last Friday's intra-squad scrimmage, tentative starting assignments have been decided. In this confrontation the defense mostly held the offense in check. There were a few breakaways, notably two long scoring runs by Bob Wolfe and one by Jerry Mondalto. Through the air, Mark Finnerty scored on a forty yard pass from Lee Harriman.

So far the starting offensive backfield shapes up as Lee Harriman, qb, Jerry Mondalta, hb, Bob Wolfe, fb, and Gary Warren, flb. The linemen include: Ned Deane and Mark Finnerty, ends; Tom Harris and either Walter Garwacki or Charlie Klein, tackles; McClay and Jack Santoro, guards and Don Bergeron at center.

Defensively, the front four consists of Garwacki, Elkin, Mike Greaney and Steve Pearson. Linebackers are John Penny, Neal Desmaris and Joe Andrews. The Defensive backs are: Dave Lelchook, Lee Tunon, Dave Tembly and Steve Wood.

Weekly Grid Honors

For the second straight week it came as no surprise that several UMass football players received awards for their Saturday performances. From their 28-19 upset over Harvard:

Quarterback Peil Pennington was named to the ECAC team of the week along with receiving the Golden Helmet award in Boston yesterday, symbolic of the player of the week in New England for major schools. Peil's performance against Harvard included 12 of 18 passes for 263 yards, one touchdown pass and two touchdown runs (one and eight yards).

Defensive end Tom Bradshaw was also named to the ECAC team of the week. The 6'3, 215 pound sophomore was in on four unassisted tackles, sacked the Crimson backfield for 11 yards in losses and recovered the third Harvard fumble with only a couple of minutes remaining to stop a late game drive.

Middielinebacker Doug Winslow was given an honorable mention of the ECAC team.

Sophomore defensive tackle Paul St. Onge was chosen the Yankee Conference sophomore of the week. He recovered a fumble late in the first period that led to a UMass touchdown along with seven unassisted tackles.

Tonight:
UMass vs. Harvard

The entire campus and surrounding area is invited to watch the complete game film of the UMass upset football victory over Harvard, in color, tonight in the Commonwealth room in the Student Union beginning at 7:30 p.m. Head coach Dick MacPherson will narrate the film and answer all questions. Admission is free and refreshments (cider and donuts) will be served.

Varsity M

The Varsity M Club features color highlights of the Harvard game and a scouting report on Vermont today at the Newman Center at 12:05. Tickets are available at the door and all are welcome.

Enough is Enough

The World Hockey Association is coming to town.
The New England Blades are coming to town.
The Springfield Kings are already in town.

I could go on forever, but space and time limitations are the bane of any writer. In more specific terms, the town is Springfield and the teams I've mentioned are all hockey teams. Good, bad, or indifferent, they serve to illustrate a sports tragedy.

Springfield is a small city, as pro cities go, but it's always been a good hockey city. It's always supported the Kings, even when they were the Indians. But now the WHA comes in with an exhibition (Whalers-Philadelphia on Oct. 7), the Eastern League comes in with a "temporary" franchise, and of course, the Kings remain. Somebody down there had better like hockey.

Perhaps senility is creeping up on me, and the times may have passed me by, but I remember the good old days.

I remember back in 1965, when there were just four pro hockey teams in New England; The Boston Bruins, the Providence Reds, the Kings, and the New Haven Blades.

I remember back when I saw my first hockey game, in 1959, when there were just six major league hockey teams.

I remember back in 1967, when my team, the Providence Reds, sold good seats for $2.50 and you could get into an exhibition game for $1.00.

Now count the teams in New England, count the major league teams, and check the ticket prices.

Let me list the New England franchises: the Bruins of the NHL, the Whalers of the WHA, the Providence Reds, Springfield Kings, Boston Braves, and the New Haven Nitehawks of the AHL, the New England Blades, the Rhode Island Eagles, and the Cape Cod Cubs of the Eastern League. That's nine teams. Five more than in 1965.

You can't convince me that the quality of hockey hasn't suffered serious injury when the number of franchises in an area doubles. This is not a nationwide trend. No, nationally a closer figure is a four-fold increase.

Just think of 1965. Think of Johnny Bower, Terry Sawchuk, Glenn Hall, Charlie Hodge. And then think of 1972 and immortals like Dunc Wilson, Les Binkley and Andy Brown. The facts that they are all goalies and all wear jockstraps are the only things they have in common. Talentwise they match about as well as spinach and whipped cream.

Think of those last three immortals, and then think of the prices you've got to pay to see them. I hope you haven't just eaten.

I went to see the Reds Saturday night in Providence an exhibition against Nova Scotia. I got the cheapest seats available and it cost me $3.50. That was cheap compared to the prices they're charging for the WHA exhibition in Springfield. The cheapest seat there is $5.50.

You know what happened to the Bruins, and you can imagine what the Whalers will look like. And this is major league.

Hockey is killing itself, no matter what the demand for it and the excuses for expansion, hockey is killing itself.

The weak will eventually be weeded out, from the major league on down. But the growth has been so phenomenal it will take a long time.

I love hockey, and this year as in too many years past I will spend more time concerned with it than I should. But it hurts to think that the guy I'm cheering for as my hero this year wouldn't have even come to camp seven years ago.

Maybe reduced quality is the price of progress.
Or maybe this isn't progress at all.

Trustees Pass Sarge Uncut Budget

By DON GLICKSTEIN

An uncut and unaltered University of Massachusetts budget request was handed over to the Governor yesterday despite repeated warnings by the Executive that it is presently too large.

The UMass Boad of Trustees, meeting in Amherst, ended a review of the proposed fiscal 1974 budget, a review that had been requested by Governor Francis Sargent's Secretary of Educational Affairs, Joseph M. Cronin.

The Trustees also appointed Dr. Robert W. Gage as Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs in Amherst, Gage had been Acting Vice-Chancellor since October, 1971.

In unanimously reaffirming the Board's request for a $98 million appropriation, Chairman Joseph P. Healy said that the Trustees were not interested in "power building or empire building", but were "unwilling to give up the basic pursuit for quality education".

Cronin, representing the Governor who is an ex-officio member of the Trustees, warned the Board that they should act not only as advocates of higher education, but as "guardians of the public purse".

He promised a "careful and painstaking" review of the budget proposal by the Sargent administration, intimating that the areas which would be most carefully scrutinized were student financial aid, library funding, the planned law center in Amherst, and an expansion of the Worcester Medical School faculty.

President Robert C. Wood reiterated his defense of the budget during the meeting.

Wood said that $6.6 million had previously been stricken from the budget from individual requests of the campuses, and that long-range plans for the University, such as the five-year growth plan for the Medical School, would be disrupted if there were any further cuts. Wood added that the Trustees took into consideration new wells of money that would be available to the State under revenue sharing.

University budget, he concluded, was only 3.6% of the total State budget, and that reductions from UMass would hardly make a difference in the total.

Support for the budget request from the other Trustees was blunt.

Sargent Criticized

Alan Shaler accused Governor Sargent of interfering with the process of drawing up the budget when he criticized it before it was officially recommended.

Larry Ladd, the student Trustee from Amherst, said that even the uncut proposed budget didn't provide the quality education "that UMass students deserve". His greatest fear, he added, was that the University would foster "second rate education in the name of efficiency".

A representative from the Worcester campus, Dr. Richard Saunders, defended the allocations for new faculty and for the library by noting that 800-1000 Massachusetts residents are expected to apply for 40 student spaces in the Medical School, and that a limited budget had already forced cancellations of periodical subscriptions in the library.

Defending his misgivings about the submitted budget, Secretary Cronin stated that Federal money was not yet "plentiful" and that projects such as the law school may be too costly in the long-run. He observed that there is already a surplus of lawyers, but added that no decision had been made regarding the law school.

Cronin announced that he had invited the trustees of all Massachusetts institutions of higher education for a meeting with him on October 14. Finance and other issues, including equal opportunity in higher education, will be discussed at that time.

In other action related to the budget, the Trustees voted to explore means of closer cooperation with state and community colleges, as well as private colleges, and universities. They also voted to urge all offices of the University to "undertake every economy" without endangering the educational program.

Senate Votes To Abolish Rhetoric

By ROBERT L. SCHEIER

The undergraduate student senate voted unanimously last night to recommend to the faculty senate that the Rhetoric core requirement be abolished, and asked the Rhetoric Department to develop a writing and speaking laboratory in its place.

In other action, the senate also approved the creation of an Interim Board of Directors to manage the SUG board while the undergraduate and graduate senates compromise on a reorganization of the SUG board. (See Page 3 story)

The meeting, first since the senate elections Thursday, was also the first meeting for the 15 Third World representatives whose seats were guaranteed by the senate reapportionment last month.

The Third World representatives left the meeting shortly after they were sworn in, reportedly for a meeting of the Third World students on campus. The meeting was reportedly not connected with the challenge to the reapportionment currently pending in the student judiciary.

In the vote on the Rhetoric requirement, the senate asked the department to develop courses "aimed at writing and speaking improvement" in students and the establishment of the voluntary laboratory.

Senator Nick Apostola, chairman of the senate Academic Affairs Committee, cited the committee's report on the Rhetoric requirement, saying the requirement was not meeting its goal of improving the quality of students' writing.

Currently, students are required to take two semesters of Rhetoric.

The report cited the unwillingness of many students to take the courses after taking such courses in junior high and high school, and said sections were often overcrowded and teaching assistants poorly chosen.

Apostola said if the action were approved by the faculty senate, it would probably go into effect in September, 1973.

After heated debate the senate approved the appointment of Mike Montgomery, Steve Kenny, and Brent Wilkes to the General Court of Justice.

The appointments were made after chief justice of the court, Larry Smith, said he would prefer a full court to deal with the reapportionment suit, which comes before the court tonight.

The appointments of members to the Area East and Commuter judiciaries were tabled until next week.

After a long and complicated debate, the senate voted to endorse the financial actions of the senate's executive committee over the summer, but to charge the financial and governmental affairs committee with drawing up rules for the committee to follow while the senate is not in session.

Several of the executive committee's actions had been termed illegal by a joint committee of budgets and Financial Affairs. The committee's moves under question included several fund category changes, and an approation sending senate treasurer Robert Chiller to the National Student Association conference.

Committee Works To Eliminate Poverty

By ROBERTA MARTONE

With the current complaint of apathy concerning the poverty situation in this area, one would think that somebody would get around to doing something about it. Somebody has. Namely, The Committee on Nutrition and Human Needs.

This committee works to educate the University community and neighboring areas to the problem of nutrition and poverty. Some emphasis is also placed on the hunger problem in the Mid East.

The last three years have been spent mainly in research. This year, the volunteers have begun to initiate some action.

Attempts at breakfast programs in the Greenfield area have been made. Other projects deal with work in Day Care Centers, Nutrition Centers and even campus Dining Commons.

Speakers and films are also made available by the Committee during a Poverty Workshop day.

Bruce Dembroski, who is currently in charge said this year the Committee received 1,100 dollars to pursue these projects.

Last year the Committee was sponsored by the School of Education. This year they hope to receive sponsorship from the Economics department.

A total of three University credits is earned for one semester's work on this committee.

Their office, shared with the NES program, is located in the lower level of the Campus Center. The Committee will gladly welcome new members.

Band Faces Extinction

By MDC STAFF

Unless new funds are produced from somewhere, this may be the last year for the University of Massachusetts marching band.

Bands director John Jenkins says none of the organizations on campus which had funded the band in the past have said they will be able to continue funding.

These groups have included the university administration the Athletic Department, the Fine Arts Council, the Music Department, According to Jenkins, funding for the band was split up because the band was partly an academic activity and partly a student activity.

Jenkins said the band (under Music 181) gives credit for members, is a training ground for conductors, and is also an activity for students who enjoy it.

Currently, the band is being financed by UMass and the athletic department. Of what Jenkins calls an $8,500 "austerity budget," the school pays $5,000 and the athletic department pays the rest.

He said a permanent operating budget for the band would be $10,000, and that the current budget prevents the replacement of instruments and uniforms.

Jenkins said the conductor and assistant conductor are paid by the music department.

The band, composed of 100 to 150 students, makes about six appearances a season at UMass football games.

According to Jenkins, some of the biggests costs are the writing and copying of music for the band, meals during band camp in late August before most students are back on campus, and travel for the band.

He said that the band had originally been paid for as an RSO (Recognized Student Student Organization) activity, until the Fine Arts Council took responsibility for the band.

Then, Jenkins continued, the Fine Arts Council was reorganized, and one of its first actions was to cut off funding of the band, saying it was not an appropriate use of council funds.

"So then funds were just brought together from different sources to keep it alive, which is the case now," he said.

Alumni funding had been mentioned as a possible band sponsor, but Jenkins said that was not "a good permanent solution."

"An RSO designation for the band can't be used," he added, "because the band is faculty-run, and doesn't fit RSO requirements."

He said he was willing to talk to the Student Senate about funding for the band, "but only as a faculty-run activity."

He acknowledged that the band had not been viewed as a "spokesman for students," and said the group had attempted to incorporate campus issues--such as the recent change in the sports team nickname to Minutemen--in their recent presentations.

Additional factors in the band's decline, he said, were the music department's decision last year not to require music majors to play in the band.

"The band has a lot of problems because it's multifaceted," Jenkins said. "It's not just an academic activity, not just public relations for the school, but not just a student activity."

Budget Presented Uncut To Sarge

Gage Appointed

By a unanimous vote, the Trustees approved the appointment of a new Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs, Dr. Robert Gage. Gage's predecessor, Chancellor William Randolph Bromery, hailed the appointment by saying:

"It is a significant step in building a viable and first class administrative team on this campus."

A student-faculty search committee, in existence for four months, had unanimously recommended Gage for the position. The other candidate for the position, Dr. Alfred Gourdet, had withdrawn his name from consideration last month.

Gage was the former director of the University Health Services. He was born in Concord, Massachusetts, received his B.S. from UMass in 1938 and his M.D. from the Harvard Medical School four years later.

Other Business

In other Board business:

—The name of the Department of Recreation was changed to the Department of Leisure Studies and Services.

—Undergraduate majors were approved in Afro-American Studies, Judaic Studies, and Near Eastern Studies.

—The Top of the Campus membership fee for eligible non-students was raised to $5.00.

—A group rate for the Campus Center Hotel was created: $12/double and $10/single for groups of 10 or more.

—The University counsel was authorized to initiate litigation on behalf of the Trustees. President Wood indicated that the Trustees had been asked to participate in joint action suits against term paper companies, but did not say whether or not they would do so.

—In UMass-Boston decisions, six tuition scholarships for foreign students, the UM-B Assembly constitution, and plans for a new gym and academic building were approved.

Committee Again In Session

The Committee established by Chancellor Bromery as a Search Committee for a Dean of the School of Nursing is again in session. The Committee consists of the following persons:

VPC Has Variety of Functions

By BRIAN ALLARD

Nonny Buracк co-ordinates the Valley Peace Center in the Alley and explains, "We're looking for alternatives to the basic elements of our society that are somehow responsible for our being in the messes that we're in now."

The VPC opened on October 15, 1967 with a 6000-strong rally on the Common which was estimated by local police to be Amherst's largest in thirty years. Asked about early negative opinion, Ms. Burack replied, "A goal is more important than the people around it."

Since its opening, the VPC has striven in many ways to reach its goals of American military disengagement from Vietnam, reduction of the power of the military-industrial complex, greater American reliance on a strengthened UN, re-direction of our military expenditures into social reconstruction, and dismanteling of the Selective Service System.

The Center's policy states, "We have come to see our basic purposes as trying to rationalize the principle of non-violent change in a society which has generally regarded the use of violence as perfectly suitable when the cause seemed just." Revolving around this central conviction are the VPC's multiple concerns.

Draft counseling still dominates staff members' time. The office is an open library of information on the draft and the greater interests of war and peace. A speakers' bureau is maintained, and the VPC has been a catalyst in producing public showings against the war. The VPC assists candidates for public office and raises funds for the distribution of peace information.

The VPC currently is deeply involved in the Westover civil disobediance--which continued through the summer prior to the October 2 activity--and the War Tax Resisters' Fund. Persons unwilling to pay war-related telephone and income taxes may donate them instead to this account, where they are in turn donated to the Sickle Cell Anemia Fund, and the South City Tutorial Center in Holyoke.

VPC member Beate Riester says, "The Valley Peace Center thinks of itself as an umbrella organization serving as a resource to all those concerned with international and domestic tensions. It has, in the years of its existance, truly become a center for peaceful living. The Valley Peace Center is open by membership to all--It will not speak for anyone but will and does give everyone a chance to speak for himself. It does not expect that all its members will be in agreement on all that the Valley Peace Center does, but it has experienced that all of its members are committed to non-violent change of society. We are here for the community--and we have become a part of the community, but we can only exist if the community supports us."

Veterans Will Meet To Discuss Roles

Tonight at 7:00 pm in C.C. 175 the Vietnam Veterans Against the War and concerned veterans will be meeting to discuss their roles on the university and national level.

A spokesman for the group said, "We'll be meeting to find out just where we're at...we owe it to ourselves and our brothers and sisters to maintain our support of active duty G.I.'s and all anti-war efforts."

The POW issues, local actions and the problems of returning veterans, i.e. drug rehabilitation, post-Viet Nam psychosis, heroin detoxification units etc. will be the main points of discussion.

According to a spokesman, "the administration, from Nixon to the V.A. wants to forget that we exist and that a G.I. is a human being, not a tool to be used and discarded. We're here to keep reminding them. If you care, be there."

Grad Senate Passes SUG Board Revision

By MDC STAFF

The Graduate Senate passed a modified version of the new SUG Board constitution last night, doing away with the current SUG Board and creating an interim governing board.

The interim board approved by the Undergrad Senate too, will run the Campus Center/Student Union Complex until the differences between the grad and undergraduate bills, some 20 grad senate ammendments, are worked out in conference between the senates.

Grad Senate Vice-President John Muller said the interim board will have four undergraduates and one graduate student on it.

SGA president Larry Ladd said he and Graduate Senate President Vida Ross would present the Senates' action to Chancellor Bromery and Vice-Chancellor for Administrative Affairs Thomas Campion this morning.

Ladd said they would ask the chancellor to acknowledge the senates' passage of the reorganization bill and the joint conference committee formed to resolve the senates' differences.

Ladd added he expected the chancellor to acknowledge the act and said this would make the current SUG Board, "illegitimate" and create the interim board.

The graduate senate ammendments include changing the number of signatures needed for a referendum on any SUG Board action from 25% to 10% of the student body and taking voting rights away from the three professional members of the Board.

It would also apportion all 21 undergraduate seats according to the population of the campus residential areas. The undergraduate version had two thirds of the seats being apportioned.

The major aim of the revision of the SUG Board was to extend and strengthen Senate control over the Board.

The Grad. Senate spent considerable time discussing Parliamentary procedure and arguing over methods of revising the SUG Board constitution. It was finally agreed to enter into a Committee of the Whole. This committee (actually the entire Grad. Senate) discussed each amendment separately and then presented the revised document to the Senate for ratification.

Ladd will be interviewing today from 11:00 to 12:00 noon and 1:00 to 2:30 pm. for SUG positions.

57 VD Program On Three Days

"Don't Give a Dose to the One You Love Most" is the unique theme song for "VD BLUES", an equally unique program on Channel 57 Monday (8:00 pm), Tuesday (10:00 pm) and Wednesday (8:30 pm), October 9, 10, 11.

The special examining venereal disease - which has reached epidemic proportions primarily among people in the 18-25 age group--will feature a number of musical talents as well as original sketches by several major contemporary dramatists. Dick Cavett will host the show.

Arlo Guthrie will introduce the previously unpublished song "A Child of VD", written by his late father Woody Guthrie.

"Dr. Hook and the Medicine Show", one of the nation's top rock groups, will perform composer Shel Silverstein's theme song. The group's recent hit recording "Sylvia's Mother" has sold over a million copies.

Fred Ebb and John Kander, composers of several Broadway shows including "Cabaret" have written a new song especially for the program entitled "What Are You Going To Do Now?" And Luther Henderson, dance arranger and conductor for numerous stage musicals, including "No, No Nanette" and "Purlie", will provide the incidental music for "VD BLUES".

Broadway stars James Coco and Robert Drivas are among the featured performers during the hour-long color special. In a major dramatic segment they play the most unusual roles of their careers--a pair of gonorrhea and syphilis germs.

The off-beat sketch, written by Israel Horovitz, begins on a humorous note but develops into a frightening depiction of how the diseases work their torments on the human body as the two germs vie for control of the womb.

Another sketch will dramatize the dilemma of a couple in their forties who, too embarrassed to go to their private physician, seek the anonymity of treatment in a clinic; another segment focuses on the VD problem among homosexuals.

The program was made possible by a grant from 3M Company. Several national professional organizations are cooperating with public television stations throughout the country to supplement the program with local shows and community projects. Among these groups are the American Academy of Family Physicians, the American Osteopathic Association, the National Education Association, the National Council of Churches and the National Association of Retail Druggists.

The special was produced at WNET/13 under the guidance of Don Fouser, formerly with the Emmy-winning series, "The Great American Dream Machine." "The show not only will dramatize the human predicaments of the individuals faced with venereal disease," said Fouser, "but will also impart to viewers such vital information as how the disease is diagnosed, cured, and prevented, the difference between the various forms of the disease, and what can happen if VD is left untreated."

After this national broadcast on PBS, Channel 57 will air a local VD special designed to familiarize the public with health facilities available in western Massachusetts, i.e. where to go for help, how much it costs, what treatment is used. This portion of the program will be different all three nights and will involve area medical authorities. Telephone lines will be open to the public for calls about venereal disease after the programs.

New Bureau Provides Speakers

By SHELLEY LAUZON

Speakers Bureau 1972 is a recent addition to the UMass community. Organized this past summer by the Office of Public Affairs in Whitmore, the bureau provides a list of more than eighty speakers who are available to civic, social, and academic communities or organizations throughout the state.

The rationale behind the program, according to Arthur Lahait of the Public Affairs Office, is the presence of many people on campus who have specific interests and fields of expertise. As a state university, "we have a certain obligation to make these people available to the Commonwealth," he said.

The bureau had been considered for some time, but action was not begun until last winter, when inquiries were sent out to faculty members and staff to obtain an idea of interest in such a program. These people were then asked for topics they would be able to speak about.

In addition to the eighty speakers listed by the bureau, qualified speakers are also available for topics which are not covered in the list. Requests are made to the bureau, which then will attempt to find a speaker. A special section of the bureau lists speakers from the Massachusetts Cooperative Extension Service, directed by the University's College of Food and Natural Resources. There are regional and county offices throughout the state, and speakers can be engaged through these offices.

Fees for speaking engagements are left up to the sponsoring organization and the speaker. Some organizations make it a practice to pay expenses and/or give an honorarium, Lahait said, although it is not required.

The bureau's only expenses have come from the cost of printing the brochures. If funding does come in the future, Lahait said that hopefully the bureau will be able to pay travelling expenses and other necessary fees for speakers.

The Public Affairs Office will make another request to the university community this year in an effort to expand the program, according to Lahait.

Topics listed by the bureau include Black drama, Eastern European Literature, Art, Music education, Nixon's economic policies, U.S. government priorities, Women's liberation, Mass Media, Sensitivity training and small group discussion, Health programs, Nuclear power, Environmental control, Clinical psychology, Higher Education, Consumer economics, Parliamentary procedure, American society, World food problems, Vietnam, Oceanography, and International student exchange programs.

Student Attorney To Be Studied

By J.L. ALTMAN

A committee has been set up by the Student Senate to evaluate the office of General Counsel to Students and to make recommendations concerning its continued existence.

The committee was appointed in accordance with article V, section 3B of the Student Government Association bylaws to "prepare a written report on the operation of the office and the character and fitness of the incumbent (attorney)".

The reevaluation does not concern itself exclusively with the professional performance of Richard Howland, now in his third year as Students' Attorney, whose contract was renewed in March. As a matter of form he is reevaluated in regards to his professional performance annually when his contract comes up for renegotiation.

"This is a natural process, like evaluating a professor who comes up for tenure," said committee member Samuel Goldman, an attorney and a professor at the School of Business Administration.

It was the general consensus of the senate last spring that the General Counsel's office be studied to determine whether or how its relationship to the campus community had changed in the past two years. The office was instituted in the spring of 1970 to provide prepaid legal assistance to any student.

The committee would study the question of whether a Students' Attorney is still needed, or whether an additional attorney, besides Mr. Howland, be hired.

At present he is involved on a much larger scale of legal activity, and putting in more hours, than his contract calls for, according to Senate Speaker John Hogan. Hogan added that a para-legal assistant was hired by the senate two weeks ago at $4,000 a year.

The committee will begin meeting within two weeks. Its recommendations will be submitted at the end of the current semester.

Berkshire Faculty Fight Oath

PITTSFIELD, Mass. (AP) - Sixteen Berkshire Community College instructors have retained a lawyer to fight a requirement that they sign a loyalty oath to the state.

The college administration has given the 16 two days to sign the oath or face loss of pay.

The oath law was passed in 1967 and enforced until 1968 when it was contested in U.S. District Court by a Boston State Hospital researcher.

Finally, in April, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled the oath was constitutional. Since then state agencies have been requiring employes to sign the oath, which states they will uphold the U.S. and state constitutions and will oppose any attempt to overthrow the government.

A spokesman in UMass President Robert C. Wood's Boston office said recently, "We have more than 5,000 teachers, faculty members, staff and part-time student employes hired since 1969 who have not signed the oath. Most of them are signing, but many are grumbling about it."

Several state agencies, including the state college system, are reportedly not enforcing the oath at present.

In The Nation And The World

Population Limit Urged

WASHINGTON (AP) — Reporting under government contract, a scientific panel Wednesday urged that the United States begin limiting its population and its consumption of resources.

It said the nation, already heavily dependent on foreign raw materials, must shift its industrial base to materials domestically plentiful, or face a disastrous minerals crisis within decades.

The panel needled its employer, the National Commission on Materials Policy, accusing it of ignoring the demand factor in the nation's growing supply-demand crisis in energy and raw materials.

It noted that the commission's interim report of last April "nowhere alludes to review, analysis, or restraint of demand."

But the panel, drawn from the National Research Council of the National Academy of Sciences, said "it is clear that the difficulties imposed by growing U.S. and world populations pervade all other resource issues..."

It added that "there can be no effective national or international materials policy" that evades the relationship between population, per-capita demand and environmental impact.

Thus, in milder terms, the U.S. scientific panel aligned itself with the general thrust of the "Club of Rome" report and British scientists' "Blueprint for Survival", both published last January.

The Club of Rome, a group of international scientists and economists, predicted the collapse of modern industrial society unless population growth and material consumption are stabilized within the next few decades.

The U.S. National Commission on Materials Policy was appointed in 1971 with the mission of recommending a national materials policy to the president and Congress by June 30, 1973.

The commission issued an interim report identifying at least 36 issues in the area of materials supply problems, but it noted the list might be incomplete, and it contracted with the National Research Council for another study of issues.

That study, now published, said "there was but small support in the panel for the view that market forces alone will solve the foreseeable problems."

It said appropriate governmental incentives and controls should be applied to increase production to meet the needs of unavoidable population growth, but at the same time convert the economy in the long run to a no-growth stability.

The report said the United States is already heavily dependent, and is becoming ever more dependent, on foreign sources for its raw materials, adding that this "would provide increasing opportunity for international conflict."

Attempts to increase domestic production of minerals, it said, wold mean producing "ever-larger quantities of metals obtained from ever-leaner deposits...

"Conservational measures are needed, not only to stretch our resources but to restore, protect, and perpetuate a livable human habitat.

"The numbers of humans occupying that habitat, moreover, must be limited to numbers it can comfortably sustain and their individual consumptions of materials must be kept within supportable limits."

Senate Shelves Welfare Reform

WASHINGTON (AP)-The Senate voted Wednesday to test three welfare-reform plans rather than put any of them into effect, thereby apparently shelving the subject for years.

It adopted 46 to 40 an amendment of Sen. William V. Roth Jr., R.-Del., to knock out of the Social Security-welfare bill the Workfare plan and proceed instead with a test of it and two rival plans.

Then it defeated 50 to 35 an attempt to nullify the Eoth peoposal and adopt instead a Family Assistance Plan quite similar to that sponsored by President Nixon.

Republican Leader Hugh Scott, of Pennsylvania, backed this amendment, declaring it was very close to the administration plan.

But Sen. Russell B. Long, D-La., floor manager for the bill, said White House liaison men had told him Nixon opposed this effort.

With the prolonged fight over welfare reform apparently over although the basic issue remains unsettled, it seemed likely the Senate would pass the massive bill by the end of the week.

It contains dozens of Social Security, Medicare and welfare benefit provisions.

The Roth amendment could delay for five to eight years any action to AFDC is by far the largest of the welfare programs; its rolls have tripled in the last decade.

The vote was a defeat for the administration, which strongly opposed the test plan.

It also was a defeat for the conservative majority on the Finance Committee which drafted workfare.

Long and Sen. Wallace F. Bennett, R-Utah, the chief sponsors of workfare, said they had hoped to get it through but had decided the Senate would not adopt it at this time.

Therefore, the supported the Roth amendment.

Elliot L. Richardson, secretary of health, education and welfare, said it would take a year to devise the tests, at least two years to conduct them, the amendment would allow up to four, a year to evaluate the results and

The tests would be supervised by HEW, which would reach agreements with the states on them. The states actually operate welfare. A test could cover an entire state or a part of one.

Besides workfare, the tests would cover Nixon's Family Assistance Plan and a liber lized version of it sponsored by Sen. Abraham A. Ribicoff, D-Conn.

The workfare plan would require many parents on the AFDC plan to take jobs with a new federal agency or lose payments.

Nixon's plan would fix a guaranteed annual income of at least $2,400 for a family of our and for the first time provide supplementary payments to the working poor.

Ribicoff's plan, defeated Monday, would set guaranteed income at $2,600 and give greater aid to the working poor.

Protestant Leader Fired On

(AP) — Willam Craig, leader of Northern Ireland's militant Protestant Vanguard Movement, narrowly escaped an assassination attempt on Wednesday.

Three bullets from a speeding auto raked Craig's car as he drove from Belfast to his law firm's offices in nearby Lurgan.

Craig, 48, blamed the attack on the Irish Republican Army — IRA — and said: "I don't know what they wanted..whether to kill a loyalist leader, or produce a loyalist backlash."

It happened on an overpass.

Craig said shots rang out as his car was passed by another driven by a man and carrying a female passenger.

One bullet punched through the trunk of the former provincial Cabinet minister's car and lodged in the back seat. Two others drilled through a front fender.

He said later: "I am very lucky — I know that. This is the third attempt on my life, and the closest." Craig's home was hit by a gasoline bomb in 1968. The following year, his children found a bomb in the garden.

As head of the Vanguard movement — which claims it commands a private army of 200,000 volunteers — Craig is one of the most powerful leaders of the North's million-member Protestant community.

Had the attack been successful, it would almost certainly have set off Protestant reaction against the 500,000 Roman Catholics in the province.

Craig was dismissed in 1968 as home affairs minister in the now-suspended Unionist government for his hard-line views.

Craig said the attack would not hinder his campaign to end direct British rule of Northern Ireland — imposed last March — and restore a Protestant-dominated provincial government.

Since Sen. Jack Barnhill, a Protestant, was killed last year by guerrillas who then blew up his home, Ulster's politicians have lived under the constant threat of assassination. Earlier this year, John Taylor, another former provincial Cabinet minister, was seriously wounded by gunmen.

Roman Catholic legislators have also been fired on, presumably by Protestant extremists.

Most politicians now carry pistols.

Craig said he had a gun in his car but cold not reach for it in time.

William Whitelaw, Britain's administrator in Northern Ireland, appealed to both feuding communitis to help track down backstreet assassination squads operating in Belfast.

He spoke after the killers claimed two more victims early Wednesday raising their death toll this year to at least 75.

His appeal was an attempt to break through the wall of silence in the Catholic and Protestant enclaves where the killers find sanctuary.

Latest to die were:

Protestant Geoffrey Hamilton, 23, a bank clerk who disappeared after driving a group of newsmen to the scene of an explosion Tuesday night. He was found Wednesday shot in the head.

Roman Catholic James McCartan, a forklift operator. His body, the head hooded and the hands trussed, was found in the Ballymacarett area of the capital.

The deaths brought to at least 592 the fatality toll in three years of sectarian bloodletting.

Mrs. Irving Allowed To Leave Switzerland

ZURICH, Switzerland (AP) — Mrs. Clifford Irving has been allowed to leave Switzerland pending her trial on charges of fraud and forgery in connection with her husband's faked autobiography of Howard Hughes, police sources said today.

She left here for the couple's home on the Spanish island of Ibiza on Tuesday, accompanied by their boys, Nedsky, 4, and Barney, 2.

Swiss-born Mrs. Irving returned from New York in September after serving a two-month term in New York to surrender to interrogation by the Zurich district attorney, Peter Veleff.

Veleff said it would take several more months to work out a formal indictment and her trial was not likely to take place before the end of this year.

Viet Civilians Disappear; F111s Back

North Vietnamese bicycle through the streets of Hanoi, at top, past a bulletin board with a picture of Ho Chi Minh, recently. At bottom, a double line of motorbikes are parked along a street in Saigon. The capitals of the two Vietnams that have been at war with each other for nearly twenty years share one quality. It is fear. (AP)

SAIGON (AP)-At least 100 civilians were reported missing Wednesday in the aftermath of Viet Cong attacks on two fishing villages along South Vietnam's northern coast. Whether they were abducted or had defected was not known, field sources said.

The United States reported that F111 swing-wing jets returned to war action Wednesday after being withdrawn from combat because of the loss of one last week over North Vietnam.

The U.S. Command ordered stepped-up B52 raids in the Saigon region, where an upsurge in battlefield activity in recent days has marked the latest Communist command "high point."

American bombing raids were cut by more than half because of bad weather resulting from Typhoon Lorna, which was dissipating in the mountains after crossing the coast about midnight Tuesday.

The Thailand-based U.S. fighter-bombers flew only 120 raids over the North on Tuesday, compared to 280 the previous day, the command reported.

The U.S. Command in Saigon had refused to confirm or deny reports by informants that the F111, which came back to Indochina last week, had been withdrawn from a combat role after the loss of one in the North on last Thursday. But the Pentagon in Washington acknowledged that the F111s had been withdrawn and said they returned to combat on Wednesday with new attacks on North Vietnam.

Following the Washington report, a U.S. Command spokesman finally did acknowledge that the F111s did return to combat but added he had no immediate report on their mission.

In another development, the nuclear-powered aircraft carrier Enterprise arrived off Vietnam for another tour of duty, replacing the older carrier Hancock. Despite the bad weather which extended well south of the demilitarized zone, officials said, some of the Enterprise's 75 jets flew raids in South Vietnam.

The exchange of ships left the 7th Fleet's carrier force at six-where it has stood since President Nixon beefed up the U.S. air strength in Inodchina in the early stages of Hanoi's general offensive six months ago.

Associated Press correspondent Holger Jensen reported from the northern region that the coastal villages of Xuyen Tho and Xuyen Phuoc, which together have about 10,000 people, were attacked by Viet Cong sappers before dawn.

About 18 civilians and two militia soldiers were killed and six civilians wounded, with eight of the enemy attackers also slain. But at least 100 other villagers were listed as missing and local officials were trying to determine whether they had been kidnapped or had accompanied the invaders willingly.

The Viet Cong frequently abduct civilians to work.

The two villages are on an important river estuary near Hoi An, the Quang Nam Province capital about 20 miles south of Da Nang. The area is one where Viet Cong activity remains frequent and where Saigon government security has never been strong.

Hoi An itself was hit by a 13-round mortar attack simultaneously with the assaults on the two villages, and six civilians and one soldier were wounded.

Although considerable enemy activity is still being reported in the north, senior U.S. commanders say the enemy forces there are now largely in a defense status following months of heavy fighting and the emphasis is now on the 3rd military region which includes Saigon and 11 surrounding provinces.

For several weeks B52s have been flying raids as close as 25 miles to Saigon, most of them aimed at destroying supply stockpiles put in place by enemy forces for later attacks.

Officers said Wednesday these strikes had been intensified because of good results from the earlier ones.

Allied officials consider Saigon to be under no threat of infantry assault, but concede that it is vulnerable to rockets and terror and sabotage by the enemy.

Recent days have seen an increase in localized attacks in the area around Saigon.

The U.S. Command said in delayed reports that three American helicopters were hit by enemy ground fire while flying in support missions for South Vietnamese troops.

Two were slightly damaged and the third crashed and was destroyed. Three crewmen were wounded in the incidents, the command reported.

Asbestos Linked To Cancers

NEW YORK (AP)-Asbestos, already linked with lung cancer in insulation workers who smoke, was further linked Wednesday with cancers of the esophagus, stomach, colon and rectum.

A substantial number of deaths over what would be expected from these cancers were found in a study of insulation workers in the United States and Canada covering the period from 1943 through 1971.

The report came from Dr. Irving J. Selikoff of the Mount Sinai School of Medicine in New York and Dr. E. Cuyler Hammond and Herbert Seidman of the American Cancer Society.

Their report was presented to a meeting of a working group formed to assess the biological effects of asbestos, at the International Agency for Research on Cancer, World Health Organization, in Lyon, France. It was made available in New York by the American Cancer Society.

In 1964 and 1965, Selikoff and Hammor. reported what they call "the then unexpected finding of a moderate excess of qastrointestinal cancer among New York insulation workers." The numbers, however, were too small to permit firm conclusions.

"We have now collected additional data," the scientists reported, "and these remain in the same direction, and very much at the same level of excess, two or three times the expected deaths."

The researchers said a similar excess of deaths from cancer of the esophagus, stomach and colon and rectum has been found among insulation workers in Belfast.

"Moreover," they continued, "the finding may be of considerable theorectical importance, in view of the dearth of useful hypotheses on the etiology cause of gastrointestinal cancer in general, and cancer of the colon and rectum in particular."

Selikoff and Hammond have reported previously that employment in asbestos insulation work greatly increases the risk of lung cancer in cigarette smokers, but it is uncertain if the risk is increased among nonsmokers.

Their studies have found that approximately one death in five among asbestos insulation workers in the United States is the result of lung cancer, what they call "an extraordinary incidence." Gastrointestinal cancer was more than doubled and mesothelioma caused 7 per cent of all the deaths.

Mesothelioma is a tumor of the lining of the chest or abdomen. Selikoff warned last Friday, at the Seventh National Cancer Conference in Los Angeles, that millions of Americans who worked in shipyards in the early 1940s, Selikoff said, and who may have been directly or indirectly exposed to asbestos. They were urged to get periodic medical checkups, including chest X-rays.

Scientists believe the mesothelioma is caused primarily by exposure to asbestos particles, which lodge in the tissues and the body, remaining there indefinitely. Selikoff also has expressed concern about the exposure of the general urban population exposed to asbestos from environmental sources such as asbestos-lined air-conditioning ducts and brake linings.

Alabama Prison Termed "Barbarious"

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (AP) - Conditions are so bad in Alabama prison hospitals, a federal judge said Wednesday, that convicts perform surgery and rags are used as substitutes for bandages.

U.S. District Court Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr. ordered prison authorities to take immediate steps to provide adequate medical care for all inmates and also to put rigid controls on narcotics to stop "drug abuse" within the penitentiary walls.

Johnson, in a 12-page decision and an accompanying four-page order spelling out what prison officials must do, said penal author ties "have clearly abused their discretion" in denying proper medical treatment to the almost 4,000 inmates in custody.

Neglect of the basic medical needs, he said, "could justly be called barbarous and shocking to the conscience."

State Prison Commissioner L. B. Sullivan was out of town and unavailable for comment on the court's findings.

"Unsupervised prisoners, without formal training, regularly pull teeth, screen sick call patients, dispense as well as administer medication, including dangerous drugs, take X-rays, suture and perform minor surgery," the decision said.

"Not only are prescription drugs frequently unavailable, especially those for relieving pain," Johnson said, "but simple items such as aspirin and antacids have been lacking in some prisons for weeks at a time."

Johnson also criticized the absence of psychiatric treatment for psychotic and other mentally disturbed inmates.

Hub Fire Dept. Sued For Discrimination

BOSTON (AP) — The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People filed a U.S. District Court suit Wednesday charing the Boston Fire Department and the Civil Service Commission blacks and people with Spanish surnames.

Of Boston's 2,100 firemen, said Jack E. Robinson, president of the Boston NAACP, 15 are black and one is Spanish surnamed.

"The discriminatory underrepresentation of the plaintiffs has adversely affected the performance of the fire departments in black and Spanish surnamed communities in Massachusetts to the detriment of citizens of those communities."

The suit asks that the fire department be ordered to alternately hire one white and one black or Spanish surnamed person until the fire department reflects the racial composition of the city.

"There are 10,000 firemen in Massachusetts," Robinson said, "and less than 30 of this number are black or Spanish surnamed.

"Since 1968, there have been 400 men hired by the Boston Fire Department, and only two have been black and no Spanish surnamed persons."

Robinson said the hiring picture "is one so devastatingly shocking that it is a national disgrace."

Agnew Debates Young Hecklers

Vice President Spiro Agnew shakes hands with the crowd as side-by-side supporters with different points of view hold up signs in the background. The vice president attended the annual Sugar Cane Festival at New Iberia, La.

FORT WAYNE, Ind., Oct. 3 — Vice President, Agnew abandoned his restrained recitations today for a snappy, off-the-cuff debate with youthful hecklers.

At a lunch-hour outdoor rally here, he responded to their antiwar slogan with a series of extemporaneous rebukes that surprised and delighted a predominantly pro-Republican audience of several thousand Hoosiers.

Glaring out across the crowd to the tiny band of protesters standing beneath a large antiwar banner, the Vice President called them "bleeding hearts" and dismissed them with a disgusted wave of his hand as unrepresentative of the country.

His pungent retorts sharply contrasted with the established rhythms of his campaign which have been characterized until lately by a soft-voiced celebration of the Nixon Administration's record.

Moreover, his free-wheeling reaction to the oral interference with his speech elated one staff member who had previously appraised his rhetoric this year as "uniformly uninspiring."

At Trip's Beginning

The repartee between Mr. Agnew and the hecklers, many of whom identified themselves as members of the Vietnam Veterans Against the War, came on the first stop in a three-day trip that will take him into Montana, South Dakota, Nebraska, Iowa and West Virginia.

Speaking to a shirtsleeved crowd, the Vice President had offered his usual campaign fare — a pitch for local Republican candidates and praise for the President — and had just begun his litany on the health of the American economy when he was interrupted by a shout from the back of the audience:

"How many bombs were dropped today?"

Mr. Agnew paused, looked sternly toward the challenge, and began.

"I will get to Vietnam," he said. "I'm glad you brought Vietnam up, because I'd certainly not want to go away without responding to the thoughtless cries of 'How many bombs did you drop today?'"

The Vice Presdent told the protesters that President Johnson's cessation of bombing had served only to motivate the North Vietnamese into an escalation of the war.

He said that if the North Vietnamese "want to stop this war, they have only one thing to do: get those thousands and thousands of troops out of South Vietnam, sit down at the bargaining table under international supervision, have a cease fire, allow the international community to witness a free election so that the South Vietnamese people can determine whom they want to govern them."

Campaign '72

McG Says People Will Force Nixon Out of Hiding

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) — Sen. George McGovern said Wednesday that the American people are going to ask why President Nixon isn't discussing election issues and force the chief executive "to come out of hiding."

The Democratic presidential nominee made the prediction as he ran through a busy campaign schedule in Buffalo expressing confidence that his uphill campaign couldn't be moving "much better than it is." But he conceded fears that fund shortages could force cutbacks on radio and television appearances.

And he told a mostly black audience in this heavily Polish-American city that federal jobs should be allocated "in reasonable relationship to each group's percentage of the population" while noting that would apply to white ethnic groups as well as to blacks.

Sen. Edmund S. Muskie joined McGovern for the day's appearances in Buffalo, which included a visit to a senior citizens' center in a black area, a downtown rally and a speech ina Polish-American section of the state's second largest city.

In a television interview with station WBEN, McGovern said that "my own campaign couldn't move much better than it is," adding that "I think sooner or later Mr. Nixon will realize that he'll have to come out of hiding, that he can't sit there behind the White House wall on his Gallup Poll and expect the American people to re-elect him."

Asked what would make Nixon do this, McGovern said, "If I continue to get out among the people day after day and the President hides in the White House and sends his lackeys out across the country to try to distort my record, sooner or later people are going to say: Why doesn't Nixon himself come out in the open?"

A short while earlier, in a question-and-answer session with local editors, McGovern said, "We're at a critical point now where we have to raise substantial amounts of money in the next few days to keep our radio and television commitments."

But when asked about this on the television interview, McGovern said that so far he has been able to keep his media advertising on schedule and he expects to meet a schedule that calls for an acceleration of it in the five weeks remaining before election.

McGovern started the day by paying a brief visit to Niagara Falls and posed for pictures on a spot he said he had last visited 32 years ago as a high school senior.

Orchard Hill Offers Students More

By CHRISTINA ROSSOMANDO

"The past year has been one of transition for the Orchard Hill Area Government," explained OHAG president Roy Perdue in a recent interview. "We are transforming from a type of neophyte body to a professional type organization respected by both students and administrators."

On the hill, Perdue explained, both academic problems and student affairs "are beholden to the students". OHAG has always insisted on having a voice in policy-making and hiring of hill staff and personnel. Members of OHAG served on the Search Committee to select a new master for the hill when the former master announced his resignation last September.

The hill offers its own program of academic courses in the classroom lounges in each of the area's four dormitories. Several one and three credit courses and one-credit student taught colloquia are offered in addition to sections of University core courses.

OHAG has developed a number of core facilities to enhance its academic program. The Photo Lab/Darkroom in Webster House is used for the two photography courses offered on the hill. A new ceramics course will use the Ceramics facility in Grayson House open for use for the first time this semester. Students with computer science courses may use the Teletype room in Field, which has three terminals connected to the University's computing center. A library and reading room in Dickinson House subscribes to nearly 150 periodicals and provides residents with a quiet place to study.

Last year a public address system was purchased and used primarily for the Mirkwood Coffee Houses, presented every two weeks on the hill. A permanent projection screen was installed in the main lounge of Webster House. Using that and the adjoining library as a projection booth, the loung became a good facility for showing the increasing number of films presented on the hill.

Perdue cited OHAG plans for the development of a media center on the hill. Due to the administration's new policies concerning the loan of audio-visual equipment, Perdue explained that it is difficult for a residential area to obtain projectors and other aids for non-academic purposes.

Plans are being made to purchase a 16mm projector and tape recorder for projects such as the Orchard Hill documentary shown at Freshman Orientation, he said. Also, an 8mm projector and black and white processing center for a possible Orchard Hill film course may also be added, Perdue said.

The Orchard Hill newspaper, the Sage, is being printed in offset for the first time this semester. It is hoped that the media center will eventually include an offset printing press and Xerox machine, said Perdue.

Perdue explained that the core facilities are just beginning to be publicized and many Orchard Hill residents are not fully aware of the facilities available to them. It will be the job of the floor deputies of the OHAG to make the programs and facilities known to the students.

"We hope that each deputy will get around and talk to people on a personal basis. Each deputy should know what to listen for and how to sense problems on his floor. He should also be fully aware of what resources are available to solve the problems," explained Perdue. "The president must fully analyze what he expects each deputy of area government to do. By being specific in what we expect we can make the deputy confident of what his job is, and he can become more skilled in identifying the problems of the residents of his floor."

Perdue, a senior math major, is currently serving his second term as president of the Orchard Hill Area Government. A hill resident for four years, he served on the house councils of Webster and Dickinson Houses and was editor of the Sage for two years.

"I've always liked working with groups of people," he said. "The key to being a good leader is learning how to delegate responsibility. It is important to keep people busy in order to hold their interest." Perdue also feels that working in area government is a learning experience. Along with the other officers of OHAG he is confident tiat this year will be a good year for the group.

The other officers of OHAG are: Frank McDonough, vice president; Neal Schwartz, treasurer; and Cindy McGrath, secretary and editor of the Sage.

JOE, Parole Agents Meet

By JOYCE KOSOFSKY

In a meeting of the Juvenile Opportunities Extension (JOE), approximately 30 members of the Holyoke parole volunteer branch of the JOE program met this week with regional parole agents to discuss their problems and ideas.

Priscilla Lanson, regional coordinator of the Dept. of Youth Services (DYS) started the discussion by expressing her apprecation at the involvement of the volunteer force. These volunteers, according to her, relieve many pressures of understaffed, overworked parole agents in the area. What these volunteers are doing are becoming a friend to kids on parole and in detention centers, taking them out, talking to them, etc. Francis Hammel, also of the DYS, noted that the UMass students are not volunteers, not Big Brothers and Sisters, but advocates in helping the kids in the community "to find out what and where their needs are."

Ms. Lanson stressed the importance of volunteers not alienating the kids in Holyoke from the parole agents. "We're not ogres," she said, "but we do have a job to do. There are too many authority figures in their lives now, the kids would rather have a friend."

Of the many problems in this type of work, Ms. Lanson felt that getting to know the kids was the most difficult. She explained that perhaps it is because it is impossible for any of the volunteers to obtain case histories of the youths from the courts, that many of the kids test out the volunteers before starting a friendship, sometimes their motivation was low, and that some kids have a negative attitude to the volunteers because of past cases with some of the parole agents. The best way, claimed Ms. Lanson, is just to "give the kids a chance."

There is no formula for instant success in this program. Jerry Paris, of the Boston Office of the DYS told the group of volunteers that working with these kids is not easy, that there is a lot of hard work involved which unfotunately, is just too much to do for the already staffed parole agents.

Ideally, an agent should have no more than 15 "parolees" but this is not the case.

Quad Government Holds First Meeting

By STEVE RUGGLES

The Northeast Area Government held its first meeting of the academic year Tuesday night in Crabtree House, in order to familiarize new representatives with the workings of the Area-type government.

Six proposals concerning funding activities were presented to the Council which will be considered in committees until next week at which time final action upon them will be taken.

An $89 proposal was presented for the purchase of special tools and equipment for use by the Arts and Crafts colloquia. After the colloquia, the proposals sponsor that a craft shop could be established in the Quad.

Peer Sex Education councelors have submitted two proposals totaling $525 for the purpose of showing a series of films, and sponsoring several speakers. The PSE proposals also include $75 for a basic sex-education library, and also a certain amount for "services rendered".

The Silversmithing colloquia has requested fifteen dollars for the purpose of buying an initial supply of silver.

Last year, students in the Quad ran a series of free films in Worcester Dining Commons. This year, a proposal for a trial continuation of this program has been entered. The initial cost to the area would be $100.

A sum of $245 has been proposed for use in the Yoga colloquia for "services rendered" in teaching the course.

In other business, Steve Dimock, Northeast Area Director, spoke to the Council about the budget alloted to the Quad by the Student Senate and other funds which are available to it.

The Student Senate allocated the area $4.5 per student. Fifteen percent of this total is put in the Student Senate Contingency Fund, so the budget alloted to the Quad comes to be $4,490. In previous years, the area has had to pay $1600 per annum out of their alloted budget for lobby phones in the ten dorms; such is not the case this year.

Denise Magnell, Student Senate Communications Coordinator, explained the Senate is sponsoring workshops on Area Government to be held on October 21-22 in the Campus Center, and invited all representatives to attend.

Officers of this year's Northeast Govt. include Dana Margent, President from Crabtree; Mike Duffey, Vice President frm Dwight; George Makyrs, Treasurer from Crabtree; and Kathy Varner, Secretary from Lewis.

Northeast Area Govt. meetings are being tentatively held every Tuesday at 7:00 P.M. A permanent meeting place has not yet been ascertained.

Dimock reminded area residents that the Office of Student Affairs is in the basement of Leach House. This includes the Area Govt.. Office, the office of Bob Fowler, (Asst. Area Director and Dimock's office, as well as the Area Office. The telephone number of all of these offices is 5-0290, he added.

ACTION Recruiters on Campus

By IMELDA ROJAK

"At least 7,000 volunteers are needed for the Peace Corps and Vista this year." So say the representatives of Action who are at the Campus center this week.

Vista and the Peace Corps are looking for people with special skills or trades. "Between Vista and the Peace Corps together there is almost no skill that is not needed," agreed the representatives. People who have experience in agriculture are especially needed. "About 10,000 people starve to death every day," said one ex-Peace Corps volunteer.

The representatives, who are ex-Peace Corps and Vista volunteers, will be at the Campus Center Concourse from 9:00 to 4:00 through Thursday and Friday morning. They have information and pamphlets to distribute.

If you miss them, you may call collect, (716) 546-4900 (Federal Building, Rochester, N.Y., 14614), or (800) 424-8580 for information.

JOE Meeting

In this area, a parole agent has anywhere from 15-50 kids making it virtually impossible for him to give every kid the attention that is needed. With this great amount of children, the parole agent can only manage the parolees, rather than see each one.

This is where the Holyoke volunteers fit in.

If You've Lost It....

The University Lost & Found is over-flowing with jackets, books, glasses and keys. Because we have started a new policy of picking-up lost articles from most academic buildings, once a week, we now have more lost articles than ever. We have called 186 people so far this semester who have lost either a wallet or a notebook. A few students have inquired and retrieved glasses or keys, but because we have no way of identifying over 500 remaining articles, we are pleading with you to come to Lost & Found and identify these if they are yours. Also, you can be almost certain of recovering anything which is identified. So, please write your name in your books, notebooks and even your glass case.

Lost & Found is open from 8 AM to 8 PM Monday thru Saturday and from 1-8 PM on Sunday. We are located at the bottom of the escalator in the campus center.

Contrary to all previous notices, the first meeting of the modular course on Public Alternative Schools will meet TONIGHT, Thursday, October 5, at 7:45 p.m. in 204 SBA. Come see Newt Clark, Roy Nichols, and Bob Mackin in "Three Teachers In Search Of A School." Everyone invited. Bring your own tomatoes.

Action Condoned

Last night the Graduate Senate finally passed its amended version of a joint act of both Student Senates that will reorganize the Student Union Governing Board, making it more directly accountable to students. They also passed a bill calling for an interim Board consisting of four undergraduates and one graduate that will last for no more than thirty days until a new Board can be appointed, the new Board being screened by a panel under the auspices of the Student Government Association.

The Collegian condones the action of the two Senates. We hope that the screening panel does its job, and that the Board is no longer used as a dumping ground for the malcontents of campus politics. It's time for students to assume control of an enterprise that they've had too little control over for too long, while paying an exhorbitant tax (the highest student fee on campus) at the same time.

We also hope to see an end to the needless and, until recently, almost endless infighting between the various branches of Student Government, especially the Board and the Undergraduate Senate. There can be no real progress towards achieving the common goals of students on this campus until there is unity on the government which should be representing them. The two Senates have taken a step in the right direction. Let's keep the momentum of the action going and make this a year of unified action in Student Government.

Nixon Or Trotsky?

George McGovern (remember him?) is running for President of the United States. He doesn't seem to be doing so well. In the country at large, he has yielded an ernourmous margin to the ever popular (?) Richard Milhous Nixon. and as the weeks go by, the polls seem to be pushing him further back into the loser's column. Poor George. Where will he ever get his consolation? He may be way behind in the "real" world, but in the fantasy lands of academia, the experts say (James Reston says, ergo, the experts say) that the distinguished Senator from South Dakota should be taking a commanding lead.

But all is not wine and roses for ole George. Even on the campuses he seems to behaving his woes. No, Nixon and the Republicans aren't giving him a hard time, although many students do indeed intend to vote for the President. It seems that McGovern is getting those proverbial thorns in his side from a small but highly rambunctious crew of Trotskyite (Trotskyist?) leftists who comprise a more or less well organized outfit known as the Young Socialist Alliance, the Youth group of the parent political "party", the Socialist Workers Party.

The name of that Party is somewhat misleading. Although it is definitely socialist, it is highly doubtful that it has any Working-class, since most of its activists are students. This is not to say that workers automatically stay away from left wing students; two other left-wing Parties, the Communist Party and the Socialist Party, have had periodic inroads into the U.S. labor movement. Nevertheless, the SWP is perhaps the most active and determined of all the leftist organizations, and the supporters of the SWP Presidential ticket of Jenness and Pulley have proven to be quite a headache for those who are trying to win the campuses for McGovernism.

By means of blood, sweat, and tears, the young devotees of Trotskyism have managed to get their candidates on the ballot in thirty states. In the country at large, the role of the SWP is of monumental insignificance. On the campuses, however, the socialists, by virtue of being on the ballot, are able to demand equal time with the spokesmen of the two major parties. This gives them the opportunity to propagate the Marxist cliches to audiences substantially larger than those that they were able to get at their weekly YSA meetings. Now honestly, there is very little possibility of there being any drastic subversion of the two Party system, but the ballot status that the SWP has acquired has served to embarrass the McGovernites.

Last year, when George McGovern was campaigning on college campuses, he presented himself, at least symbolically, as the candidate of the "radical alternative". His rhetoric with regards to the war, the economy, marijuana, abortion, Gay rights, etc. all had very strong leftist implications. But now that McGovern has acquired the Democratic nomination, he has changed his style and is now seeking to present himself as the candidate of the "middle of the road" (whatever that is.) Breakfast with Lyndon Johnson, lunch with Mayor Daley, dinner with Hubert Humphrey, and bedtime snacks with Sargent Shriver have all taken an enormous psychological toll on his original supporters, most of whom were attracted to McGovern as the "radical alternative." And now his supporters are confronted on the campus by the Trotskyites, who are able to point gleefully to McGovern's apparent "sellout."

Despite McGovern's early leftist overtones, he is in reality a modish New Deal Democrat, and is by no means a communist. But the pied pipers of Trotskyism will do everything in their power to convince young radicals that their support for McGovern only serves to "perpetuate the ruling class". And all of their actions serve the cause of Richard Nixon, in the event that McGovern does indeed come within a stone's throw of winning the election.

Poor George. As if he didn't have enough problems. I think we can look forward to (brace yourselves) FOUR MORE YEARS. Perish the thought. Goodnite George. Goodnite Linda. Sleep tight.

Janis

Didn't I give you nearly everything a woman can give? Honey, you know I did.

Janis Joplin

Four hundred thousand people is a rather large group to which to bear one's soul. Joe McDonald, Country Joe of The Fish, did it anyway. He sang a song about a woman he still loved, even though they weren't doing anything together any more. I wish to hell I had a copy of that song' it's perhaps the best love song I ever heard.

The woman in the song showed up a little later, and she shared with her audience, too, but what she shared was an incredible mixture of passion and pain. Her topic was life, and it was too universal to be personal. She sang about the melancholy side of life, that darkness everyone visits, but most of us only visit. She lived there, trapped in the dark side of the human soul.

It's possible that she was happy there, in a strange twentieth-century-vision-of-apocalypse way. She admired beatniks, she said, because "they believe that things aren't going to get any better, say the hell with it, and stay stoned all the time." Maybe in a neurotic, existential way she was happy. If so, it wasn't the kind of happiness one wishes on a friend. That sort of happiness is too grim, to negative. It is also too often the constant companion of a genius such as hers. The expression of crushing pain can be beautiful in the hands of a great artist, but the pain remains as well as the art. The audience is blown away, rendered speechless by the incongruous beauty this woman brings to her suffering, but for her the song ends and the pain is still there. She may have admired beatniks, but she couldn't join them in saying "the hell with it."

She drank a lot, and got high. Her Southern Comfort bottle was her trademark, a nastily appropriate symbol for a woman bent on self-destruction. She understood this. Once she said, in a moment of self-contemplation, "everyone seems to have a high sense of drama about me. Maybe they can appreciate my music better if they think I'm destroying myself." People used to come to watch her destroy herself, but no one stuck around to convince her she was too beautiful to destroy.

She could sing, though. That was what she did, better than anyone else alive. She wasn't a modulated AM radio star, nor was she a fortyish whore attempting suggestiveness in a bourgeois-decadent nightclub. She was real, and she was real good. There's no one left who can sing the way she did. She was the final statement about human suffering as art.

Why is she gone? It happened. It had to happen. You can shove the needle in only so often before the needle doesn't work any more. Eventually it takes more junk to forget than the body can stand. And when the body dies, it takes the soul with it, and the vocal chords which are the soul's messenger.

Janis didn't kill herself, any more than people who smoke cigarettes kill themselves. But it had to happen. One day she whacked too much, and that was her last day.

That was two years ago today. Janis cannot be replaced, but she can be remembered. Joe McDonald loved her. He understood. Hoa binh.

Letters To The Editor

Lack of Orientation

To The Editor:

I are a freshman. I are ignorant. I read the Collegian to get some smarts. I guess I will have to remain a igorant.

A freshman is at the immediate disadvantage of not knowing who the hell Larry Ladd is or what he believes in. Bob Estelle is apparently a reactionary and a compulsive letter writer. Steve Masse seems to be a name that is always popping up. The more I read, the more I learn, right? Wrong.

After a month or so of editorializing on the important and occasionally unimportant events on the UMass campus the Collegian has established some random first impressions by the Class of '76. Here they are:

1. No clear avenue was layed out for intelligent participation in the Student elections, especially for commuters.

2. Continuing forums for discussion between opposing factions of innumerable issues serve only to vent personal hostilities and in no way seek to afford rational considerations of both avenues of thought.

3. If you expect a freshman or any other student to sit on all eight standing committees of the Senate, work in Area government (for a laugh - ask a commuter what Area gov't is), become an Advocate or Judge in the Student Judiciary, and still graduate with any kind of standing, well then, you are asking more than this writer and a lot of others are capable of.

Let me state here that I am vitally interested in the University at all levels. I recognize that participation is based on desire and ability. The point I want to stress is what provision has been made to satisfactorily orientate the transfer student or the incoming freshman? Where does he turn for information of Student Government I turned to the Collegian and unfortunately, found it lacking. Perhaps it might interest all of you sophisticated upper classpersons to know that when the Class of '76 stepped on campus very few of us knew what a Student Union, Campus Center, or Student Senate was. I say this because although we knew its basic function, we knew little of the power and scope that these institutions wield. Any literature provided by the University or by organizations within the University simply gave names to things and tended to confuse and obscure just what goes on.

Whenever four thousand strangers move in amongst a populace I assume the education and well being of the immigrant force should receive some priority among "things to do today". It would be cheaper than hiring a fleet of Welcome Wagons.

Richard F. Wright Jr.

The Candidate

To The Editor:

Last Tuesday a debate was held between representatives of three Presidential candidates; Richard Nixon, who history will remember as an ardent attacker and murderer of working people thru out the world and as one of the vilest of all racists; George McGovern, a "liberal" who avoids the issue of racism like a plague, and who is running backwards, on all major issues, faster then thought humanly possible; and Linda Jenesse, the so called "socialist alternative".

An attempt was made to have a representative of Gus Hall and Jarvis Tyner, the Communist Party's candidate for President and Vice-President included, but unfortunately the coordinaters of the debate were extremely hard to find. The Univ. of Mass. community will therefore have to settle for the next best thing which is to hear one of the candidates in person.

Tuesday, October 10, at 8:30 p.m. in Hasbrook Aud., Jarvis Tyner, a former teamster, National Chairman of the Young Workers Liberation League and Vice-presidential candidate of the C.P.U.S.A. will be speaking. This is a chance to hear a revolutionary program that deals with how to end War-Racism and Repression, and secure for all working people Peace-Jobs and Freedom.

Who's Responsible?

To The Editor:

I want to talk about the Worcester dining commons, which is probably very similar to every other dining commons on the campus.

The dining commons are a monopoly, all under 21 students must pay to eat there, they have no choice.

What would happen if students didn't have to buy a meal ticket? I'll tell you exactly what would happen. They would have to improve their service and food or else go bankrupt. But, alas, that isn't the case, they are a monopoly and they can maximize their profits by serving food that can at best be described as edible, and they can get away with service that is absolutely and incredibly terrible. The ineptitude in management is astounding.

Let me give you some of my observations. They often temporarily run out of a certain meal and the line grows enormous while they wait for a new batch. They usually permanently run out of the most popular meal about a half hour before closing time. They intermittently run out of soda, napkins, silverware, milk, ketchup and mayonnaise. They always run out of salad and salad dressing about half hour before closing and never bother to put out anymore. If it is near closing time and they run out of ketchup or mayonnaise they won't put out any more of those either.

Now another interesting little fact. They count the number of people that come in, and they also count the number of people that get each kind of meal. What do they do with these nifty little facts, shove it up their asses? There is so many little things they could do to improve the service. For example they could have one person whose only job is to monitor all the extras. (that is milk, soda, ketchup etc.) This would certainly be more efficient, then what they do now, which is wait for students to tell them they are out of something. Every one I talk to in the dining commons says "it's not my fault". But whose fault is it? Whose responsible for this incredible ineptitude, and what can be done about it? Will somebody answer? I want to know.

Editorial Points

Its probably better that the Red Sox bowed out early. From here on in the going gets tougher.

If you are trying to enter law school next fall, then you know why I decided to use this particular problem to fill space in this segment of today's paper.

In contrast to the pessimistic nature of the first editorial point: Good luck to the Red Sox next season.

Letters to the editor should be typed at sixty spaces, should not be to long, and should contain insight.

Dope Dope

To The Editor:

Methaqualone. Quaaludes. Sopers.

"If you take quaalude with wine...it may become 10 times as strong and dangerous", so stated an article in the October 2nd edition of The Collegian.

Horrible. Outrageous. Terrible, even.

But how's a fresk who hasn't mixed sopers with wine to react?

Woo! Ten times as potent! That's gotta be tried!

Bullshit.

The warning of eminent danger goes unheeded, you see. But if it doesn't, it's similar to the quotation, "The biggest problem with quaalude is that the addict cannot withdraw by going 'cold turkey'": it presents a challenge.

The see-saw is tilted. Tilted, see, in that even though the weight is unevenly distributed, all that's needed is to stay closer to the end. In other words, although the article expresses many anti-drug sentiments, all that's needed is one or two pro- to unjustly sway the opinions of users.

(For those who are already out of touch, the article is meaningless.)

Concerning withdrawal. There's a drug called apomorphine which is as good as any of the alternatives offered in the article: i.e. "...re-addict the patient with high doses of barbituates...", which is a lure. Although its uses are highly confined, apomorphine has successfully cured heroin addicts of physical withdrawal symptoms in Great Britain.

(Why's apomorphine's use confined? The basic supposition is that the world's controlling forces do not want the use of heroin or narcotics in general, for that matter, to stop or to even somewhat decline. Why not? Too much money involved, you understand.)

What's with apomorphine? It's a physical vacuum cleaner. It acts similar to cocaine in that it induces withdrawal symptoms, junk sickness. But as a convulsive, it rids the addict of them quick-like.

William S. Burroughs, infamous junkie and author, said that apomorphine was the best way to shuck off a monkey known to him and that he kicked a habit in less than three days. (If anyone's an authority on all phases of heroin, Burroughs is.)

Granted, apomorphine only cures physical addiction. But 2+0=8.

All junkies, besides being neither women nor men, and besides being pathetic whimpering creatures whose hands are cuffed even though the key is available, fear junk sickness. All, you understand.

But even zoos are inhumane. Meaning that junkies, to say the least, are in dire need of help. Even if the key to the junkies' cold-steel clamps is placed in the lock, nobody can turn that key but the junkies, themselves. Key, see?

In the case of that mathematical un-equation: using apomorphine as an oil to loosen the lock is one thing. Obtaining it is another.

SWP For Me

To The Editor:

Crap, Bob, regarding your letter of Oct. 3 regarding vital information about John Schlitz, the American Party's presidential candidate. It lacks sense. Many agree with you that Nixon or McGovern are not the best men for the job of president of the US, but neither is Schlitz.

Surely, the so-called cliques will make decisions for these candidates if they are elected. They have the necessary money and power but, there is no reason to assume that any other candidate will be able to act independently of his campaign contributors and supporters either.

The free enterprise system that Schlitz professes to uphold is what got the average working man and the average person into the mess he is in now. Any more free enterprise in America will mean complete dictatorship by big business and necessarily remove Schlitz from deciding on whether or not America should be isolationist or on anything else.

It's not possible for American industry to give up so much wealth outside of this country as Schlitz proposes. If we do, we would have to recreate it inside using the techniques of planned osolescence and conspicuous consumption.

Also, read up on who is the "main supplier of illegal narcotic drugs to the US". Is it not from SE Asia and carried out by ultra-rightist CIA agents as we have heard?

Rather, we should look at other candidates such as those of the Socialist Workers Party. Their platform contains humanitarian, anti-sexist, anti-racist, as well as other sensible planks. They may not be viable but, votes for them might insure that some humane policies are carried out and enable them to continue their programs.

Open to anyone with a good camera on his shoulders.

A challenge: Picture this. You only go around once in life. And you've got to reach for all the gusto you can. You can't settle for less. Because you don't get a second chance. This is our philosophy at the Jos. Schlitz Brewing Co. This is what we want you to find. And picture for us. And if your photo is judged the best on your campus, it will be printed in this paper. With your name, too. And you will be awarded $100. Not too shabby.

Photo competition rules: Use your head before you use your camera. Your photograph will be judged on its subject matter. Not on your photographic technique. You will be competing against students at your campus only. All photos should be black and white. And by the way, if you are a professional photographer this offer is not for you, since you already have $100. Please, please get and send us written permission from every recognizable person you use in your photo. Otherwise, your picture will be disqualified. You'll have until October 31, 1972, to get this assignment completed, should you accept. All photos submitted will become property of the Jos. Schlitz Brewing Co. Send picture with your name and address to: Schlitz Photo Competition, Leo Burnett Co., Inc., Prudential Plaza, Chicago, Illinois 60601.

NES: A Rocky History

By ANNE COLLINGTON

The Northern Educational Services (NES) tutorial program at UMass has had a relatively short but rocky history. Begun by students Ernie Reis and Steve Nezzaro about four years ago on campus as an outgrowth of the original program in Springfield, it is designed to provide deprived children in the city with the tutoring they need. At the same time, it gives UMass students the opportunity to develop teaching skills and receive academic credit while engaging in a one-to-one relationship with the children.

Initially, the tutorial program was funded by the Model Cities program in Springfield, allowing NES to have several storefront outlets in many of the city's neighborhoods. Here the volunteers had the options of teaching remedial reading twice a week or tutoring students in their weak subjects. However, due to a slash in funds, the number of centers was reduced to one. Although this threatened to limit the possibilities offered by NES, the committees sought to "make it work" despite the handicap.

Senior Sally McDonald, a member of the coordinating committee, explained that the remedial reading and tutoring programs are still in effect and have been joined by a third kind of program--a "big-brother, big-sister" program.

As of now, NES has not yet been quite stablized as a result of delayed funds, but once these funds are granted, promises to be "better than last year." The program had about 250 tutors last year, who worked at the center of State Street, and, although not as successful as a result of "inefficiency", worked in the city's public schools, she said.

NES, in addition to providing tutorial help, sponsors parties and a spring picnic in the Orchard for the children. It makes cultural experiences available such as the Alvin Ailey Dance Company this past spring, and in general, tries to "round out" the deprived children.

Miss McDonald emphasized the need for tutors and especially volunteers to work on the coordinating committee, which will have several empty seats as a result of graduating seniors Judy Malone and Lorraine Allen. An orientation meeting held last month yielded several volunteers but there is still time to sign up for the program. The amount of academic credit has not yet been decided upon by the School of Education, but it will be given, Miss McDonald said.

The NES office is located in Room 105, Campus Center; the telephone number is 545-0575. Anyone interested in helping NES "get on its feet" this year is urged to contact any of the committee members here, for as Miss McDonald summed up, "It's not hard--it just takes time."

Reed, Opponents In Debate

Nat Reed, Republican candidate for Representative of the 2nd Hampshire District, will appear on WGBY TV's The Statehouse Candidates on Friday evening, October 6 at 7:00.

Reed, who promises to be a full time Representative, will be questioned by a WGBY reporter and a member of the press from the 2nd Hampshire District.

Facing Reed in this 30 minute program will be his opponents, Democrats James Nolen and James Collins and Republican William Whitlock.

In an interview this week, Reed called this program "an excellent means for the voters of Western Massachusetts to hear my stands and thoughts on the important issues in this campaign."

Reed, an Amherst resident and Professor at Amherst College, wants a re-ordering of state funding priorities to provide more for human services. This is only one of the issues that Reed stands for. He hopes that voters will watch Friday night for more information on this and other issues.

Baseball Team Undefeated

By ROY LYONS

The UMass baseball team maintained its perfect fall record Sunday with 6-1 and 5-0 victories against Siena College of Albany.

Pete Backstrom was the hitting star with a single, double, and triple in the opener. He was sidelined during the second game with a leg injury, however, and coach Dick Bergquist expressed concern over his condition. It is the third time that Backstrom has injured the leg in less than a year.

Eddie McMahon and Ron Beaurivage provided most of the remaining noise offensively with two hits apiece.

Mike Flanagan faced fifteen batters in the five innings he worked, striking out nine. Tom White finished up on the mound and was nicked for an unearned run.

John Olson, Chip Baye, and Craig Allegrezza combined to shut-out Siena in the second game. Baye was especially effective, striking out five batters in a two inning stint.

A pair of doubleheaders is on tap for next weekend. The Minutemen will host Mass Bay on Saturday and play Springfield College on the road Sunday. Bergquist plans to use the same pitchers he used against Siena.

Several players commented about the fall season and the "real thing" which will start next spring. Catcher Tom McDermott said the team is looking forward to next spring's trip to California. He welcomed the opportunity to play against the best in the nation. UCLA, USC, and Arizona State were among the schools McDermott mentioned which will be entered.

He praised the hitting of Eddie McMahon and Dan Esposito. Espo ran into a dismal hitting slump last season after a sensational start two years ago as a sophomore.

Chip Baye was satisfied with his progress to date, but said, "I need more work." Assistant coach Brian Martin agreed with Baye that getting enough work on a staff this large is a major problem.

Martin also mentioned several freshman projects making their presence known. Those he noted were catcher Jim Black, third baseman Buddy Sales, first baseman Pete Collins, and outfielder Mark Fontaine.

Kiah Lost For Three Weeks

By DOUG FIDLER

John Kiah, star UMass varsity soccer goalie, will be out of action for three to four weeks with mononucleosis, it was reported yesterday.

Kiah started last season with five consecutive shutouts, finishing with a 1.8 goals per game average. He already has one shutout to his credit this year, a 2-0 gem over Boston College to open the season.

"It is a real blow to the team," said a dejected Coach Gerry Redmond. "Apart from his fine goal-tending, he lent a great deal of confidence to our fullbacks. The defense seems to play with greater security knowing that John is between the posts behind them."

Although the absence of Kiah will hurt the team, Redmond hopes that Carl Vercollone, Kiah's backup, and Barry Lucien, up from the JV squad, will fill the gap. "John has had more experience as Carl is but a sophomore. Carl has shown good work so farthough, and Lucien has looked capable with the Junior Varsity team."

Red Sox Win!!
Capture Second Place!

DETROIT (AP) — Marty Pattin fired a four-hitter and the Boston Red Sox deprived Detroit's Joe Coleman of a 20th victory Wednesday with a 4-1 triumph over the Tigers in the regular-season finale for both American League teams.

The victory left the Red Sox one-half game behind the East Division champion Tigers-who played one more game than Boston this season because of the strike-shortened schedule. Detroit begins its playoff in Oakland Saturday against the West Division champion A's.

Coleman failed to record his second straight 20-victory season and wound up instead with his 14th loss. He gave up all of Boston's runs and left after six innings.

Pattin, 17-13, was given a first-inning run when Juan Beniquez and Phil Gagliano walked and Ben Oglivie singled. The Tigers tied it in the bottom of the inning on Dick McAuliffe's double, a fly ball that moved him to third and Frank Howard's grounder.

Boston went ahead to stay in the second with two runs on Rick Miller's double and singles by Vic Correll, Beniquez and Cecil Cooper. The Red Sox added their final run in the third as Oglivie singled and Miller tripled.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Virgo natives require plenty of sleep. Sagittarians can get along with less than usual amount of slumber. But the "Mercury signs," Virgo and Gemini, burn energy at a rapid rate and require periods of replenishment. Leo should take special care with diet and Aries must avoid undue eye strain. Proper fitting of shoes is of special importance with Pisces. Taurus exhibits a tendency to fast and then to eat too much at one sitting.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Pace is slow unless you are careless. Getting somewhere in a hurry may not be worth the consequences. You will understand. Older person wants to aid, but you may resent interference. Key is to measure and time moves.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): What appears to be a smooth path may have thorns. Know it and prepare accordingly. Take nothing for granted-and this includes emotions. Member of opposite sex has some misgivings. You learn, grow.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You get proverbial second chance. Those who had held you back have a falling out among themselves. You are beneficiary. Leo is likely to be involved. Independent course now is advisable. Act accordingly.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Be cautious in taking stand. Those who are enthusiastic now may act in different manner tomorrow. Know it and don't get caught in middle. Aquarian plays key role. You are not being told complete story.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Some hopes, desires are subject to revision. Don't be afraid to change your mind. Sagittarian could play prominent role. Money situation is spotlighted. You gain through versatility. Best to diversify.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Don't ask for more than you can handle. Check apparent minor matters. Be thorough. Task that appears easy could contain deceptive angle. Be wary. Leo and Aquarius individuals are in picture. Look beneath surface.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Be ready for quick change of plans. Gemini and Virgo figure prominently. Your destination is blocked. Seek alternatives. Tread lightly. Be subtle. Someone will tell you what you need to know. Be receptive.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Accent is on intelligent compromise. Don't force issues. Obtain hint from Libra message. Member of opposite sex is involved. Friend who usually is carefree now confides problem. Don't cast first stone.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You may feel that "nothing is happening." In reality, much is occurring and much of what is happening is behind the scenes. Pisces is in picture. Improve timing. One at top is making room for you.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Practical issues dominate. You can now dig deep and come up with constructive solutions. Avoid unnecessary delays, postponements. Applies specifically to medical appointments, basic chores.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You can appeal to more persons. Your concepts will be appreciated. Personal magnetism is featured. Make contact with one familiar with distribution. Make product available. Accent progress.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): New attitude must be made to exist at home base. You have right to live your own life. Be sure others understand. Leo individual could aid. Speak up, express views. Don't equivocate. Review property value.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are creative, possess unusual ability to express yourself. Recent disappointment served as challenge to your maturity. You now are in process of taking on more responsibility. If single, marriage is on horizon.

"Medicine Man" Turns Yankee

By MARK VOGLER

As the fighting Redmen were banished from the UMass sporting scene this fall, their leading "medicine man" concluded two decades of caring for the wounded warriors.

But the altering of the team nick name apparently makes no difference to Head Athletic Trainer Vic Keedy, who has been affiliated with university sporting teams since 1952.

Just as the Minutemen launched a new era in UMass sports history, Keedy gave every indication that he would put another decade and no more in before conceeding to retirement.

"In another 10 years I plan to retire, whether I'm ready or not," Keedy stated prior to the football season.

"Even though I love athletics and even though I'm knowledgeable about training, I think that younger people should be in this field.

"It's a great life, it's not an easy one. The rewards aren't the greatest monumentarily. But I think I'll stick my neck out and say that this is one of the great outposts of life left-full of Americanism, healthy, and something you can't get enough of."

Keedy's career in athletic training was not actually determined from the start of his sporting endeavors. The life-time Amherst native did, however, demonstrate athletic inclinations during his schoolboy days.

While lettering for the Amherst High Hurricanes in football; basketball; and baseball; he earned All-Western Mass recognition in each sport.

Finding employment in the UMass athletic equipment room, he transferred to the athletic injury care room--and thus developed an interest for his future trade.

Keedy took a summer of study at Springfield College and "other than that it's been plain, honest to goodness, hard work. It meant going to clinics and getting important information from anybody who was willing to share information on athletic training."

Keedy eventually became the primary athletic trainer to every major sport the University offered. But after having found it an almost impossible task to take command of all sports, he received aid from some assistant trainers. He now relegates most of his time to the football squad.

Head Coach Dick MacPherson recently cited Keedy for playing an important role behind the scenes in UMass' relative success in football over the past 20 years.

"The best thing that I can say about Vic Keedy is that he's a professional. He's extra knowledgeable, skilled, dedicated, and most important of all--he likes to be around young people.

"Vic relieves the worries that a football coach sometimes has. He's always available and ready to administer to the athlete.

"He's an institution on this campus and the first guy that old timers want to see when they come back. That is the mark of a great guy."

Keedy's job of caring for and treating injured athletes is one that involves great responsibility. And it's one that also has its limitations as Keedy, himself, pointed out.

"I'm the closest go between the coach and the Physician. The ultimate and the last decision is always made by the team physician. This is modern sports medicine.

"This is the most accurate and legal way that we can assure the welfare of the student athlete. The physician has his say as to how long a boy plays and when he plays.

"I don't think that the team trainer should ever be thought of as the junior physician. He has his cutoff point and that's it."

Of the many changes that the dean of the UMass trainers has seen in the past, "the upgrading of athletic facilities has been the most tremendous."

"I've witnessed the fantastic addition of Boyden, Alumnae Stadium, the intramural fields, the baseball field, and the new track facility. I think that there's no question about this being the greatest thing that has ever happened to UMass sports.

"Boy, I can still remember those days when everything was done in Curry Hicks Cage. It was like a 3-ring circus. It was just impossible to walk across the Cage without getting hit by a basketball, having a weight drop on you, or being run over by a track man.

"The only thing that we didn't have practicing there then was the pistol team."

Martin Rehired

DETROIT (AP) - Billy Martin's contract to manage the American League's East Division champion Detroit Tigers was extended through the 1974 baseball season, the Tigers said Wednesday.

It was an apparent change of mind by Martin to accept the one-year extension. He had said Tuesday night, after the Tigers clinched the divisional title by beating Boston 3-1, that he had already refused such an offer.

"Mac", Metallo, and Bouchard: "We're Not Overconfident"

By BILL BALLOU

The two most newsworthy items to come out of yesterday's Varsity M Club luncheon were 1. Chairman Harold Gatslick has shaved off his moustache and 2. I did not win the door prize. But I guess that really isn't news.

Hidden underneath these earth-shaking events was a pretty subdued UMass football coach, Dick MacPherson, and two pretty subdued football players, Ray Bouchard and Paul Metallo.

One of the reasons for this "subdued" attitude comes up for discussion this Saturday in Burlington, Vermont. The other was discussed this past Saturday in Cambridge, Mass.

MacPherson and his men want to make damn sure they aren't over-confident when they take the field against UVM Saturday. MacPherson put it succintly: "They are a good football team." It's Vermont Homecoming this weekend and they'll be up," says Mac. It didn't seem like he was being facetious.

Metallo voiced his concern in another way. "The game last Saturday gave us a big lift, but now we've got to follow through and prove that we are No. 1 in the East."

The Minutemen head for Vermont with a few more eyes upon them than in the past. In fact, such famous eyes as those of Joe Giulotti, a sportswriter for the Herald-Record, will be watching. Giulotti is in town doing a four-part series on UMass football.

The reason for Giulotti's presence is the reason for the ubdued atmosphere; i.e., the Harvard game.

MacPherson was duly impressed with his charges, but realized how lucky he was to come out of there with a win. He reeled off an impressive list of "breaks" such as Demars' fumble in the open, the coffin corner punt by Mark Palau (no they didn't play it that way) and the play of Walt Parker ("the closest he's ever come to that kind of place is at Fort Devens at a parade").

The Race is Over

By BOB ESTELLE

The great race is over. It ended suddenly and dramatically, as all great races must.

When Detroit Tiger manager Billy Martin heard that the Baltimore Orioles had traded aging superstar Frank Robinson his comment was "We just won the Pennant." Well, last Tuesday, Martin's Tigers overcame the first obstacle to the AL flag. They came up No. 1 in a race that took until the second to last day to be decided.

It started out with Baltimore and Detroit fighting it out, neck and neck. But things began to get interesting in August when the Yankees and Red Sox started to get hot. By Labor Day, no one could tell who was going to take the division. But shortly afterward the Yankees came to Boston and started slipping. Then the Orioles started to go. This was shown when they came to Fenway and lost a series to the Red Sox.

Last weekend the race died down. By Saturday evening, the Yankees and Orioles were eliminated. But with a 1-1/2 game lead the Red Sox lost three in a row, the last two of these three to Detroit.

Shutouts Galore!

In last week's IM Football Action, shutouts continued to plague contenders for individual league leaderships. The week's total of 29 brings to sixty-two, the total number of shutouts so far this season. Of those 7 teams who have yet to score a point in two games, the Ind. River League "boasts" two-Catherwood and Chewzos. Other squads looking to break the "ice" are the Pierpont Heads of the Women's Res. Leo League; Dickinson in the Scorpio Division; Sigma Alpha Epsilon in the Frat. Spartan circuit; the Rodents from Ind. National League and finally hailing from the Grad-Fac Division.

Leading all teams in scoring are Kappa Sigma in Men's with 66 points and the Melville Whalers in Women's with 62 points. Kappa Sigma, who demolished ATG in their first encounter, were severely tested by a stubborn Theta Chi squad, who led most of the game but allowed a Kappa Sigma Touchdown pass from Captain Ted Donahue to Arthur Patazian with less than 3 minutes to go to clinch the victory. Donahue claims that his team failed to play well as a result of last week's highly-praised victory. "Everyone was playing with their heads up in the clouds and their minds were not trained on the game itself. I hope this scare teaches us a lesson."

Marcia Lappin, Manager of the powerhouse Melville Whalers who have outscored their opponents 62-0 in two starts attributes their success to returning veterans comprising an explosive offense and a stingy defense. The Whalers, who finished second last year in Flag Football play are confident of victory this year. Says manager Marcia Lapin, "We know we'll win."

An Open Letter to the Red Sox

Dear Red Sox,

Thank you...thank you for taking my mind off the World Hockey Association, the Ali-Patterson fight, the Julius Erving affair, the Havlicek "holdout", the triviality that marred the Russian-Canadian series, Bobby Orr's knee, the Watergate issue (if I may change the subject), Tricia's statement that she would surely die for Thieu, Miss "I love you Dick Nixon" America, and Spiro's rhetoric.

Yes, you lent some saneness to my world. For what can be more appropriate to a Red Sox rooter than to have his team in the thick of a late-season pennant race? You guys almost did it. If only that late team batting slump didn't happen–but I'm not blaming anyone. After all, I never thought you'd get as far as you did.

Boy, how about that Luis Tiant? Remember that time in July that Kasko let him bat for himself early in a game, and everyone scoffed? Well, he pitched 6-1/3 innings of shutout relief, and from then on was the best pitcher in the American League. Nobody scoffed anymore.

Even the Brewer deal didn't turn out so bad. Seems to me that only Scottie and Lonborg did anything for them. Harper and Pattin sure did something for us. That Pattin really knew how to pitch to those Birds from Baltimore.

Sure the Cater-Lyle deal made you look bad, but Cater's a good hitter who had a bad year, and Lyle's a good pitcher who had a great year. That's baseball.

You lost Culp early in the year. And Siebert was virtually nothing after mid-season. They were supposed to be the two stalwarts. So you had to go to Louisville to get a couple of guys named Curtis and McGlothen. Two rookies, real young rookies. But they won some big ball games.

Then there was Oglivie. That kid sure had a nice swing. Seems like every time he came up to pinch hit he'd hit the ball hard. And Miller–he made catches out in centerfield that I haven't seen since Piersall. And what an arm.

Sure, Yaz was a big disappointment, but in the stretch drive he fielded well and came up with some big hits. Maybe he'll come back strong next year.

I never thought Little Looie would come back the way he did. He may have lost something over the years, but he still has more than most major league shortstops.

The bullpen isn't much, but it was kinda fun wondering who would get the call in tight situations; no one was really reliable.

Hey, Rico became a damn good "hot sacker" this year, didn't he? He made some pretty clutch defensive plays. And his bat came alive for a good while there. Yeah, Rico's going to be around for awhile.

Reggie's kind of a strange bird, and I really can't figure him out. But he led the team in home runs, and from what I could see, he really gave it all he had. It was too bad he couldn't touch Lolich.

That Griffin sure made all the plays at second base. And he hit, too. The kid's a real ballplayer.

Carlton Fisk. You almost let him sit in the minors for another year because "he couldn't hit." So all he did was bat close to .300, catch most of the games, and become the real team leader. Even in the game against Fryman, when it looked like Fryman had his number, Fisk lined a shot that Rodriguez made a great play. Otherwise, it would have brought you back to within a run. He never gave up.

Yeah, for a team that a couple of months ago looked like it was going nowhere, you guys did all right. Somehow watching John Adams play goal for the Bruins isn't going to compare. Hurry up, April.

Sincerely,
John Q. Fan

Fac-Sen Committee OK's Rhetoric End

Student Senator Nick Apostola expressed the view that the Rhetoric Program had not increased a student's waiting or speaking ability. Malcom Sillars (standing) disagreed with Apostola's report on the requirement. In the end the committee voted 14-0 with one abstention to kill the requirement. (MDC Photo by Pam Perry)

By STEVE SECHE

The Academic Affairs Committee of the Faculty Senate voted last evening to recommend to the Faculty Senate the abolishment of Rhetoric as a University Core Requirement.

The vote was 14-0, with one abstention.

The fate of the recommendation will be decided when the Faculty Senate next meets. Undergraduate Senator Nick Apostola promised an "extensive student lobbying effort" in the upcoming weeks, in an attempt to insure that the resolution is passed.

The committee also passed, by a vote of 14-1, a motion that the Faculty Senate establish "an all-university committee which would meet at regular intervals to ascertain the need for better communication skills within the university, and to explain ways to implement co-operative programs between the Rhetoric program and other departments."

The committee would be composed of 22 members, divided equally between faculty and students, representing each of the schools within the university. It would submit its findings to the Academic Affairs Committee in one year.

The establishment of such a committee was initially suggested by Dr. Malcom Sillars, Acting Director of the Rhetoric Program, who attended the meeting at the invitation of the committee chairman, Ernest Buck.

Dr. Sillars expressed disagreement with the report of the undergraduate senate's Academic Affairs Committee, saying that it seemed to have been prepared "in haste, with very little care". Speaking to Nick Apostola, chairman of the Undergraduate Committee, Dr. Sillars said, "Nick says students are unhappy with the program, but he said that before the report was submitted."

What Sillars suggested was a "probationary period" during which a committee of faculty and students would get input from other areas of the university as to where communications skills courses might be most helpful.

In defense of the existing Rhetoric program, Sillars said that the program is still experimenting with new approaches and that with the methods they have already implemented, the department has gained a reputation "as one of the most innovative in the country."

In response, Apostola said that he did not dispute the need for a Rhetoric program within the university, but that the evidence he had did not indicate that "students speak or write substantially any better after their experience with the Rhetoric dept."

The committee did feel that attempts presently being made to link the Rhetoric program with the particular professional interests of students should be encouraged, as a viable alternative method to continue student participation in the program, while eliminating its compulsory nature.

Members of the committee felt that changes were also needed in the program's present teaching staff, which according to Dr. Sillars, consists of teaching assistants in nearly two-thirds of the program's positions.

Cynthia Wolfe, Dir. of Honors, felt that teaching Rhetoric courses was particularly taxing for first-year graduate students, and that her experience indicated that teaching assistants would be better suited and happier if they were teaching literature courses, leaving rhetoric to more experienced instructors.

Following the meeting, Apostola expressed satisfaction at the outcome of tonight's vote, but felt that the Faculty Senate's decision was still "very much up in the air."

Sarge 'Regrets' Lack Of UM Budget Cuts

By JAMES E. GOLD

Governor Francis W. Sargent yesterday announced his "regret" that the UMass Board of Trustees passed on the fiscal 1974 budget to him uncut.

Sargent, in a statement to the press, also said that he plans to meet with trustees from all of the state institutions of higher education next week to work on the budget matter. The governor cited a need for reform in "a time of austerity."

The exact text follows:

"I regret the decision taken yesterday by the University of Massachusetts Trustees to increase its budget from $74 million to nearly $100 million. The Board appeared to disregard both reform and economy. My disapproval stems not only from the Trustees' failure to make a realistic assessment of the resources of this state, but, more importantly, from their continuation of old patterns.

"If we are serious about the need for educational reform in a time of austerity – and I for one could not be more serious–we must change our old ways of operating as well as our old ideas about education. Higher education in this state involves nearly thirty public institutions and nearly a hundred private colleges and universities. I do not see how each can pursue its own scheme to expand without consideration of the others.

"In the past, each college, each university, each governing board approached the state with an "asking price." They never expected to get it all, but they held the politicians at arms length, challenging them–and expecting them– to wield the budgetary axe.

"The question is no longer how much an institution can get, how many buildings it can erect, how many campuses it can open. That kind of thinking–no matter how much money might be available–is not the way to enhance the quality of our students' education. And that, after all, is what matters.

It is time to make the budget process a partnership between all our higher education institutions, their appointed trustees, and the officials elected to serve the public. None can abdicate his share in that challenging and important process.

We must ask some tough questions. Can we, as the Carnegie Commission suggests, accelerate a four year degree program so that many students can complete it in three? Not merely because it is cheaper, but because educationally it is better. As we invest in new programs we must ask whether old ones are worth continuing. In other words, we must not ask merely for more money, but for what educational returns our dollars are purchasing.

Next week, I will meet with the trustees of all our public higher ecucation institutions. At that time I will make a major address and lay before them an agenda for debate to bring about this needed partnership to achieve reform. At that time, I will ask them to meet and work with Secretary of Educational Affairs Joseph Cronin and Secretary-Designate of Administration and Finance William Cowin to prepare a budget for fiscal 1974 that will reflect this new direction.

In a telephone interview with one of Sargent's aides, it was revealed that tentative plans call for a meeting at Framingham State College with the Governor, Cronin, Cowin, and the trustees from the state colleges and universities.

Sargent is tentatively planning to address the group at 10 A.M. that morning. The rest of the day will be devoted to meetings with Cronin and Cowin and the trustees.

The governor's aide said that the trustees were asked to review the budget so they could set priorities for the University. He indicated that now, under normal budget review, a civil a servant who may not know that much about specific University programs will be responsible for them being cut. being cut. "Now they won't know what end to start cutting from," he said.

Interim C.C. Board OK'd

By JAMES E. GOLD

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery yesterday acknowledged the "action taken jointly by the two Senates in creating an Interim Board of Directors for Campus Center Governance" and withdrew approval of the April 1971 Campus Center/Student Union Governing Board Constitution.

His action gives the official nod needed to put the newly created Interim Board in power to replace the SUG Board. TheInterim Board is expected to last one month, at which time a new permanent Board of Governors will take over the policy-making role in the Campus Center - Student Union complex.

The Interim Board was approved last night by both the Undergraduate and Graduate student Senates. A joint committee of these Senates will now have one month to work out the differences between the two versions of the Senates' bills doing away with the old SUG Board and replacing it with a new Campus Center Board of Directors.

Bromery's memorandum to SGA President Larry Ladd and Graduate Student Senate President Veda Ross reads in part as follows: "I acknowledge in principle the actions jointly taken by the Undergraduate and Graduate Student Senates in establishing the Campus Center Board of Governors. I understand that the final version of the joint act is being worked out by a conference committee of the two senates and that it will be submitted to me for review and appropriate action as soon as the single version has been adopted.

"I also acknowledge this action jointly taken by the two senates in creating an Interim Board of Directors for Campus Center Governance, pending adoption of the joint act."

In another memorandum, to Barry Cohen, Chairperson of SUG Board, Bromery stated, "In view of the recent actions by both the Undergraduate and the Graduate Student Senates concerning 'A Joint Act of the Undergraduate and Graduate Student Senates', and their creation of an Interim Board of Directors, I am hereby withdrawing the approval of the Campus Center/Student Union Governing Board Constitution (dated April 5, 1971), which was granted by former Chancellor Tippo on September 1, 1971."

Bromery indicated in an interview yesterday that he was agreeable to the change in governance for several reasons. He said he found it "easier to work with the Undergraduate and Graduate Student Senates than with various splinter groups."

Also, he noted that the changes will make the Board's member more "accountable" to students. "You make better decisions when you have accountability," Bromery said.

He also said that under the old system there were too many personality conflicts involved in the decisions.

He pointed out that the reforms were carried out with "close consultation between the Vice-Chancellors, Terry Grinnan, and Gerry Scanlon. Grinnan is the manager of the Campus Center and Scanlon is the Acting Director of the Campus Center.

Prof Says There's Life After Sex

By LUCILLE HRYNIEWICH

Dr. Joseph Stanton, associate professor of medicine, Tufts University School of Medicine, gave what he believes is the medical, embryological and scientific evidence that human life begins at conception in the Newman Center Wednesday night. He began by quoting the statement from Life's magazine series on "Life Before Birth" which stated, "Birth of human life really occurs at the moment the mother's egg cell is fertilized by one of the father's sperm cells." That statement written in 1965 was never disputed at the time as being inaccurate.

Dr. Stanton described the maturation of this human life from the time of conception, when it has its unique combination of genetic material and potential through the stages of growth. At 18 days, before pregnancy tests are even positive, the fetus has its own blood cells different from the mothers. At 21 days its heart starts to beat. At 39 days they have recorded electric brain waves from this human life. They even found he said that this brain wave was personalized.

By 12 weeks the human being contained all the organ systems. Pictures illustrated the small, but real features of feet and hands. At 16 weeks the little human being had eyelids and can be seen sucking its thumb. Its kicks are so strong by now they can be felt by the mother. At 20 weeks the fetus is a clearly recognizable baby. Dr. Stanton also described the methods of abortion in his lecture.

Dr. Stanton claims he supports the right of all human life. He feels it can be proved scientifically, embryologically, and hematologically, that the fetus is a human life. He claimed that more people oppose abortions than the polls reveal. There are organizations and groups as the Constitutional Right to Life Committee who are supporting the right to life.

Although advocates of abortion may rationalize, Dr. Stanton states they are in fact destroying life - because it is "defenseless and convenient."

Ladd Chooses Four For C.C. Board

By JAMES E. GOLD

Student Government Association President Larry Ladd yesterday submitted four names of nominees to the Interim Board of Directors for Campus Center Governance to the Student Senate in a memorandum.

Ladd also pointed out in the document the appointment of a special assistant for the interim period and spelled out what he saw as the main functions of the Interim Board.

The Board, created Wednesday night by the Undergraduate and Graduate Student Senates, will oversee the operations of the Campus Center-student Union Complex until a permanent Board is created which will replace SUG Board.

Richard C,Nelson, former SUG Board Secretary/Treasurer and current SGA General Court Justice, will be Ladd's special assistant. He will perform the following functions:

—convene the Interim Board,

—serve as liaison between Ladd and the Interim Board,

—collect and disseminate information to the student body about the current situation within the Campus Center, and —coordinates the appointment and orientation process for the permanent Board.

Ladd said in the memorandum that he will submit four names to the Senate's Executive Committee for appointment to the Interim Board. They are Frank Cotter, Bobbie LaPorte, Nelson, and Ingrid White.

MacLaine To Speak

Actress Shirley MacLaine, ex-vice presidential candidate Frances "Sissy Farenthold" and Terry McGovern, a daughter of Senator George McGovern, will speak next Wednesday, Oct. 11 on the UMass campus, at 12:30 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom.

The three will appear in conjunction with McGovern Day, a state-wide day of participation for McGovern supporters.

Chairman of the UMass McGovern for President Committee, Mark Mawrence, invited all students, faculty, and staff to hear the speakers.

"It is dangerous," he added, "in a free society not to vote. It is even more dangerous to vote with ignorance. I urge all students to come to the Student Union Ballroom Wednesday, and listen to what these three McGovern supporters have to say."

Communist Candidate Speaks Wednesday

Jarvis Tyner, Communist Party candidate for Vice-President, will be speaking at the University of Massachusetts Tuesday, October 10, at Hasbrook Auditorium, 8:30 pm. Tyner, a Black worker from Penn., was born in 1941 in the Millcreed ghetto of Philadelphia.

In 1961, he was involved in a militant lithographer's strike. Later, he led a successful organizing drive in another plant, bringing it into the Teamsters Union. At the same time, he was active in the civil rights movement, organizing support for the Southern struggles, as well as fighting discrimination in Philadelphia.

In 1967, Tyner was elected National chairman of the W.E.B. Dubois Clubs, and, in 1970, of the Young Workers Liberation League, the new Marxist-Leninist, interracial youth organization which he helped form.

The lecture is sponsored jointly by the Western Mass. Branch of the Young Worker's Liberation League and the Western Mass. Club of the Communist Party of the United States of America.

WMPIRG Staff Attorney Ron Bogard emphasizes that WMPIRG acts as a watchdog to define and research consumer problems. (MDC Photo by Steve Quigley)

WMPIRG To File DPU Suit Today

By BETTY SPENCER

The student-funded Western Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group will file suit today against the Massachusetts Department of Public Utilities and the Western Massachusetts Electric Company in Federal District Court in Boston.

The action was taken with Consum Irate, a committee of businessmen, labor leaders, and public officials.

This is the first major task undertaken by WMPIRG since its creation. The court is being asked to declare unconstitutional the statutes under which the Massachusetts DPU establishes rates on the grounds that consumers are not represented at rate hearing.

In an organizational meeting held last night in the Commonwealth Room of the Student Union a local planning board for the UMass campus was formed. From this eight member board, four representatives to the regional board were selected. They are Stephen Rider, Ed Voci, Maureen Rigney, and Steve Howards.

WMPIRG is a non-profit corporation which, according to staff attorney Ron Bogard, serves three functions. It acts as a watchdog to define and research consumer problems. These problems are brought to the public's attention by lawsuits, lobbying, or news conferences. WMPIRG also functions as an educational institution to teach students public interest research skills. The last function is to provide professors with aid in bringing certain problems to light.

At present there are two areas that WMPIRG is planning research in. The first deals with the question of drug prices. WMPIRG says that because druggists are not required to list the prices of the hundred most popular drugs the whole competitive model is destroyed and the consumer is cheated. The object of this action is to get city ordinances passed requiring druggists to post prices.

The second project is to analyze tax assessments in Amherst. If this is successful it will be undertaken in several other surrounding communities. Another possible project would involve the connecticut River and the question of sewage dumpage.

The local planning board last night defined its functions as making sure that funding is never jeopardized, alerting the media of WMPIRG's activities, and connecting interested professors with the staff. They will also seek to arrange for students to get credit for public interest work.

The regional board has the ultimate responsibility for dispersment of rexources. In addition it must decide which issues to concentrate on and who to hire. Basic areas of research will be assigned to each staff member.

WMPIRG is composed of students from Mt. Holyoke, Williams, Hampshire, and Springfield Colleges in addition to UMass. UMass has contributed $18,000 of the $55,000 total raised by WMPIRG. The money was collected by an optional student fee of two dollars per person. Fifty-five percent of the students paid this fee, about the same percentage of students who signed the petition to fund the organization.

Concert Committee

Applicants are now being sought for the chairmanship of the Concert Committee, budgeted $10,000 for this year's free Spring Concert.

Those interested in the position should contact Elliot Sherman in the Student Senae office, first floor of the Campus Center.

A sub-division of the Senate's Student Matters Committee, the Concert Committee brought Fleetwood Mac and McKendree Spring to campus last semester. This year several smaller concerts may be planned as well.

Membership on the committee is open to all students. Assignments given in preparation for a concert include publicity, staging, group bookings, and security proposals.

3rd World Case Delayed

By J. L. ALTMAN

The General Court last night delayed action for one week on a suit challenging the Student Senate's reapportionment of itself that guaranteed 15 seats for Third World representatives.

Advocate William E. Spinn, representing Matt Tackeff, a former student senator who resigned in protest of the senate move, motioned that both sides submit their briefs for the court to examine for one week.

Tackeff, in a five-minute opening statement, called the reapportionment a move to establish racial quotas, "a course of action carrying dangerous and negative implications."

Student Attorney General Bert Emmons, representing the senate, defended the reapportionment as a means for providing a larger scale and meaningful forum for Third World participants.

Tackeff claimed the implication of the reapportionment was that students are racists. "I disagree," he said, "the senate can't come up with one example of this."

The Third World representatives attended their first senate meeting Wednesday night. They were sworn in, but left before any action was taken by the senate for a meeting of Third World persons on campus.

"What is needed is an examination of the alleged problem of institutionalized racism," he said, pointing out that when the bill was debated in the senate, the question of lack of Third World participation due to "institutionalized racism" was never elaborated upon.

"All students possess the equal opportunity to run for office," said Tackeff. "Racial quotas require that individual skin color be a more important consideration."

If the reapportionment is permitted to go unchallenged, he added, students will be "regarded as mere components of an ethnic herd." The bill "sanctions the root principles on which racism is based," he said.

Tackeff closed his statement by calling for new elections and the abolition of quotas.

Emmons replied that the term "Third World" was never defined because the bill is meant to include any other minority. Since constituencies are arbitrarily established along dormitory lines, he said, the only other answer to minority students who feel disenfranchised in predominantly white dorms would be to require those studenty to live in one area, thus he claimed creating a ghetto.

While it is true that ethnic members are concerned with respect to new constituion at Mills (New Africa) House, Emmons added, any student can run for one of the 15 seats in question. "It's a viable, worthy option to anyone who feels he was shortchanged."

Commuters Start Year

By CINDY GONET

Quorum was finally reached at the Commuter Assembly meeting yesterday afternoon. Of 6,082 students who commute daily, only 35 are needed to cast their votes for a quorum. Several present at the Assembly went through the Hatch with leaflets enlisting commuters to attend the meeting.

This year, the Assembly has been funded with $15,000. Paul Doran, president of the Commuter Assembly, clarified the policy which provides that if funds are not completely utilized, the remainder is returned to the Student Senate.

On the agenda for the hour was the announcement of a new Commuter's Lounge, located in the old game room, beside the Hatch. Doran also reported that Lisa Mandell, a member of the executive council, had resigned. There are now 2 vacancies on the board.

Last year, the Assembly had its coffers filled with $14,000. With the funds, a day care center was established at a cost of $5,000, an emergency loan fund of $1,000 was created, a substantial number of bike racks were scattered over campus, a free picnic and concert was set up at a cost of $1,400, parking spaces for motorcycles were rented also.

Suggestions for use of the money this year reached Doran at yesterday's meeting. A student from the Young Workers Liberation League considered that the Assembly should donate an amount to a $50,000 children's hospital in North Vietnam. The issue was not voted on. Doran sad, "Presently we can't give money away to anything of that nature. It is not of direct help to the cummuter."

A question was asked about what the Assembly could do to alleviate the present parking situtation. Doran stated that a Parking Council handles the matter. N lot is now being cleared near the Physical Plant and the Federal Government has given the university $500,000 for buses on surrounding area. This should help the traffic problem until some other scheme can be devised.

An RSO group, according to Doran, has been granted funds from the Senate to start a mechanics shop. There have been delays in acquiring tools and a location for the shop. The planned date for its use is January, 1973.

It was suggested from the floor that the Assembly establish a Food Co-op in conjunction with the Food Conspiracy in Amherst. A food distribution space could be rented in the Campus Center. The idea is now under consideration.

It was voted by general consensus that approximately 3 parking spaces for motorcycles will be rented. The spaces will cost the Assembly under $350, and a charge of $1 [illegible] commuter.

$700 was gr[illegible] to a commuter health lecture series. These lectures are modelled after the Peer Sex Courses. Last Thursday, a well attended drug lecture was presented at Room to Move.

An Assembly meeting is scheduled every 2 weeks.

Judge Bans Police Newspaper Search

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) - A federal judge declared yesterday police search of a newspaper or any other third party not accused of a crime is banned by the U.S. Constitution unless it is shown that records sought for a criminal investigation might be destroyed.

U.S. District Court Judge Robert F. Peckham ruled in a suit by the Stanford Daily, Stanford University's campus newspaper. Palo Alto police had searched the paper's offices April 12, 1971 for pictures of demonstrator violence at the Stanford Hospital three days earlier.

Peckham said a police search "presents an overwhelming threat to the press's ability to gather and disseminate the news." He said the less drastic means of subpoena was available.

He declared a search warrant for a newspaper's records and materials "is impermissible in all but a few situations."

"A search warrant should be permitted only in the rare circumstance when there is a clear showing that 1 important materials will be destroyed or removed from the jurisdiction; and 2 a restraining order would be futile," the judge said.

"To stop short of this standard would be sneer at all the First Amendment has come to mean to our society," Peckham declared.

"The First Amendment infringements with searches of newspapers is quite serious," Peckham said.

"The threat to the press's newsgathering ability is much more imposing with a search warrant than with a subpoena.

"A reporter or photographer responding to a subpoena will bring to the grand jury hearing only those materials mentioned in the subpoena," he said.

"The police officers executing a warrant, however, will be in a position to see notes and photographs not even mentioned in the warrant," he said.

Senate Votes S.S. Recipient Protection

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Senate voted yesterday to protect recipients of the 20 per cent Social Security increase from boosts in public housing rents or loss of food stamps and commodities.

This was provided in an amendment of Sen. Walter F. Mondale, D—Minn., adopted to the Social Security-welfare reform bill as work on the bill neared completion yesterday.

Managers said final passage last night was a possibility but said the Senate was more likely to finish work today.

Mondale said thousands of old persons had found the 20 per cent boost, first received in checks this week, to be "a cruel hoax."

It increased their income levels to the point, he said, that many of them suffered loss of Medicaid coverage, or a loss of old-age assistance benefits, or an increase in public housing rents or loss of food stamps and commodities.

The Mondale proposal provides for disregard of the 20 per cent Social Security increase in figuring income levels for public housing or eligibility for the food benefits.

The Senate last week adopted an amendment to prevent the older persons from having a cut in their assistance benefits or loss of Medicaid because of the recent 20 per cent boost.

The Mondale amendment was one of many proposals acted on a day after settlement of welfare reform. The Senate set aside three plans, including President Nixon's Family Assistance Plan, in favor of a test of each program.

At his news conference yesterday Nixon said he will try again in 1973 to get his plan adopted.

He said he would not approve any programs that would add to welfare rolls and said proposals "by our opponent would do that.

In votes yesterday the Senate adopted by 71-8 an amendment of Sen. John V. Tunney, D—Calif., to broaden greatly the income tax deduction allowed parents for expenses of child care so that they would hold jobs.

The amendment would declare such expenses to be a business deduction.

The effect would declare such expenses to be a business deduction.

The effect would be to permit the taxpayer to deduct them whether he itemizes deductions on his return or not.

It also would in effect wipe out the limits on the personal deductions for child care in the present law. These confine the deductions to those with $18,000 income or less and permit only $4,800 a year of the expenses to be deducted.

The Senate defeated 45-33 an attempt by Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D—Mass., to strike out of the bill a repealer of the provision in the law which requires all states to provide to their poor persons a comprehensive range of medical services by 1977.

McG Outlines Foreign Policy

CLEVELAND (AP) — Sen. George McGovern delivered a broad outline of his foreign policy goals yesterday but said "the central affliction of American foreign policy" remains the Vietnam war.

McGovern said President Nixon's re-election would mean "it will drag on for years until it either exhausts or pulverizes the people of Indochina" and "another four more years in jail for these prisoners of war in Hanoi."

In an appearance before Cleveland's City Club, McGovern charged that President Nixon "has tricked millions of Americans into thinking that we are staying in Indochina in order to get our prisoners out of their cells in Hanoi" when the way "to get them out is to end the war."

The Democratic presidential nominee declared also hat President Nixon has combined "six-gun economic diplomacy" and big Pentagon budgets with a "naive pre-nuclear view" of big-power influence that has isolated the United States from its allies, trading partners, developing nations, reality and "our own ideals."

"I suggest that we reject this unconscious isolationism in favor of a new and more constructive internationalism that is based not only upon our vital interests but also upon the kind of nation that we ought to be," he told the audience of about 500 persons who applauded him frequently during the speech and a follow-up question period.

McGovern said his administration would seek to concentrate on agricultural and technical assistance while seeking to "avoid the kind of reflexive interventionism that has foolishly involved us in the internal political affairs of other countries."

The senator's speech contained several specific proposals, including a statement of his intention of formally recognizing mainland China and a pledge of U.S. back for a permanent Japanese seat on the U.N. Security Council.

He restated full U.S. support for Israel and said "we should press very hard for justice for the Jewish citizens of the Soviet Union rather than abandon them for a few dollars in a grain trade." That was a reference to the contention by critics of the U.S.-Soviet wheat deal that President Nixon should have used it as a lever for winning Soviet concessions in restrictions on Jews.

McGovern flew to Cleveland for the speech and a round of television and newspaper interviews after having breakfast in New York with a small group of campaign contributors.

In contrast to most recent campaign days, the Democratic presidential nominee had no rally and relatively few speeches as he made his fifth visit since Labor Day to the 26-electoral-vote prize, without which Republicans have never won a presidential election.

S. American Leaders Agree On Goals

BOSTON (AP) - Four South American political leaders agreed on Thursday that their continent's future depends on the balance between economic growth and fair distribution of the wealth among the people.

The former presidents of Chile and Columbia, along with a former Brazilian planning minister and a former United Nations official, spoke at the opening session of a two-day round table discussion at Boston University's Center for Latin American Development Studies.

Building the Latin-American economy, they said, was complicated by the emergence of a politically powerful middle class that is keeping the wealth from from filtering down to the poverty-stricken masses.

"Everybody from left to right agrees that there cannot be a solution to the economic problems without an accumulation of capital," said Eduardo Frei, former president of Chile.

"Without accumulation of capital and the reduction of extreme poverty."

"The problem," he said, "is how to accommodate a great mass of unemployed and a greater mass of people with little income. The case of extreme poverty is the case of many Latin American countries."

Roberto Campos, former minister of planning in Brazil, said: "The love-hate relationship of Latin America towards the United States is becoming somewhat more sedate."

"The United States has suffered some constructive humiliations," he said, "such as not knowing how to solve inflation or the balance of payments deficit.

Monthly Wholesale Price Rise Slows

WASHINGTON (AP) - The rise in wholesale prices slowed in September but still was greater in the past 13 months than in the year before President Nixon imposed wage-price controls, the government said yesterday.

Presidential economic advisor Marina Whitman found in last month's figures an indication of "further progress in reducing the rate of inflation." Spokesmen for Democratic presidential nominee George McGovern said however, "Inflation is accelerating at an embarrassing pace."

The government's Bureau of Labor Statistics said the September rise was .3 per cent for a broad range of food, feeds, industrial raw materials and finished manufactured products ready for retail sale.

On a seasonally adjusted basis, the increase was half the previous month's rise, but the bureau added that wholesale prices in the third quarter of the year climbed at an annual rate of 6.7 per cent, compared with 4.9 per cent the first and second quarters.

And, the report added, wholesale food prices soared 17.4 per cent in the past three months.

Mrs. Whitman told newsmen that wholesale prices have risen at an annual rate of 4.3 per cent during the 13 months so far of Nixon's controls compared with a 4 per cent rate in the year before controls.

"The higher rate for the controls is due entirely to the behavior of farm, food and feed prices, which have risen at an annual rate of 8.2 per cent during the controls period, in contrast with their rise of 3.1 per cent during the preceding year," she said.

Asked if would be reason for Nixon to extend price controls to the farm level, she said: "We do not feel that is feasible," adding that this could lead to food shortages and possibly rationing of food.

"You may create a worse problem than you're trying to solve," she said.

Wholesale food prices are controlled after the first sale from the farm, meaning that increases in farm prices can be passed on to consumers.

Robert Nathan, economic consultant to McGovern, said the report showed a "tragic failure" of Nixon's efforts to control inflation.

"The Nixon administration never did understand the inflation problem," Nathan said, contending it imposed control too late and isn't applying them effectively.

The government report said wholesale food and feed prices rose .6 per cent in September, industrial raw materials increased .2 per cent and consumer goods ready for retail sale increased .3 per cent.

The over-all increase boosted the government's Wholesale Price Index to 120.2 of its 1967 base of 100, meaning wholesaiers paid $120.20 on the average last month for goods worth $100 five years ago.

Air Force Says F111's OK

SAIGON (AP) - U.S. F111 fighter-bomber units completed their move from Nevada to Thailand yesterday and the U.S. Command reported the swing-wing jets' first missions over North Vietnam after a six-day layoff.

Although most of two squadrons of F111s from Nellis Air Force Base had reached Takhli Air Base, north of Bangkok, by Wednesday, the command reported only two strikes against the North overnight.

The command acknowledged publicly for the first time that the trouble-plagued, $15-million jets had been withdrawn from combat after only four missions. One of the first two planes to go out vanished, with both crewmen missing.

An official U.S. memorandum for correspondents said that because of the plane's loss Sept. 28 "a thorough systems recheck was accomplished during the period Sept. 29-Oct. 3 to insure that the systems were functioning properly in the Southeast Asian environment. The systems were proved to be fully operational and the aircraft were rescheduled for combat missions."

Several F111 strikes scheduled for Tuesday night and Wednesday morning were cancelled because of bad weather associated with Typhoon Lorna, the command claimed. Weather also was blamed for cancellation of two missions on the first day of F111 operations.

The F111s are billed as "all-weather" fighter-bombers. During the Tuesday-Wednesday period, less sophisticated aircraft, such as F4 Phantoms, logged 120 strikes against the North, although bad weather limited them to about half the usual number.

Asked to explain the cancellation and why only two Wednesday-Thursday strikes were flown when most of the 47-plane contingent was already in Thailand, a command spokesman replied: "The weather conditions where the F111s would have flown were more severe than in the area where the other aircraft were able to fly."

Electronics systems on the F111 and other "all-weather" strike jets make them more accurate than less advanced planes when bad weather cuts down visibility and buffets the aircraft. But forces inside thunderstorms are so violent that no existing plane can fly through them with safety.

The latest F111 strikes hit an air defense center near Dien Bien Phu on North Vietnam's frontier with Laos and at a railroad siding on the northwest line between Hapoi and China.

Bad weather and darkness prevented damage assessments, the command reported.

Because of development problems and cost overruns, the F111 already was controversial when the first six of the jets, whose wings sweep back for supersonic flight and forward for slower flight, arrived in Southeast Asia in 1968.

The six planes were grounded several times for flaws and flew only 55 missions. After two vanished and a third crashed because of mechanical causes, the surviving F111s were returned to the United States.

The F111s were brought back to the war zone, U.S. miliary officials said, because the Air Force wanted to bolster its strike capability as the height of the rainy monsoon season approaches in North Vietnam.

The same monsoon held down ground action in northern South Vietnam, and fighting elsewhere in the South continued light and scattered.

U.S. B52 bombers kept up raids in the Saigon region with 30 strikes aimed at staging areas and stockpiles north, east and south of the capital, in an effort to thwart an offensive in the region.

Hanoi radio reported that three American F4 Phantom fighter-bombers were shot down Thursday and some pilots were captured. The U.S. Command declined comment.

The U.S. Command reported three Americans killed in action last week, the highest toll in five weeks. In addition, three died of nonhostile causes, four were wounded and one was reported missing.

North and South Vietnamese battlefield casualties fell to their lowest level of the six-month enemy offensive: 352 South Vietnamese killed, 1,458 wounded and 60 missing, by count of the Saigon command, in the seven-day period ending at midnight last Saturday. It claimed South Vietnamese troops killed 1,458 North Vietnamese and Viet Cong troops in that period.

Oil Companies Agree To Arab Control

NEW YORK (AP) - Western oil companies announced today a tentative agreement with five Persian Gulf nations which would give the Arab states a 51 per cent interest in oil operations in their countries after a period of years.

The agreement, which calls for each gulf state to negotiate separate agreements with the oil companies operating within its territory, culminates nine months of negotiations.

Sheik Ahmed Yamani, Saudi Arabia's minister of oil and minerals and chief Arab negotiator, said he would leave for the Mideast Thursday night to submit the agreement to his principals.

The five Arab states - Abu Dhabi, Quatar, Kuwait, Iraq and Saudi Arabia - account for approximately 28 per cent of free oil production, an oil company spokesman said.

The agreement, which is expected to set a pattern which may be followed by other oil producing nations, calls for the states to increase their equity in oil operations gradually to a maximum level of 51 per cent after an undetermined amount of time.

No details were given on the amount of payment to be made.

The five Arab countries of Abu Dhabi, Qatar, Kuwait, Iraq, and Saudi Arabia presently receive about $5 billion a year in royalties and taxes from the nine Western oil companies involved in the negotiations.

The agreement is the latest in a recent series of moves granting oil producing nations an increasing portion of the oil dollar.

Consumer Bill Dies

WASHINGTON (AP) - Backers of a consumer agency bill yesterday failed for a third time to halt an opponent's filibuster, and they said their measure, for practical purooses, is dead for the year.

The vote on cloture was beaten again by a minority of senators since the 52-30 tally was three short of the necessary two-thirds present needed to close off debate.

Technically, the measure establishing a consumer protection agency had a chance since it could be called up again during the rush to adjournament-the best estimate of that being Oct. 14.

However, one sponsor of the CPA bill said its chances of being called up, subject to further filibuster, is remote. Another senator said it would take a miracle, "and I don't see a miracle."

With the administration's blessing, the House had already passed its version of the consumer agency bill, weaker than the Senate draft.

Under the Senate bill, the CPA's lawyers could act as full parties in regulatory agency cases, presenting their own evidence and cross-examining witnesses. They could appeal decisions in the courts.

The House bill would confine CPA lawyers to filing briefs in court presenting the agency's view of a case.

Backers of the Senate bill said such agencies as the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Civil Aeronautics Board and the Federal Trade Commission are supposed to protect the public interest but have been dominated by business interests.

However, an opponent, Sen. James Allen, D-Ala., said the agency would promote "trial by combat, agency against agency" and "guerrilla warfare" among new and old federal agencies.

MUSKIE AND McGOVERN AT RALLY–Democratic presidential candidate Geo. McGovern along with Sen. Ed Muskie wave to a large crowd of people in downtown Buffalo, N.Y., during an afternoon rally.

Nixon Condemns Congress For Excessive Spending

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon condemned "congressional overspending" Thursday as a threat to his pledge not to increase taxes.

In a wide-ranging news conference, he also shrugged off his election opponent's corruption charges and said the Vietnam peace talks are in a sensitive stage.

Nixon would not predict when or if the war might end, but said: "If we can make the right kind of settlement before the election, we will make it."

Nixon said his personal campaigning would be limited but he will make a nationwide radio address-paid for by his campaign committee-on the issue of taxes Saturday night.

As he stood behind a black leather chair in his office, fielding questions for 40 minutes in his first news conference in five weeks, the President:

—Said he is "not going to dignify" Sen. George McGovern's charges of corruption in his administration by responding to them, adding that "I think the responsible members of the Democratic party will be turned off by this kind of campaigning..."

—Vowed "there will be no presidential tax increase" but said he would forego campaigning and stay close to the White House "until that very great danger of a tax increase caused by congressional overspending is met and defeated."

—Said efforts to reach a Vietnam settlement will not be affected by the Nov. 7 election. He said the bombing and mining of North Vietnam would continue "until we get some agreements on the negotiating front."

—Defended as good for America the Soviet wheat deal but pledged to take action if investigation shows grain dealers made illegal profits.

—Repeated that he had no personal knowledge of the alleged bugging of Democratic headquarters in the Watergate office building, and repeated that none of his present White House aides was involved.

—Said he would ask Congress next year to reduce property taxes on the elderly, pledged to continue to press for welfare reform and said he would consider the constitutional amendment approach if Congress doesn't act to check forced busing.

Democratic nominee McGovern has called Nixon's administration the most corrupt, deceitful and tricky in the nation's history.

Responding to a question, Nixon catalogued these and other Democratic charges and, "Some of my partisan advisers feel that I should respond in kind.

"I shall not do so; not now; not throughout this campaign. I am not going to dignify such comments."

Turning to Vietnam, Nixon said the timing of settlement, "the possible negotiation of a ceasefire, the possible negotiation of, or unilateral action with regard to a bombing halt," will not be affected by the fact there will be an election Nov. 7".

He said the bombing of military targets and the mining of North Vietnamese harbors had broken the back of the Communist offensive and said they would continue until some agreements are reached.

Nixon described negotiations as "in a sensitive stage" but said again that both sides had agreed not to discuss content of the talks.

On taxes, Nixon said "There will be no tax increase in 1973" and then tempered his commitment by saying "there will be no presidential tax increase."

But, Nixon said, "There could be a congressional tax increase" if the Democratic-controlled House and Senate continue "to pass bills that substantially exceed the budget."

McG Supports Hicks

CLEVELAND, Ohio (AP) - Democratic presidential nominee George McGovern said Thursday he is supporting Rep. Louise Day Hicks of Boston and "the other Democrats stand united in this crucial election year," McGovern said.

In Boston Tuesday, McGovern had said that while "I'm going to support the whole Democratic ticket," the independent candidate running against Mrs. Hicks, Joseph Mokley, is a good man.

McGovern said at that time he would be satisfied with a "selection either way," in that contest.

Mokley, a member of the Boston City Council, is running against Mrs. Hicks as an independent after losing to her in the Democratic primary.

McGovern, in a statement issued aboard his campaign jet, said he was concerned at news reports "indicating that I am not fully supporting" Rep. Hicks. He said he wanted "to stress again my support" of the Boston congresswoman.

Richard Dougherty, McGovern's press secretary, said he had talked to Mrs. Hicks by telephone and told her that McGovern supported her candidacy.

Labor Leaders Approve Meany's Neutrality

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

AFL-CIO President George Meany Thursday appeared to have more support than rebellion from state labor groups on a policy of neutrality in the presidential campaign and his orders to stop urging the defeat of President Nixon.

"Meany's right, and over the years he'll be proven right," said President Benjamin Dorsky of the Maine state AFL-CIO.

"There's too much devisiveness in the labor movement over Democratic Presidential Nominee George McGovern and Nixon," Dorsky said.

Most other state AFL-CIO leaders contacted echoed similar support for Meany, although several renewed appeals that the 13.6-million-member labor federation's executive council reconsider its policy of neutrality and switch to an endorsement of McGovern.

Meany remained silent, showing no sign of changing his position. He has sought to place the Colorado state AFL-CIO group under trusteeship for endorsing McGovern and reportedly has ordered atleast a half dozen other statelabor bodies who did not endorse McGovern but urged defeat of Nixon, to rescind resolutions to "dump Nixon."

The Massachusetts AFL-CIO Wednesday approved a resolution urging defeat of Nixon, but state council president Joseph A. Sullivan said he had received no official reprimand from AFL-CIO headquarters in Washington.

If he does get a reprimand from Meany, "I'll tell him to put it in writing," Sullivan said, and then refer it to the next meeting of the state executive committee.

The national AFL-CIO lost a bid in federal court in Denver to suspend Colorado AFL-CIO officers and put that state organization under trusteeship, but Meany issued a statement calling the court order "erroneous" and said that it would not affect AFL-CIO actions in other cases.

Westover Protestors Vow More Actions

CHICOPEE, Mass. (AP) - Anti-war demonstrators stood on the steps of Chicopee City Hall yesterday morning and vowed to continue their protests at Westover Air Force Base "until the bloody conflict is ended" in Vietnam.

Organized as the Committee for Continuing Action at Westover, the group read a statement decrying the emphasis that has been placed on the cost of the anti-war protests at the Westover AFB gates, stressing instead the cost of supporting "a corrupt dictatorship" in South Vietnam with its accompanying loss of lives and destruction.

The group vowed to continue the Westover protests, but did not say when or how.

Due for arraignment in Chicopee District Court today were 39 arrested on disturbing the peace charges Monday morning when they sat in the roadway, blocking base traffic. Judge James A. Landers continued the cases of 35 of them who pleaded innocent to Nov. 10, and released them in their own recognizance.

James R. Jacobs, 20, a student at Hampshire College, Amherst, pleaded guilty but refused to pay a $25 fine imposed by Judge Landers. He was sent to jail for 10 days.

Scott A. Wright, 22, also pleaded guilty and was given to Nov. 10 to pay a $25 fine, while one other defendant pleaded no contest and was fined $25.

One did not show up, Edward A. Gersh, 24, a Malden antique dealer. A bench warrant was issued for his arrest.

Judge Landers had said on Monday that protests from now on will be fined $25 for their first offense, with the fine doubling for each succeeding offense, to offset the cost to the city.

Chicopee incurred costs of more than $50,000 last spring when police were kept on overtime to make more than 1,400 arrests during three weeks of anti-war demonstrations in front of the base. Of the 400 brought to trail thus far, most were fined $10.

Belchertown School Rapped By Olver

NORTHAMPTON - State Rep. John W. Olver, D—Amherst, has leveled another attack concerning conditions at the Belchertown State School for the retarded.

"Briefly, direct care service for the residents is at an extremely inadequate level. Residents are simply not getting the proper attention," he said.

Olver who made his remarks this week before a meeting of the Hampshire County Association for Retarded Children, is attempting to unseat John D. Barrus, R—Goshen, for the state Senate seat in the 2nd Hampshire District.

Olver added: "Safety conditions at many of the buildings are poor. These conditions prompted my letter of last week to the governor."

The Democratic lawmaker wrote Gov. Francis W. Sargent that conditions "remain a disgrace" at the school despite 2-1/2 years of efforts by the Belchertown-Monson Investigating Commission.

Olver said the commission would be visiting Belchertown in the next few weeks and would meet with staff members to discuss the major problems.

"The commission had not visited Belchertown for a long time, since it felt the institution needed time to absorb new budgets and new personnel," he said.

"However", Olver continued, "a few days ago I was called down to the state school by some staffers, and found more problems."

The joint legislative commission stated in their March, 1971 report: "We are totally dissatisfied with the manner in which Belchertown is being administered. We are deeply impressed by the Department's (Mental Health) indifference to change."

Olver said, "We are not wealthy in Massachusetts and we have to do with what we have right now. But Belchertown desperately needs direct care staff, and building improvements immediately."

It's Harvest Time For Kentucky Dope

WINCHESTER, Ky. (AP)-The marijuana is ready for harvest in Kentucky this fall and there's no shortage of young volunteers for the work.

The "harvest" is a headache, though, for the state's legitimate farmers, its law officers and courts.

Hemp, the marijuana plant, was for decades a legitimate crop grown to make rope. During World War II, the government paid farmers to grow it. Now farmers can get subsidies to kill it.

Today, it probably ranks as the state's leading "underground" crop.

A hard-to-eradicate weed, the marijuana grows wildly on farms along roadsides, railroads and back lots. A patch was recently removed from a city park in Lexington.

The search for the marijuana has sent people, mostly young and from out of state, flocking to the fields. Farmers have spotted them tramping through the fields day and night and driving along roadways at a snail's pace, eyes on the roadside ditches.

Clark County, Judge Dorsey P. Curtis says some farmers, spotting cars on their property, will block the driveway and call the police.

Miles of fields and a limited number of lawmen to patrol them have made the job difficult.

Judge Curtis said he has had about 35 cases this year. He said most of those arrested are between 18 and 25 and, "I'd say half come from out of state." He cited cases of offenders from New York, Ohio, Illinois, North and South Carolina.

Hemp has been growing in Kentucky for hundreds of years, but authorities say it was only about two years ago that the word spread. One sheriff said he's heard of a detailed map of marijuana fields and patches that reportedly has been sold for as much as $20 in some cities.

Curtis said his method of dealing with offenders appears to be working. "It's been my policy to fine them $100 and give them a 30-day suspended sentence on the condition that they aren't caught in this area again."

He said he's had only one repeat case.

Pass On The Budget

The UMass Trustees returned the fiscal 1974 budget unchanged to the governor's office Wednesday. The next move is now the governor's. The governor's office should pass it on to the legislature.

He indicated late yesterday afternoon his specific plans would be detailed at an October 14 meeting at Framingham State College. At this meeting, according to one of his aides, he will present a position paper concerning what he's for and against in higher education.

He has also said that he "regrets" the decision of the trustees to pass on the budget without cuts.

The governor is supposedly worried about experimenting with new programs while keeping obsolete ones. The trustees have certainly reviewed this budget enough to know whether or not it is responsible. And we certainly think it is.

The University started a phenomenal growth several years ago. It drew its finish line in the Future of the University Report. We are not there yet. If the governor cuts back support of public higher education now, we may never see the University reach its full potential.

The governor points out that there are about 100 private institutions of higher education in the Commonwealth. However, he should realize that these institutions are not there to primarily serve the Massachusetts student. The University and the other state colleges are.

Low cost, high quality public higher education should be one of the Commonwealth's top priorities. It is one step toward solving this state's problems.

'MOTHER'S LITTLE HELPER'

You Asked For It

By DAN CARUSO

With a bang of the gavel and a burst of laughter, the 1972-73 Student Senate sputtered to a start this week.

Okay, so maybe this didn't drastically change your life-style, but someday it could. With the variety of issues that comes before it each year, the Senate is bound to take an action sooner or later that will affect you, and when that happens, you'll expect to be involved in the decisions.

The Student Senate is exactly what the name implies. It is a group of students that is supposed to be representative of the student body as a whole. Your involvement with the Senate doesn't end when you mark an 'X' on a ballot in September. You give someone a lot of responsibility when you elect him to the Senate, but just how responsible he is depends largely on you.

It's easy to put someone in the Senate and then put him down everytime he makes a move, or to wait until re-election and oust him because you've decided he hasn't done what you elected him to do. When you voted you got what you asked for. But you haven't got the right to expect too much if you never once indicated your feelings to them. Sure, it's up to the Senator to let you know what's going on, but after that it's your responsibility to let him know what you are thinking.

But just complaining to someone isn't always going to get things changed. Sometimes it calls for a little work on your part alongside your Senator to get things done right. You've got to remember, though, that he's as much a victim.

Don't just unload your problems and ideas on your Senator and expect him to carry them through alone. Work right alongside of him, and see what you can do to bring about needed changes in the University community. Join a Senate standing committee and 'walk a mile in his moccasins' before you expect too much of your Senator. Because you are given full and equal voting rights on these committees, you are making the Student Senate a direct representative of student interests.

On September 28th, you elected a Senate to talk back to the University for you. Now it's up to you to decide what you want to say. Find your Senator. Talk with him.•

In Defense Of Nixon

By DONALD COLEMAN

Democratic Presidential candidate George McGovern and his running mate, R. Sargent Shriver, have been attempting to gain political momentum by continuously accusing President Nixon of campaigning in 1968 on a promise of having a "secret plan" to end the Vietnam conflict.

The Republican National Committee has answered the accusation. It says the charge is "false" in its July 20, Issues Special Report". In the report, it emphasizes that the President never revealed his views in terms of a "secret plan" on the Vietnam conflict but that he realized, while campaigning in 1968, the importance of "reversing the trend of growing U.S. involvement in Southeast Asia, which was pursued during the Johnson years."

Continuing, the report states that as a candidate Mr. Nixon had "definite ideas" on what this nation had to do to find a means to end the conflict. The definite ideas finally narrowed down to "Vietnamization"–the training of the South Vietnamese to assume the military burdens of their own defense as the American troops were being withdrawn. What is more important, it emphasizes, is that Vietnamization was a "predictable" course of action in view of the President's public statements during the 1968 campaign.

The report says the "secret plan" notion came into being when candidate Nixon met with reporters during the 1968 New Hampshire primary. One reporter allegedly asked of the candidate, "Mr. Nixon, do you have a secret plan to end the war?" The candidate answered impulsively, "Yes, I have a plan to end the war," failing to make the distinction between "a plan" (Vietnamization) and a "secret plan". The reporter, meanwhile, had noted that the candidate had answered his question ("do you have a secret plan?") in the affirmative and so reported in the newspapers. The report stresses that at no point during the 1968 campaign did Nixon ever publicly refer to a "secret plan" to end the war.

The report concludes with the point that President Nixon never stated or implied during the 1968 campaign that if elected, he would pull American troops out of Vietnam "unilaterally". His position was then (as it is now) that the United States must seek a negotiated end to the Vietnam conflict.

Depletion For Humans

WASHINGTON — Sens. Mike Mansfield and George Aiken have proposed one of the most revolutionary tax reforms in the history of this country. They have suggested that human beings be given a tax depletion allowance as generous as one provided for oil and minerals.

As most people know, the allowances are given to companies on the assumption that once you take the oil, gas or minerals out of the ground they cannot be replaced.

Sens. Mansfield and Aiken maintain that people deplete, too, and they have proposed a bill that would permit individuals to deduct from 10% to 23% of their earned income to compensate for running down.

The only thing I see wrong with the bill is the fight over what jobs or professions should get the highest depletion rate. There are very few people in this country who don't believe their jobs are the most depleting of all.

The guidelines to be used, according to the bill, state that the percentage of depletion would be based on "the physical, mental and emotional stress incurred in connection with the production of income during the year."

Now it is my personal opinion that if those guidelines are adhered to, columnists should be entitled to the highest tax breaks.

No one, except possibly a housewife, depletes faster than a columnist. His profession forces him to go to cocktail parties night after night which do untold damages to his liver.

He is constantly being threatened with violence by people who take exception to his articles. This not only takes its toll physically, but also emotionally.

Most columnists look 80 years old before they reach their 40th birthday. Wives of columnists will testify that their husbands are depleted every night, and are not much good for anything except watching Medical Center and All in the Family.

There is scientific evidence available that columnists have loss of memory very early in their careers, and forget that the column they wrote today takes the exact opposite position of the one they took only a week ago.

It is now known that mental strain of writing a column causes columnists' brains to deteriorate at twice the rate of policemen and football players.

Columnists are prone to ear trouble from having politicians scream at them over the phone.

All of them are overweight from lunching with their sources and drinking bottles of wine sent over with the "compliments of the management."

This is why very few columnists can get health insurance after the age of 35.

If anyone in this country deserves a tax break, it's a columnist. Long before it is time for him to retire he is a vegetable-squeezed dry, washed up and mentally exhausted.

Tomorrow Is:

The fate of men and nations is determined by the values which govern their decisions.

(1) In 1972 let us choose to serve the common good.

The seven Articles of the Constitution of the United States and the twenty-six Amendments to the Constitution are intended to "form a more perfect union, ensure domestic tranquility, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare and secure the blessing liberty to ourselves and our Posterity." They set out the rights and freedoms, the duties and responsibilities of "all the people": they establish a framework of government and judicial procedures within which the "general welfare" may be defined and developed.

185 years after the Constitution was signed into law the nation has become divided, disturbed and polarized into separate groups, rich and poor, black and white, old and young, honest and corrupt. The general welfare of all the people is an ideal lost in the self-seeking of those determined to take more while others must lose or give more.

Losing a basic value, Posterity is itself threatened. To reverse this destructive self-seeking trend, we, the people, can search for those whose actions demonstrate their dedication to the common good. Let us act to restore unity, tranquility, security, well-being and freedom throughout the land. Whatever is good for all people everywhere is good for each one.

Serving the common good is a value to live by.

Some Of Your Best Friends Do It

by Bob Scheier

Theft on campus–stereos ripped off, wallets stolen, cars stripped in V-lot. Can anything be done about it?

Nothing can stop a pro, but for the amateurs who do most of the stealing on campus, a tiny row of numbers on the radio, bicycle, or stereo speaker they cart off could prove to be trouble.

Those numbers are a registration number engraved on the object courtesy of the UMass Security Department, which then keeps the number on file for the checking of suspected stolen goods.

So far, according to the Security Department, over 85 per cent of the students who have been given a chance to have some of their possessions engraved with an identification number have done so. And the numbers have led to the recovery of at least one stereo.

Diana White, a staff assistant at the Security Department, says engraving in the Southwest area will be done in three weeks, after which the department–which does the engraving through floor counselors and heads of residence–will move on to Northeast.

Although no dollar estimates are available for the amount of theft on campus, Ms. White said there were 807 larcenies (thefts not involving the use of force) on campus last school year, and 50 burglaries (involving breaking and entering.

The Security Department also estimates twice as many crimes as those reported take place.

Most minor theft, said Ms. White, was done by the residents of dormitories, such as ripping of wallets. She estimated most other theft was done by non-students. The most obvious object of theft on campuses, of course, the bicycle.

Much has been written about a thief-proof bicycle lock, but according to Ms. White, there is no such thing. "A good thief can cut through any lock, she said.

In addition, many people make the mistake of locking their bikes by the front wheel, allowing a thief to merely remove the wheel and take the rest of the bike.

She added that people shouldn't bring 10-speed bikes to school with them, because it is impossible to ride them at high speed on campus without endangering pedestrians.

If someone does want to bring a 10-speed up to tour the countryside in, "they should keep it in their room," she added.

She says most of the stolen bikes stay on campus, either for the thief's use or to be sold to another student. She said that in some years, bike theft rings from Springfield, Hartford, or Boston would rent a truck and go through the campus picking up bikes.

Ms. White added Southwest had the dubious distinction of leading the campus in crime, with one third of the robberies, half the burglaries, one third of the assaults and a quarter of the larcenies on campus.

"It's easy to rip off the towers," she said. "Someone just has to put the elevator on hold, run out, and rip off the rooms closest to the elevators?"

Are door locks secure?

"No," she said. "You can put your foot right through one. At the beginning of the semester, people just went around trying doors. Later on, they just kick them in."

The identification numbers can be engraved by the electric pencil on "just about anything" said Ms. White, except rough wood, from which they can be filed.

And once the numbers have be-

Electric Follies

by Jeff Clayton

Friends, give me this opportunity to plead with you. Our civilization stands upon a knife-edge; but one false step and the glory that is ours shall topple untimely and our light be forever extinguished in the miasma of barbarism, the pit of black iniquity, the ash-piles of Passaic. What man among us has ever looked on Passaic and understood the meaning of what he saw, or walked in thought past Levittown Plastics and retained his faculties? Yea, brothers, I say to you, of such materials are made the shits of dogs.

There are some among us who hold there immortal souls so cheap as to tempt the hand of Fortune, and ignoring the lessons of Time they reject the very bread of Life, forsaking Parents and House & Garden alike on a vain Argosy into Popular Electronics. Others tread the same path through weakness of will, their backbone and determination sapped by evenings of dissipation filled with loud, pulsating sound, ennervating stimulants and pliant coeds. Whether through ingratitude or mere lack of fibre, soon or late all are face to face with abomination. The leering invitation comes: will they dance the cybernetic jitterbug, subsystems to an inhuman organization of induction coils and rubber bands, a man-made fiend in the guise of a game? Will they swell the ranks of the disciples of gravity? Will they follow the silver ball?

Dear friends, as you love your lives and your President Wood, eschew the Demon Pinball. To the uninitiates, it may appear nothing more than a diverting sport, a scholarly recreation, a distraction for the overwrought Student Brain, whereas it is in fact the chief corruption of the unregenerate Student Body. Their drawn faces bathed in unholy light, their agonized frames twitching spastically in time with the stutter of digit counters, their glazed eyes assaulted by blinking comic-strip panels depicting infernal sufferings and ecstasies, they stand row on row in a Pinball Hell of their own creation, conscious only of the oily ball bearing floating before them and the tingle of high-voltage alternating current in their bloodless hands. Hours and days pass unheeded as the miscreant wards of the Commonwealth stand shoulder-to-shoulder with dope addicts and Negroes fighting for survival against the malignant alien intelligence under whose thrall they feed an unspecified number of quarters into the polystyrene trays of organized crime.

Slight is their hope. The demon cult which has stretched forth its spectral hand to claim them relinquishes none of its own. They have no choice but to become abject servants of a race of machines, milking coinboxes and oiling plungers, or priest of the cult, "Wizards" who conduct novices in the eternal ritual of electronic self-pollution.

Even now, another lost soul hastens to claim his mechanical harlot with a coin for the greed-slot. Was it his excited imagination, or did it seem to clutch hungrily at the proffered fingers? He shudders suddenly. Those rumors of syphilitic coin chutes...it seems absurd, and yet...

The last stirrings of common sense are stilled by a gesture from the machine. It chatters with anticipation. A transmogrified Marlon Brando sneers down out of the glass underneath the legend, The Godfather. The struggle will be sharp and brief; in a rare moment of suspended natural law he has zeroed the scoreboard this morning. How sweet it had been! A thin, angry streamer of acrid smoke had emerged inside the glass case as the center post quivered Reckoningly. He was sure he had beaten the house against its will, but it was so hard to tell; time and again he had been allowed to amass a few games before the inevitable three-week losing streak. He had not noticed the indelible fluid exuded onto his aching fingers by the flippers of the beaten table.

But now, at 1:30 AM without a single soul to witness the solitary combat, there is no time for reflection as he steps to his place before the oddly excited machine. The first ball rockets out of the groove before he fully releases the plunger, but he is ready. He's been recognized. So much the better--the conflict will be more exhilarating, the contest more noble. With characteristic chivalry, he allows the first ball to dribble down into the cyborg's hot gullet without lifting a finger. There was a time when he would have fought bitterly to keep the ball an extra second, score another 10 points, but his was the addict's wisdom; no point in prolonging the inevitable. You went down in 4 or you went down in 5. The only difference was one of style.

The table seems to be shivering slightly. Marlon Brando's chartreuse face is gradually flushing Fresno Orange. It's now or never. The ball hovers, dances on the top rollovers. Perilously close to tilting, he urges the ball toward a bumper, and watches the indescribable elegance with which it curves down and out, threading every obstacle, gone beyond all hope of recovery. His face sags in disbelief. At last, as though by long awaited signal, the table goes into action. The score turns over to zero. The ball indicator flashes 3 - 4 - 5 - GAME OVER, and eerie metallic snickering echoes through the hall as 150, 000 VAC shoot through the Student of Pinball, reducing him to a puddle of gum not unlike a spilled soft drink. But not before his silver fillings slipped into the swollen, expectant coin box.

Mass. Discrimination

by Lois Lane

Ninety-three per cent of the top positions in the executive branch of the Massachusetts government are held by men. Ninety-seven per cent of the Commonwealth's judges are men. And 98 per cent of the legislators in the General Court are men. These are among the findings of a report, Who Rules Massachusetts Women, which has just been published by the Women's Research Center of Boston.

Woman's Notes

The report, which breaks down the statistics for each of the three branches of state government, found overwhelming male domination at all top policy-making levels. As the six women who complied the study write, "it was worse than we imagined."

There are only five women out of 280 members of the legislature, and no women serve in top leadership or staff positions. None of the state's six elected executives is a woman. Several key executive departments have no women in important positions, and the 61 women out of 906 who can be said to be at policy-making levels are usually either a lone woman in an all-male department, an unpaid member of a citizens' advisory board, or in a position concerned with "women's affairs" which is required by law to be held by a woman. Until two 1972 appointments, out of 258 judges in the Commonwealth only eight were women, with only one woman judge serving above the district court level.

The analysis of these statistics, which forms the heart of the report, shows that male dominance of state government does have an adverse effect on women. Bills passed--and not passed--in the last two legislative sessions show the sexual bias in the General Court. Administrative decisions affecting women show the same kinds of discrimination and over-protection. Court decisions on divorce, child support, abortion, and prostitution serve to keep women in their place.

Women are shut out from high public office for several reasons, the report continues. The party structure is male dominated. The women make coffee rather than "participate in decisions over beer and cigars." Women do not belong to the "old boy" network through which appointees are recruited for top administrative and judicial positions. And women do not control corporate sources of wealth to allow them to take the campaign contribution route to the rewards of public life.

The report recommends three strategies to give women effective control over political decisions which affect their lives. One is to put many more women into public office (this year more than twice as many women are running for office as in 1970). But there is a caveat: such women must be responsive and accountable to their female constituency, for "we do not need more women in office; we need more feminists in office." Second, women must work to bring about institutional changes such as in provisions for birth control and child care. This means creating power bases of women so there will be the strength to effect change. And third, concludes the report, women must come together to build alternatives to present institutions which will bring a liberated and humane society.

The Women's Research Center of Boston is an interdisciplinary collective research group of women social scientists concerned with feminist social change. Center members seek to link their research skills to action, focusing on problems faced by women in the society.

Use This Handbook: Now More Than Ever

by Howard Bloom and Steve Ferber

Do your parents and friends have you over a barrel when you try to debate the merits of the candidates in the upcoming presidential election with them? Do you go to sleep at night knowing, dammit, that there's something you don't like about the man who's running our country, but you just can't put your finger on it? You know you're anti-Nixon, but when it comes to telling someone the reasons why, your mind goes blank trying to sort out the facts about all the scandals and misdeeds perpetrated in the White House during the past four years. Well, friend, blanch no more at the sight of a loyal Administration follower because here is all the ammunition you'll ever need to make your case against Richard Nixon.

First, mention Vietnam and wait for your political adversary to tell you it's a dead issue since Nixon's already brought most of our boys home. Quickly, now, tell him that Nixon has presided over the Vietnam war for longer than it took the U.S. to fight and win World War II. Mention that in January 1969 there were 72,000 navy and air force men of the 7th fleet of Vietnam and at the bomber bases in Thailand. Now, after over three years of winding down the war, there are 84,000.

In 1969 the U.S. was using 100 B-52 bombers in Vietnam. Today? The number is over 200. During that same period of time, you continue, 4,500,000 Indochinese civilians have been killed, wounded or made homeless and 1,500,000 soldiers on all sides have been killed or wounded.

You see you're not quite getting through to your friend because it doesn't matter to him that mostly little yellow people are getting annihilated. Americans are his only concern. Tell him to try these on for size. While Nixon's been President, 20,000 American lives have been lost, 110,000 Americans have been wounded, and 500 more have been captured or are missing in action.

The war has cost American taxpayers $59,600,000,000 in the last three years and eight months, and in addition $3,000,000,000 worth of U.S. aircraft had been destroyed in Vietnam. If your friend's not wavering by now he's not human.

Finally, hit him between the eyes with this piece from a New York Times correspondent in Saigon, which said the Communist "military position in the South is vastly better than it was a year ago, and is virtually unchallenged in Laos and Cambodia. As Maurice, or John, or whatever your friend's name is, what have Nixon's bombing attacks been doing for the past year? In fact, what have they been doing the past three years and 8 months for that matter? Tell him about a guy you're sure he'd love to meet-an American general in Da Nang-who said, "We are really giving it to them with B-52 strikes. Out in the hills around Quang Tri, wherever there are reports of two or three people gathered together, they are being hit with B-52's."

Round one is over, the minute break is up and your friend has almost recovered from your first onslaught. It's time to start again, but try a new issue now-talk economics. Let him know that presently there are five million Americans unemployed. See if he doesn't cringe when you tell him that Mr. Nixon's four year Republican deficit has climbed to an all-time high of $75 million. On top of that in our supermarkets we have the highest prices in the last 14 years. Last year the United State's trade deficit was the worst in this century. Show no mercy to him, not while 6,000,000 more people have been added to the welfare rolls in the last four years.

Don't stop now, though, because obviously anyone who supports Nixon has a short memory (re: October 9, 1968-"If in November this war is not over, I say the American people will be justified in electing new leadership.") and by tomorrow he'll be up and about again, soliciting funds or shredding documents for the Committee to Re-Elect the President (CREEP).

Set the scene for the wheat scandal for your friend. Russia was hurting as far as wheat went this year, right? The answer to their problem was to import a great deal of it from the U.S., then. So that you don't dominate the conversation too much, ask your buddy how come the ordinary wheat farmer sold his crop early at low prices, while the big grain dealers knew enough to hold off and sold theirs to Russia for much higher prices? If he's fumbling for an answer, as he should be, help your friend out. Tell him the answer is obvious-the big grain dealers had advance information about the Russian wheat deal. The facts of the matter are that top officers of the Agriculture department and top officials of the grain firms regularly ex-

Now offer your friend a seat and let him start to get comfortable; then set his memory back to March 12, 1971, where the Agriculture Department has just denied dairy men a request for a higher Government-ordered price support for milk. Just two weeks later, the Agriculture Department reverses itself with the result of this change of heart costing the consumer more than $5 million in higher milk prices. So, your friend says, what's wrong with a guy changing his mind? Shows he's human, doesn't it? Be kind here. Quietly tell your chum that in a lawsuit by a national farmer's organization, letters of detail were brought to light how the dairy lobby kicked in large sums of money to the Republican Party just before March 26, 1971 and just after March 26, 1971. Funny coincidence, eh? Tell your friend you'd give him a glass of milk to calm down his ulcer, but you can't afford it.

Little does your friend know, that all the while you've been holding back. But it's finally time to let Watergate out of the scandal bag. This one should sew it up.

Everyone knows what happened-reportedly five men broke into Democratic headquarters and through wiretapping and photographing of files, information was returned to the Republicans. Your embattled combatant tells you that the men had no connection with Nixon's administration.

You beg his pardon for interrupting and explain. One of the men arrested turned out to be CREEP's security coordinator. Another man involved was shown to have worked until March 29th as a consultant to presidential assistant Charles Colson. The arrested men included political lawyers and veteran CIA agents. They were given $114,000 from the Nixon campaign fund, this sum having been traced to a Miami bank account of one of the arrested.

OK, you've made your point. But hell, what's $114,000? So move in with more. Ask your pal who paid those men all that money. To whom did they give that classified information? Mr. Colson's assistant refused to answer the FBI questions about this caper. He was fired. Next to leave the organization was CREEP's treasurer, who resigned.

A sigh of relief comes over your friend's face. Gee, they weren't such important people after all. Inside you're glowing, because you haven't even mentioned any of the big boys yet.

Ask a seemingly stupid question-has he heard the names Maurice Stans and John Mitchell? Then explain that publication of evidence linked the captured agents with both of these higher ups. What next? John Mitchell resigned as Manager of CREEP, allegedly to placate his wife. And Mr. Stans, who kept $350,000 in cash in a safe in his secretary's office-why he's merely the chief fund raiser for the campaign. And the money wasn't even credited to the Nixon campaign account until May 25th, supposedly having been left over from the 1968 campaign.

You leave Watergate, but keep plugging away. It's FBI time. Here we have and administration on the edge of corruption so Nixon calls on the Federal Bureau of Investigation, a non-partisan organization. Yet the FBI is now headed by a political lawyer, who is a Nixon protege. His name! L. Patrick Gray. O.K. so Gray's the head man, says your opponent, who's to say the FBI hasn't done its job? The facts do: Federal agents did not obtain a search warrant and make an exhaustive search through the offices of CREEP to find any scrap of information that might detail all the ramifications of this operation.

You're getting rather tired of drilling the present administration into submission but seize the moment for a few

1) Why does President Nixon refuse to disclose from whom he received that $10 million before April 7th of this year? Who are the men who contributed and what do they hope to get in return?

2) Why did a businessman in Minnesota and a group of men in Texas insist upon anonymity after contributing $25,000 and $89,000 respectively?

Finally, if Goliath is tired of hearing about killing and money and milk and wheat and spy stories, then ask him why Nixon claimed earlier this year that Edmund Muskie was "consciously aiding and abetting the enemy" by talking about the war; and not two weeks later came back with, "I do not question the patriotism or the sincerity of those who disagree with my policies to bring peace."

Then ask your friend how many faces Nixon has, two or three?

engraved, even the electric pencil can sometimes not blur or erase them.

So far, she says, around 225 out of 250 students approached have agreed to have the numbers placed on some of their possessions. The rest either don't want it done, or don't have anything they want to protect with the numbers.

"Last year, there was some reluctance to record the numbers because people thought they would go on some sort of a 'master rip-off list,'" she added. "But the cards with the numbers are kept in the security office, where there is a police officer 24 hours a day."

The stereo recovered through the use of numbers is part of $100,000 worth of stolen material recovered this year, according to Det. Sgt. Frank Mazzei of the department.

He said stolen goods, such as stereos, are sometimes resold on campus. Sometimes, if the buy is too good, the Security Department investigates.

"We don't have the kind of money to buy a lot of the suspicious stereos offered," he said, but added the security department had been the purchaser of the stolen stereo.

He added a group of persons from Western Massachusetts had raised several departments on campus during the 71-72 school year, stealing equipment ranging up to oscilloscopes.

This equipment was stolen and sold to fences around the country, said Mazzei.

JIM LAVRAKAS

Put on the other side, fashion a top and you'll have some really nice coffins.

He said that about 5 students on campus each year are convicted of buying stolen goods. He said the decision on whether a student bought an item in "good faith" that it was not stolen was done on a case by case basis.

The use of the identification numbers would not stymie a professional, said Ms. White, but could be used against an amateur who didn't have time to remove the numbers or re-sell the item far away.

Another preventive measure–this one against car thiefs–that works mostly for amateurs is to lock the car doors, said Det. Mazzei.

"Locking the doors makes the thief work harder," he said, "and take more time. If you leave the door open, a thief can be in and out of there and take a tape deck literally in seconds."

He said even locked doors would not stop a professional.

Money for drugs, a major crime source in big cities, does not motivate much of the robbery on campus, said Ms. White. "It is mostly students who just want what they're stealing, or need some money."

She says the campus should be totally "engraved" in two months, and that from that point on just the freshmen will have to be approached.

Vietnam: The Slaughter Continues

by Galen Tinder

"I see battlefields on which we can destroy anything we locate through instant communications and the almost instantaneous application of highly lethal firepower"

-General William Westmoreland 1969

"We are really giving it to them with B52 strikes. Out in the hills around Quangtri, wherever there are reports of two or three people gathered together they are being hit with B52s"

-American Officer 1972

-Karl Jaspers

A curious and pervasive calmness has cast its enveloping hood over the once passionate debate surrounding the war in Southeast Asia. As Nixon began withdrawing the last ground troops from Vietnam the war as a potent moral issue began to subside and currant debate focuses on the POWs and the possible composition of a coalition government. Many people seem to assume that the United States has, on the whole, extricated itself from a messy situation and that only a few annoying technical details need to be cleared up before it can begin the process of forgetting that a country such as Vietnam exists.

Yet at this very moment the President of the United States is reigning death, destruction and suffering down upon the 18 million peasants of South Vietnam who we are reputedly supposed to be saving from the clutches of Communist agression.

The Vietnam war is soon going to take its place alongside the Roman persecution of the Christians, the Inquisition, the Nazi death camps and the Stalinist purges as one of the more henious moral crimes committed during the history of Western civilization.

Talk of this kind is often regarded by many sensitive people as excessive and perhaps even hysterical but very few people realize the extent to which an entire country, an entire culture has virtually been ground into the dirt.

During the entire course of the war the United States has dropped more bombs on Vietnam than it dropped on all fronts during the Second World War and the level of bombing is currently hovering around the 100,000 tons per month mark. Now, one effect of this bombing is to destroy military targets such as gasoline storage tanks, military supply dumps and enemy outposts. The other effect however, is to kill, maim, and make homeless hundreds of thousands of South Vietnamese civilians. A Senate subcommittee has estimated that in the last two years 400,000 people have been killed throughout Indochina and that in the past 3 1/2 years 165,000 civilians have been killed and 400,000 wounded in South Vietnam alone. 6,000,000 (one third the total population), have been made refugees. Speaking euphemistically, it sounds decidedly odd to hear President Nixon declare that we are preventing a bloodbath by supporting the props holding up the Theiu regime.

A large proportion of the South Vietnamese refuges have been driven from their homes by the free "fire zone" technique. The United States has always had a problem when faced with the task of attempting to flush out suspected Viet Cong from South Vietnamese villages. As most people know one method used in the past has been to shoot everything in the village which moves on two legs. Although this is highly effective it has not gone over very well with the press and the public. The "free fire" technique is also fairly effective but not as conspicuously outrageous. By this method the South Vietnamese peasants are forcably evacuated from the village, their homes, livestock, and personal possessions destroyed. The village is then declared a free fire zone and U.S. bombs reduce everything to holes and mud. A Cornell University study noted that ". . . a B52 can deliver up to thirty tons of explosives in a dense pattern. A typical mission, consisting of six of these bombers flying in formation, saturates an area of more than a square mile. Everything within the area is demolished." When the war is finally over many of these refuges will have no homes and no arable land to return to.

What US bombs are doing to the South Vietnam landscape is almost equally as devastating. It has been conservatively estimated that during the Nixon Administration United States bombing has produced 7,500,000 craters which have displaced 750,000,000 cubic yards of earth.

One quarter of South Vietnam's arable land has been reduced to a blackish rubble and is no longer fit for farming.

In addition the United States has used herbicidal chemicals on South Vietnam and it is estimated by the American Association for the Advancement of Science that 5% of its crop has been sprayed resulting in 600,000 civilians being cut off from their normal supply of food. In addition at least 20% of the forests of South Vietnam have been defoliated by chemicals. Although the use of chemicals in Vietnam has been discontinued the effects in terms of misery and ecological destruction will remain for many years.

Yet the man who has presided over much of this destruction is admired by millions of people, referred to as a man of peace by intelligent and distinguished Americans and is on his way toward winning a landslide victory against an opponent who would end it all if given the chance.

Beyond even this sickness there are few voices of protest against our policy of murder and the small number which are raised such as those of Kurt Voldheim and George McGovern echo back and forth in the grotesque and deadening silence between the walls of death and apathy.

There are several possible reasons which may be used to explain and for some excuse, the lack of concern which most Americans feel over the immoral acts being perpetrated in their name.

One is that some people are simply not aware of the extent to which the United States is wiping out a nation in Indochina. Although liberal newspapers like the Washington Post and the New York Times give the civilian effects of the war a good deal of coverage the news media in general gives it only scant attention, if any at all.

Secondly many people find it difficult to conceptualize what it means for a country to be bombed and what it means for the civilian population of a nation to be killed, maimed, and driven from its homes. The United States, unlike even most European countries, has never come under attack from a hostile power. Hence for many Americans war is an unreal abstraction, particularly if that war is 10,000 miles away.

Closely tied to this is the fact that most Americans find it difficult to relate to Oriental human beings. The United States could never bomb a European country the way it is bombing South Vietnam because the European experience is easily relatable to the American in terms of general culture and lifestyle. It is not as easy to care about a collection of short, oddly colored Orientals who are way out of the mainstream of Western culture. Somehow they are simply not quite on the same level as a regular human beings who act and talk in ways in herently comprehensible to Americans. This is simply to say that there is an element of racism in America's general support of the bombing.

It is impossible to predict how long the bombing will continue particularly since President Nixon has stated that he is unwilling to set any time limit on its possible duration. In the meantime the United States will continue to slaughter hundreds of defenceless civilians who wish only to live in peace. It will continue to repudiate the ideals upon which it was founded. And for what? For a worthless scrap of honor, drenched in the thickness of innocent blood, which Nixon can hoist up alongside our flag while telling us that we should be proud of what our country has done to perserve honor and peace throughout the world.

Underneath the popularity which President Nixon commands there lies a sickening grotesqueness which transcends the suffocating banality which has draped America and connects with the roots tragedy.

One can only hope that this country will turn inward and recognize what it has done before the wispish strands of guilt have worn too thin to be grasped.

The war dead. "...for many Americans war is an unreal abstraction, particularly if that war is 10,000 miles away."

"Death As A Part Of Life"

by Donna Roberts

A Happy Death (1972) by Albert Camus, Translated from the French by Richard Howard, Alfred A. Knopf, Inc., 167 pages, $5.95.

To regard death as merely a part of life and to prepare for it as one of the most profound experiences in life may strike some people as being morbid or deviant, especially if one fears death. The protagonist in Albert Camus' A Happy Death fears not death, but its way of creeping up on a body suddenly, giving no notice. So at the point at which we come in on Patrice Mersault's life we see him preparing for a happy death, living his life to Make its ending pleasing, and above all preparing to be aware of the moment when it comes in order to meet it face to face.

Taken from the notebooks of Albert Camus, A Happy Death is his first novel, written during his early twenties, between 1936 and 1938. It was not published until 1971 in France and now, less than a year after its first publication in French, it appears in an English edition. The obvious question that arises from this is why it wasn't published when first written. Outside of personal reasons that Camus may have had, A Happy Death is generally believed to be a precurser of The Stranger, a later novel and one of his most famous works in English. He undoubtedly found the latter of the two expressed better by its form and its subject, the theme he wanted to get across to readers.

A Happy Death depicts the life and death of Patrice Mersault, that of a commonplace office worker leading a mundane existence in a rather nondescript Algerian city. When we meet him, his life is at a very low ebb, and it is just dawning on him that he is not very happy. The center of his life consists primarily of himself, with his mistress Marthe and his vague little apartment where he and his now dead mother had once resided, thrown in for his pleasure and convenience. Next door to him lives Cardonna, a barrel-maker whose life is even more worthless than his. A turning point in the life of Mersault occurs quite early in the story, when Marthe, in the process of relating to him the names of her past lovers, mentions one whom he does not know. His curiosity, added to his sexual jealousy, compel him to meet this man, Richard Zagreus, who is now a cripple. Marthe introduces them and it is from Zagreus that Mersault learns the secret to a happy life. The only way one could be happy was if one had money, he told Mersault. He did not mean to imply that money is happiness but that money sets the stage for happiness, in saving men time, in allowing them the free time in which to be happy.

After developing an apparently sincere comradie with Zagreus, and taking his advice, he kills him, taking his money. Later on in the novel Mersault refers to his murder as an act of innocence and in effect the murder is not as brutal as the facts may make it seem. Zagreus had, for a long while before the accident which left him a cripple, saved his money in order to be happy. The amputation of his two legs though, stunted this ambition, and he was in the habit of keeping a revolver and a suicide note in a drawer in his room. Mersault is aware of this and although Zagreus doesn't ask to be killed, the revolver is the weapon which Mersault uses. Aware that he now has the prerequisite to happiness Mersault takes Zagreus' money, and deserting Marthe, his apartment, and Algiers ventures on a trip through central Europe, a trip that Camus himself made during the summer of 1936. Realizing this miserable attempt at happiness in this fashion, Mersault departs from Europe and returns to Algiers.

Albert Camus

Upon returning he makes another attempt, or experiment in happiness in seeking out the "House Above The World," the home of three young student girl friends of his who make their home in alienating themselves from the world. Mersault gradually tires of their form of carefree happiness and embarks on yet another experiment after marrying Lucienne, a dull, reserved young lady who suited his fancy while at the "House Above the World." This happiness he attempts to find in solitude, in Chenoua, where he has bought a house by the sea, inviting Lucienne to visit him whenever it seems necessary. Chenoua, is a place of the sea, the sun and of the ultimate freedom which nature affords man, and for a short time Mersault experiences a sort of happiness there. Mersault is now able to summon happiness almost at will.

As he explains to Bernard, a friend he has acquired while living at the sea, happiness is a state of mind, a state which you conjure up in your spirit, not a series of external conditions to which one reacts pleasurably. But, from the beginning of the novel there is an aura of death around the protagonist, and in effect, the story of A Happy Death does culminate in the death of Mersault, caused by his pleurisy. The death is a satisfactory one, since during it he has maintained a state of happiness for which he prepared so feverishly, and as well a state of consciousness, an awareness of the force that was overtaking him. Mersault dies a slow conscious death from the beginning of the novel to its end; it is a life in preparation for death and the question of how to prepare oneself for a happy death has been answered, at least for Mersault.

For those who have read The Stranger, there appear to be many parallels between the two novels in detail as well as in essence. Both protagonists carry the name of Mersault and both are seen as following in the wake of a past life lived with a mother in the same type of apartment. They each are acquainted with rather eccentric neighbors, Raymond the wretch in The Stranger and Cardonna the wretch in A Happy Death. They each possess mistresses who are amazingly flat characters, seen through the narrow scope of the pleasure they afford the Mersaults. The women seem to have little idea of whom they are relating to in their love affairs and none of them seem to really care. The name of the local barkeeper in each setting is Celeste. Finally, at the core of each novel is a murder and the fateful death of the murderer.

Camus has each of his protagonists murder in innocence. In The Stranger it was "the sun" which caused Mersault to kill. In A Happy Death it was the simple wish for happiness which prompted a murder as well as certain attitudes of the victim. In each case there seems to be little reason for such crimes but we must remember that in each case the killers need little reason and to them crime is not inherent in the murders.

We notice though that Camus is so much closer to the protagonist of A Happy Death than he is to the one of The Stranger. This is ironic, since Happy Death is written in third person and The Stranger in the first, a device which one would expect to personalize the main character. The Mersault of The Stranger is indifferent to his environment almost to the point of being sterile whereas the Happy Death Mersault is full of the poetry that Camus has invested in the first novel. Both are driven by the freedom and beauty manifested in the wind, the sea, and the sun of Algiers, but in Happy Death Camus describes the beauty of these elements in greater detail.

It is best for the new reader of Camus to keep in mind that he was the spokesman for an age which philosophied outside of the Church. Also it is necessary to realize that he was a man who saw man as continously at odds against an irrational world, but that he detested the blood and violence of revolution. Also, he balked at being referred to as an Existentialist or at being given any other term that classified him. It is also important that Camus intended for his views to be very subtly implicit in his writings but not obvious, that his novels and stories weren't meant to serve the world as moral allegories. This all is necessary for those who seek to discover the artist in his work, for the person who is ignorant of Camus will no doubt think him as somewhat callous, and insensitive after reading A Happy Death.

Saving Mankind Is His Modest Goal

by Gauri Bhatia

THE PETER PRESCRIPTION
by Dr. Laurence J. Peter

"Man on occasion, has caught a glimpse of his reflection in a mirror, and not immediately recognizing himself, has begun to laugh before realizing what he was doing."

A truism from Dr. Laurence J. Peter's The Peter Principle. Funny, you say? A witty, highly perceptive remark? Well, you won't find many of those in Dr. Peter's new success, The Peter Prescription.

A year ago, Dr. Peter's The Peter Principle reached enormous heights on the bestseller charts and was lauded by various critics as being fascinating, innovative, "a remarkable book." The Peter Prescription is already keeping a steady pace on the bestseller lists, but it differs from the first book. It's bad.

The Peter Principle did not, in my opinion, deserve all of the acclaim it received. The Peter Prescription deserves none. In Principle, Dr. Peter explained why things go wrong in everyday life ... In Prescription he shows us how to put them right.

The average reader may find himself a bit turned off by the claim made by Dr. Peter on the book cover – "Sixty-six formulas for improving the quality of your life." He did not, for me, live up to that claim ... In fact he placed my life at the -1 point on his "happiness" scale ... He wasted precious hours when I could have been reading something else. Anything else. Even old copies of Scientific American reprints.

Prescription is divided into three sections. "Incompetence Treadmill" which is basically a rehash of the Principle or what makes things go wrong. "Protect your competence" - how to remain good (if you're lucky enough to already be so), and "Manage for competence" - - how to increase efficiency.

The key phrase on which Principle was written was "levels of competence." Dr. Peter asserts that, in man's constant efforts for higher position, he usually reaches beyond his own capabilities to his "level of incompetence." In The Peter Prescription he shows us how to reach our respective levels of competence - in work, family, friend, relationships - and once there, how to stay there. The book is peppered with examples of the failures and successes (mostly failures) of people and companies and how they relate to the Peter theology of life.

But Dr. Peter wanders off on many tangents. He issues dully sermonic and highly unnecessary diatrabes on "taking care of our body functions" (Eat right, get plenty of rest, and remember Bayer works wonders). Most of us left such nagging behind with our mother.

Peters is also prone to intolerable cliches and poor puns. "Right now," he tells us, "is the beginning of the rest of your life." Original he's not. One student, having just finished reading the book, summed it up by categorically stating, "It tells you everything you already knew."

A man who has received plaudits for being an intensely intelligent social scientist and part of the "Prescriptive Teaching System" - an innovative program for the development of competent educators - Dr. Peter seems to have a great deal going for himself. One wishes one could say the same about his book.

The Peter Prescription may be worth reading ... if only for the quotations - virtual gems - that one finds interspersed throughout every paragraph. Appropriate sayings from many witty men, ranging from Voltaire - "Doubt is not a pleasant mental state, but certainty is a ridiculous one," to Wilson (Flip) - "The cost of living is going up and the chance of living is going down."

The short biography of Dr. Peter on the jacket of The Peter Prescription ends by stating, "Dr. Peter has dedicated his talents to developing systems to improve education and prescriptions for avoiding the pitfalls of incompetence. His modest ambition is to save mankind." I think Dr. Peter should start by taking his book off the market.

The Elitist Elixer On Archie Bunker's Table

by Frank Johnson

It used to be that wine was an elitist elixir, an ethereal nectar reserved either for kings and nobles or those with superhuman palates and unlimited bank accounts. It seems that today these stereotypes are no longer valid. National wine sales for the economic year 1971 indicated a phenomenal 50% increase over a one-year period, an unprecedented gain in both profits and consumption. Clearly, wine is now a substance that is as appropriate on Archie Bunker's dinner table as it was at the banquets of the Russian Tsars in Imperial days.

Therein lies a basic reason for this series. The Daily Collegian, through its various channels, endeavors to protray and report items of news and general interest to the University community. In 1971, so the story goes, a few interested officials conceived the idea of a wine-tasting course to be offered for credit at the University, in connection with an already-offered but relatively obscure agriculture course. Word got around of this projected venture (through the grape vine, perhaps?), and in the end the course had to be abandonned because of the overwhelming demand for the few places offered.

Instances like these patently justify some sort of useful journal in lieu of the fact that the University community was deprived of an opportunity to enroll in a wine-tasting course. As outlined in these columns, the solution will be to organize one's own wine-tasting programs, hopefully with the aid of pertinent material on various international wines and some appropriate history. The tone of the columns will stress the importance of individual impressions in the form of what you, as a wine buyer and taster, will find enjoyable about wine.

In assessing my qualifications for the job, knowledgeable readers may already have taken notice of my earlier columns on high fidelity (we issues), and the question: "What are his qualifications?" is a fair one. It may be answered in the form of a pun-over the summer, my literary emphasis has changed from aural sensations to oral sensations, and as a poll last May indicated, more Collegian readers are interested in reading about something that is relatively easy to experience. It takes time to educate a palate for fine wine, but it takes longer to study the intricacies of electronics, and the return does not come as quickly. Henceforth, these issues will be devoted to a few quick and easy steps so as to allow the interested reader membership in the Confrerie des Chevaliers du Tastevin, University-style.

But first, a few terms should be considered. It is common for someone well-known for his interest in wines to be labelled a "wine connoisseur", or, more derogatorily, a "wine snob". Like the rapid increase in wine consumption, these terms seem to have penetrated basic vocabulary, and often they are applied rather loosely. Strictly speaking, a wine "connoisseur" is a professional who derives his income, as well as his pleasure, from daily sampling or wine, or else contributions to wine journals. A "wine amateur" is a more appropriate label for those of us who enjoy wine either for a hobby or as a means of social cameraderie, in other words, the "silent majority". One authority, William S. Leedom, has said that there are really only a handful of "connoisseurs" in the world, and it is best to substitute "amateur" in those cases where wine does not constitute a profession.

As for "wine snob", this term may also have somewhat incorrect usages these days. The wine amateur should never let ritual interfere with pleasure; it he does, then the color and shape of the glassware becomes more important than the wine itself, two degrees Fahrenheit in temperature can be enough to spoil an evening, the stigma of "growth" or "class" overshadows a wine's intrinsic quality, and the very fact that a wine may or may not be French can be enough to send a wine snob into a fit of apoplexy.

Historically, there was a reason for both an undue concern for the oft-neglected parameters involving wine service and the loose label of "wine snob". Until the time of Louis Pasteur, no one had any real knowledge of the biology of wine fermentation and preservation; what may now seem inordinate ritual was in previous times considered necessary for wine's preservation. In addition to the dearth of knowledge, the British were among the most enthusiastic admirers of French wine, a tale of love dating back to Medieval times and before, when England owned part of France in Brittainy and the Aquitaine. In the 19th Century a group of English wine enthusiasts revolved around one figure, Lord Saintsbury, who has been regarded as the "dean of wine snobs". Although Saintsbury assisted in the promulgation of information about wine, his taste for the more fastidious aspects of wine and wine service ranged from the sublime to the ridiculous. Thus it is just to criticize a modern-day Saintsbury for being overly fussy about wine, but it is quite unjust to call someone a "wine snob" simply because he is concerned about the quality of the wine he drinks and is interested enough to want to learn more about what constitutes fine wine.

Technically speaking, "wine" is a term that generally applies to two groups of substances ranging from a minimum of about 8% to a maximum of 23%, ethyl alcohol or ethanol, C_2H_5OH. The first group falls from 15% to 8% ethanol and is called "light" or "table" wine. This will be the group for our discussion. The second group, ranging from 15% to 23% alcohol, is called "fortified" wine. Fortified wines are wines that have had their alcoholic strength or proof increased by the addition of brandy. "Natural" or unfortified wines generally cannot exceed 15% alcohol because the fermentation process does not allow it. (Wine yeasts convert grape sugar into food and in so doing emit two waste products: carbon dioside, and ethanol. When the level of ehtanol exceeds 15% it has an ingibiting influence on further fermentation and the yeasts die.) An example of a fortified wine is the familiar sherry from Jerez, Spain, which achieves about 20% alcoholic content by the injection of fine brandy at a critical stage in fermentation. Finally, wine retaining carbon dioxide so as to effervesce is called "sparkling" wine; wine that does not is appropriately called "still" wine.

The alcoholic content of a wine is important, not for its stupor-inducing purposes, but for purposes of revenue control and taxation. It is also important for an appreciation of a wine's qualities. Wine tasters refer to the amount of alcohol (relatively speaking) as body when it is being sampled on the palate; alcohol when combined with other volatile substances forms bouquet when wine is being sniffed, and aroma when the wine is being internally appreciated after a preliminary taste impression. These are the basic wine-tasting terms used to evaluate a wine being considered. If its scent were pleasant, one might point out its bouquet; if it had firm alcoholic content, it would have body, and aroma if everything worked out in the end. But given to exaggerations of wine's delights, wine lovers might introduce other terms like "breed", a nebulous term whose definition can only be approximated in terms of very high quality; "finesse", or smoothness; "presumption", "balance", "spice", and so on. The ingenuity in working such words into wine vocabulary is considerable, but these words will only make sense (in many cases) to those who use them. It is best to evaluate a wine in terms of basic scents and tastes in the beginning, and then devise other verbal means for communicating subtle non-verbal impressions later on.

Finally, mention should be made of the fact that the color of a wine is derived mostly from the alcohol dissolving pigments in the grape skin. Red wine is produced from primarily red wine grapes, it is true, but Champagne is often made from red grapes as well, even though the wine itself may not be red. If red grape skins are taken out of the pressed juice or "must" very early, then no time is allowed for alcohol to dissolve the pigment on the skins, and the resulting wine will be white. If the skins are allowed to remain in the must for a limited time only (usually 24 hours) then a small amount of pigment will be imparted, and the wine is a rose, taking on a reddish, but not dark red, color.

At the close of this article, it might seem that, because of the current legal drinking age in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, exhortations to drink wine among a community rich in minors might seem a bit specious. On the other hand, the State of New York is an area well-known for its 18-year-old drinking laws, and Mass. is currently amending its legislation to allow18-year-olds the right to drink in Feb.1 might add that the United States is one of the few countries in the world which denies the right to drink until 21 years of age. In Germany the legal drinking age is 16, and in France wine is apt to be far cheaper than milk, which explains why many French children enjoy wine soon after they are weaned.

If the United States were interested in learning from other countries, it could be shown quite graphically that in countries that do not place undue emphasis on wine restriction, and in cultures which have assimilated wine as a basic food, there is less apt to be chronic alcoholism than there is in spirit-oriented cultures. Italy, for instance, leads the world in wine production, and France comes in second, yet neither of the countries suffers from undue alcoholism, nor is excessive drinking encouraged. Because wine in America is technically classified as an intoxicating beverage, it is apt to be used as such, rather than an enjoyable food. The point of these articles, however, is not to bemoan this fate, but rather to allow a new look at wine, in lieu of the current popularity it now enjoys in this country, a nation of martini-drinkers.

Stranger In His Native Land

by Ed Smith

Last week I was given the opportunity of speaking with Mr. Vine Deloria, Jr. during a WMUA interview. After speaking with him personally and then hearing his lecture that evening, I realized that Mr. Deloria will undoubtedly become an even more controversial spokesman for the American Indian in the next few years than he is already. Some information on his background should shed some light on how he came to be engaged in his present activities.

A Standing Rock Sioux from South Dakota, Mr. DeLoria comes from a familiy of Episcopal missionaries. His grandfather was a Yankton chief converted to Christianity in the 1860's and then became a missionary among his people. Mr. Vine DeLoria, Sr. followed in his father's path and was himself a missionary for thirty-seven years among the Standing Rock Sioux of South Dakota. Although Mr. DeLoria, Jr. was quite disillusioned with the establishment of the church, Christian theology intrigued him. So after serving in the Marine Corps. and graduating from college, he entered the Augustan Lutheran Seminary in Rock Island, Illinois. He graduated from there after four years, receiving his B.D. degree in 1963. He says, in reference to this experience, in the afterword of "Custer Died for Your Sins" that, "I began to see that within a broad Christian framework many social systems could become valid and human-oriented." He has apparently changed his mind on the subject of Christianity; a point I shall explain for those of you who did not hear his lecture in just a short while.

From the seminary Mr. DeLoria went to work for the United Scholarship Service in Denver, Colorado. His main concern in this organization was obtaining scholarships for Indian students to eastern preparatory schools such as Andover, Exeter, Kent etc. In 1964, while attending the All American Indian Day Celebration in Sheridan, Wyoming, which occurred concurrently with the annual convention of the National Congress of American Indians, Mr. DeLoria found himself elected as the new director of the NCAI. During the next few years he struggled to keep the organization together as it was badly in debt. While serving in this position, Mr. DeLoria decided to go into law. He cites two reasons why he made this decision: the first was the necessity to set legal precedent in Supreme Court decisions in order to define American Indian's rights; the second is, that while travelling through the Southwest he met with several small tribes who had no understanding of what their legal rights were and he realized the necessity of people trained in law, with a knowledge of these tribes, who could advise them of their rights and confront the Vine De Loria, Jr.

Federal government with them. Consequently, he entered the law school at the University of Colorado where he got his degree doing independent study in research of Indian problems. During the last year he has been doing quite a bit of travelling, both to attend conferences and make speeches in the hope of generating interest in the situation of the modern Indian.

During the course of the interview we covered several topics, a few of which I would like to highlight here. The first concerns the effect of the recent surge in film and literature depicting the true events of the 19th century in regards to the American Indian; specifically the film "Soldier Blue" and the books "Little Big Man" and "Bury My Heart At Wounded Knee." Mr. DeLoria said he felt that these type of things, while their intentions were good, did more to hurt the modern Indian than anything else. This is because they concentrate on the past and perpetuate the stereotype of the Indian who existed over a hundred years ago. The need to show the American Indian as he is today was what prompted him, in part, to write his own books. We discussed also the cultural destruction wrought upon the Indians by whites attempting to equalize them in society. This is tied in with religion as well, the thrust of the argument being that before Indians could be given equal rights in white society they had to get rid of their "savage" beliefs and accept the white man's god. Economic issues as well, have served to undermine the basis of the Indian culture.

Hunting and fishing rights are presently one of the most explosive issues between the Indians and the government. Washington state, where Indians have been attacked by local game wardens for insisting upon their fishing rights, is an excellent example of a place where treaty rights have been blatantly disregarded. A more detailed explanation of these issues can be found in "Custer Died for Your Sins" which I would urge anyone at all concerned with this topic to read.

Throughout the time I read Mr. DeLoria's book and interviewed him, I found him both articulate and straightforward when discussing the many aspects of the modern Indian situation. After listening to his lecture though, my respect for him was somewhat diminished. In general, he is much less articulate and coherent when speaking than in his writing. This is not that essential, rather it is all the more reason for anyone who wants a clearer picture of his ideas to read his book. However, after Mr. DeLoria had made several sarcastic and rather caustic remarks about the Bureau of Indian Affairs and the Department of the Interior in general, he was asked by a member of the audience what he would do to change the BIA to make it more responsive to the needs of the Indians. Mr. DeLoria talked around the question and never really did answer it. The man who asked the question, justifiably unsatisfied, repeated his question. At this point someone attempted to shout him down; not an infrequent occurrence at UMass and due to this disruption Mr. DeLoria was able to get away without answering and merely made a few stock references to corruption in the beauracracy.

Mr. DeLoria stressed in his speech the importance of land in the Indian culture. The occupation of Alcatraz was significant because it showed the determination on the part of activists to reclaim land which the U.S. government had given up, a right assured the Indians in certain treaties. As well, he explains in "Custer Died for Your Sins" the necessity for a culture to identify with a certain area of land if it is to sustain its existence. This, he feels, will be an important issue in the Indian movement in the near future.

The dominant theme of the lecture however, was Indian religion and philosophy versus Christianity. Mr. DeLoria pointed out that if the people of this country are going to preserve the land they must make a basic reassessment of their values. Everyone must rationally examine their own philosophy of life and how it relates to the environment. Christianity, he said, deals not with this world, but rather a preparation for an after life. That in turn breeds contempt for the earth and the things of the earth which results in a desecration of the land. The Indian culture and religion, on the other hand holds all living things in great reverence. When questioned whether or not he felt there was anything salvageable in Christianity, Mr. DeLoria replied that no, there was not. Obviously, this is a direct contradiction of a statement which I quoted earlier. Granted, a man has a right to change his mind in the three years since that book came out, but does he also have the moral right to become completely intollerant of any system other than this own? This is especially significant in light of a comment he made about two well known evangelists. He said that if going to heaven meant he would have to play harps with Billy Graham and Oral Roberts he would rather go to hell. In essence, Mr. DeLoria is pursuing the same course as those two men he mentioned. In effect, he told the crowd that if we do not all start prescribing to the Indian form of religion, the country would be destroyed. To me that sounds an awful lot like a fire and brimstone speech with a twist. Mr. DeLoria also presumed in his talk that a society must be based on a religious organization, not merely a moral code, but a religious system which is integral to the culture. This certainly leaves a great deal of room for debate.

One thing is certain though, Mr. DeLoria is not a man whom you can listen to and not feel as though your mind has been pricked. He forces you to reasses a lot of traditional values and for that reason he deserves our respect. In the future I feel he will receive a lot more criticism than has been directed his way so far. That is, when the liberal criticism backlash occurs, for example when people are asked to take some action on the issues they claim to support, a hail of criticism will descend upon him as one of the foremost proponents of positive action in the Indian movement.

Turning Points

The Swedish government has decided to give a "humatarian grant" of $317 million to North Vietnam, according to a Reuters dispatch. The financial aid was announced on August 12 by Lennart Klackenberg, a Swedish Foreign Office official, who said the money was being donated to help reconstruct areas devastated by U.S. bombing. It was also reported that a large portion of the funds will be used "to rebuild a hospital in Hanoi that was destroyed in a recent air raid."

Jeffrey Smith, 22, is currently serving a seven to fifteen-year term at the Green Haven prison in New York for two marijuana sales of $10 each. Smith was convicted and sentenced in 1969--but times have changed, and he'd get off much easier now for the same offense. In fact, when the New York Times asked one New York Criminal Court judge what a youth like Jeff would get today, he replied somewhat sarcastically: "probably a testimonial dinner."

In the worship service which opened the Republican convention, Senator John Tower instructed the worshippers that "it is not a time to wallow in guilt and self-recrimination." The Texas senator shared the pulpit with Dr. Elton Trueblood, who is a Quaker, like President Nixon. Trueblood quoted Abraham Lincoln to the congregation as a guide to the Christian way of thinking about the Indochina war. He told them:

"If I had my way this war would never have commenced. If I had my way this war would have ended before this, but we find it still continues--the Lord permits it for some wise purpose of his own."

The Great Guitarro Revival?

by Mike Kostek

Roy Buchanan/Roy Buchanan and The Snakestretchers Polydor PD 5033 time: 32:02

The great guitarro revival? Roy Buchanan gives us all cause to reflect, remember and reject. Seems to me that Rock has turned itself around since the late sixties, and this album marks a fresh, healthy, dare I say it, maturity.

1965-1970. The Age Of The Cocky Rock Guitarists. And they came, belching fire, running up and down that blues scale, popping strings, and endlessly tuning up. The Yardbirds. John Mayall's Bluesbreakers. Ten Years After. Jimi Hendrix. Jethro Tull. Cream. Country Joe & The Fish. Canned Heat. The Amboy Dukes. Fleetwood Mac. The Grateful Dead. Quicksilver Messanger Service. Johnny Winter. Led Zeppelin. Jeff Beck Group. Blind Faith. Mountain. The Allman Brothers.

Every rock group had its guitar player. Wailing, screaming, the electric guitar was by far the most important instrument in the music. The Star Trip was in those six strings. In this five year period, nothing was so important as the guitar break. Remember the wah-wah? How exciting it was when it first came out? Remember the awe you felt at seeing those walls of amps? Remember twenty minute guitar solos? Heavy!

And yet for no apparant reason, almost all of our star guitars were unplugged in a bizarre string of events that looks like a plot: Hendrix, always the innovator, started it all by dying; Peter Green got wacky; Jeremy Spencer got religious; Jeff Beck was in a car crash and lost his heir apparent standing; Ted Nugent got stars in his eyes; Clapton went home; Mick Taylor left Mayall and got Stoned; Jerry Garcia learned how to play quietly; John Cippolina met Dino Valente; Carlos Santana keeps playing those same six notes; Johnny Winter, fastest of all, got scagged; Alvin Lee got found out; Duane Allman got killed; Leslie West was listened to and exposed; Mick Abrahams didn't get along with Ian Anderson, and left for obscurity; Barry Melton's band split; Jimmie Page went half-accoustic; Henry Vestine couldn't beat the Heat, and even Bob Dylan, who had been churning up lots of electric smoke, got in his bike crash and then got country soul.

Other bands, like the Jefferson Airplane, Janis Joplin, CSN&Y, turned down their virtuosos.

As these comets burn out and are melded into either the band's sound or the accoustic approach, we are left to see that the best and most consistant rock music makers were the bands that were real bands all along, not guitar playing combos: The Mothers of Invention, The Who, Beatles, Stones, The Band, Beach Boys, Kinks, Paul Butterfield, Dyland, Byrds, Traffic, etc. Of course a few bands, like the Dead, were never mere vehicles for star guitarists, but that's the tag they were given because Garcia and the others were so good.

The new bands just aren't featuring one guitar player as the star. Alice Cooper has two leads and they haven't listed playing credits on their albums in years; J. Giles is too much of a band; King Crimson, EL&P, Osibisa, etc. are playing different music;

The New Riders and Hot Tuna are beyond that; Carole King and her singsisters have no need for a lead; Dan Hicks & His Hot Licks are likewise, I'm sure.

This is a tremendous shift in our priorities. I remember growing up with these guys. My God! They were giants! Beck, Clapton and Page were supreme. Hendrix was overlooked as singer, arranger and writer. Instead everyone babbled how he played behind his back, Now we're older, wiser (really?) and hip to such hype (really?). We've grown up, and lost most of our lust for energy. We want more taste, less flash, Feedback? Well.... Hard 'n Heavy? Maybe later.... Friends, we're burned out. Who's listening to Cactus? Nitzinger? Bloodrock? Ursa Major? Early Led Zeppelin? Grand Funk? It's the fifteen year-olds. Why? Because they, like us five years ago, just can't sit still. Mark Farner gives them bone conduction just like Eric used to do for us. We were psychedelic; they're wine and reds. Down, down, down, down, down.

In any case, it's so good to see people like John McLaughlin and Roy Buchanan approaching this biz warily. They've seen how fast the others burned out and they are coming in the game by a different door.

Roy Buchanan is a reluctant legend. He's been playing through the psychedelic years in ratty bars on the Mason-Dixon line and has successfully secluded himself from the idjit powerpressure greedhead world of Rock until recently. He's a family man with a wife and seven or so kids and is devoted to them. Public Broadcasting did two specials on him during the last year, one of which featured Roy and his band, with Nils Lofgren, jamming in a Maryland bar. They actually played for fourty minutes live on TV. Bill Graham did the announcing, Roy did the playing, and all observers, including Jeff Beck, did the bug-eye bit. The PBS specials showed Roy to be a man of talent and taste, equally at home playing with Johnny Otis, Merle Haggard or his church choir.

So it is that Polydor finally got Roy into the studios, along with his saggy back-up band. The Snakestretchers. The result is a stunning country-rock collection that firmly establishes him as one of the most devastating, interesting, original and distinctive guitarists around.

Side one, cut one: "Sweet Dreams". A long (3 seconds), far away sound, like that of a train humming far off in the mountains. The sound dies away. A few seconds pass, and the sound comes again, but a bit closer now, and slightly higher pitched. It dies again, but there is only a short lull before the next one which is the most intense of all. It's not a shrill whistle, it's the slowed down sound of an arrow shooting through the air overhead. The third zing is a continuation of the second, which was closely related to the first. And yet this third sound is incomplete, only a pathway to something else. Silence. Suddenly two short notes then slam! The drums drive down, the notes are flying, and we're into "Sweet Dreams". But that intro! When you reach the middle of the third long bent note, you're slipping, sliding into the song, unstoppably, like going down a slippery waterfall, heading into the rapids on a hot day. There are one or two delicious seconds that you're falling towards the foam and you know it's coming, and the anticipation is fantastic. So you get carried along on these incredible notes, starting slowly on the first, then the second note, getting closer to the edge, building speed, then the third note, and the splash of the drums, and we're immersed in Roy's waterfall of notes.

"Sweet Dreams" is a lazy instrumental that is peaceful and yet powerful, with Roy fulling up the breaks with dazzling runs, never repeating one twice. Lots of tricks, but they don't come off as tricks, but clever embellishments that soar and burn; sear and float; fly and swirl. They are like smoke rings; the notes swirl and dissipate, but you don't quite forget them, and of course no two are alike.

Next is a languid rocker called "I Am A Lonesome Fugitive" with nice country overtones by Roy.

A wacky little number, "Cajun" is next, and sounds like the perfect soundtrack for a short movie about chickens.

There are two fine blues numbers, "Pete's Blues" and "John's Blues". They both are hard-edged traditional blues that show up how pitifully weak the band is, but Roy is enough on these as he keeps on doing interesting things throughout. Some Eastern sounds here, and some beautifully held bent notes there.

One of the loosest and most pleasant numbers is "Haunted House", as Roy is content to play rhythm and let the song ride. This song could easily find its way into the Grateful Dead's current repotoire. Nice poppa-poppa lick by Roy; as his guitar zings and pops up high, and growls down low. He plays beautiful, shapr overtones with a delicate touch. Fast and bulbous. Tight, also.

"The Messiah Will Come Again" is the best number on the record and it's brilliant. It puts George Harrison's religion far behind, and blows Superstar out of town. One of my collegues put it best when he said he'd never heard so much actual yearning on record. Just great. A giant performance in a song that sounds like a bluesy "Third Man Theme" played by a master with obvious heartfelt emotions.

So not as to end on so somber a note, Roy and the boys end things with "Hey Good Lookin' ", a Hank Williams standard, which is nice.

1972 has seen few developments more interesting than the rise of Roy Buchanan and John McLaughlin. Although these two are far apart in the music they play, they have one element in common that we've been lacking for quite a while; sincerity. And so they present themselves in a low-key, no hype manner. They believe that the music they're making is more important than themselves, their bands or $ucce$$. Can we afford less?

"I've walked in a lot of places I never should have been, but I know one thing for sure; we won't get fooled again."

Ace Or Deuce?

by Steve Feld

Ace–Bob Weir (Warner Bros. Records)

It all goes back to the Beatles and their solo albums that makes people like Bob Weir of the Grateful Dead think they too have what it takes to be in the spotlight. What they don't realize is the world of difference between being a supporting member of a group and suddenly being upfront.

By now, the formula is so trite that it's almost comical and totally predictable. Traffic's Jim Capaldi thought he could do it on Oh How We Danced, but the record told us what we knew all along: namely that Steve Winwood not Calpaldi, is responsible for Traffic's success. John Entwhistle of the Who released Smash Your Head Against the Wall and couldn't come close to matching Peter Townshend's work with the group.

Now it's rhythm guitarist Weir's turn to show us that Jerry Garcia is the reason why the Dead are one of the finest groups in the U.S.

Comparing their respective solo albums tells us the whole story. Garcia featured Jerry on every instrument but drums in addition to song-after-song of amazing virtuosity and appeal. Ace is an awful record that should have never been released. Weir's voice is awkward, that of a shy boy who suddenly thinks he's a superstar.

On previous Dead albums Workingman's Dead and American Beauty, his songs were undeniably inferior to Garcia's. His singing on "Truckin' " was saved by the irresistable harmonies of the closing lines that drowned him out, and "Box of Rain" also left his solo voice at a bare minimum. On Ace there's no there to help him, and he falls down instantly, with the clumsy opening shout on "Greatest Story Ever Told" (fine title but unimpressive song).

Weir's got the Dead backing him, so the playing is adequate, but not good enough to make up for the cliched, hackneyed material. With overabounding lenience, I find one, maybe two decent songs of the already insubstantial eight. But the general rule is one of embarrassing incompetence.

"Mexicali Blues" has a miserable Tijuana Brass arrangement and "Looks Like Rain" is drippy and saccharine. "Black Throated Wind" has a nice anthropomorphic title, but that's it; and "One More Saturday Night" could have been penned by a first-year music student.

The one standout is the closing song, "Cassidy". It resembles the sounds of Pentangle; high harmonies, acoustic guitars and flowing rhythms.

One remaining song on Ace eventually sums things up by alluding to the fact that Bob Weir is best when he's "Playing In the Band".

The Bonzo's Audio Comic Book

by Kenneth Sulin

(The Bonzo Dog Band-Let's Make Up And Be Friendly-United Artists Records)

Unique styles and modes are more or less a rarity on today's professional stands of rock and roll–sorry to say the authenticity of a group seldom arouses one's attention. Granted, all have their individualized progressions and ingredients, but, still, basically remain terribly uncreative, reeking with a mixture of flavors that have actually come at some earlier time. Fortunately this unconscious display of naivety has yet to feast on the all but arrogant Bonzo Dog Band.

The history of the band dates back to their days with Liberty Records portraying them as effervescent clowns in a three ring circus. The mockery and sarcasm their music reflected still exists within "Let's Make Up And Be Friendly" although they appear a degree more subdued and consequently, realistic.

The belingering Bonzos are once again with us after their short-lived diffusion in 1970. Back are the two main-stays of the group, Neuil Innes and Vivian Stanshall; however, with the exception of bassist Dennis Cowan, a new repetoire of musicians complete the rejuvenated assembly.

The music itself comprises an uncanny arrangement of seasoned jazz, melodious 40's moonlighter tunes, dirt eating rock and, of course, a pinch of awry country blues; collectively a rummage sale of selections. Various combinations of instrumentation arise throughout the album, at one moment a delightful piano and string duo carry the listener into a second moment of energetic guitar strengthened rock. This procedure endures to the album's finale, nevertheless, the internal workings of Stanshall and Innes echo a wide series of versatility. Ukeleles, mandolins, flutes, fiddles and horns contribute to the inner dealings of the record, not always following the same rhythmic patterns yet consistently complimenting each other's tempo.

The lead vocals are by Stanshall, but all backing work comes at the hands of the group's funny men being distraught with their drunken harmonies and "special effects." The hilariousness can at times be intolerable, but as fast as they came the antics cease while the Bonzos retire to the most serious and serene of progressions.

Surprisingly an excessive amount of dialogue has been compressed into four of the disc's eleven selections. Also throughout the entire record Mickey Mouse type characters can be heard squealing little non-entities such as "I can feel it in my sneakers," obviously voicing their special opinions of the goings on. The content of these mild asides are, as you can imagine, boisterous and very cutting, flatly tearing down establishments such as Jehovah's Witnesses, acne blemished youth, etc. An individual cut of special interest entitled "Rawlinson End" is a nine minute plus recitation done in soap-opera style backed only by mild yet amusing harmonies. These elements of conversing make for the album's weak spots, musically speaking that is.

Any sneering and scorning atmosphere that is emitted from a tune at once becomes alleviated with a following selection, in fact, to change paces an honest to goodness Beatles imitation was added to further enlighten the complexity of content. The Bonzo Dog Band is an undescribably witty flock. Their music falls not into a single category rather into a random sample of inconsistencies ranging from the bleakest, most sensitive arrays to good old-fashion revivals of rock and roll.

Enough said of the oddities and obscurities that mesmerize a listener's thoughts' the real art and texture lie with technique of Stanshall and Innes. Their comedy is apparent; nevertheless, both are exceptional musicians in their own right producing a taut and tightly knit attire of tunes. The showmanship may have decreased a bit in comparison with times of the '60's, but their musical polishing is most definitely accelerating.

"Let's Make Up And Be Friendly" is repeatedly an album of interest and pleasure. Coupling humorous adaptations with serious sarcasm thus lengthening the never-ending legend the Bonzo Dog Band leave in their trail. Probably this is the first and last of the "audio comic books" we shall ever see...or hear!

Vivian Stanshall

Flaming Sculls In The Night

by Richard Bean

Rock-biz has a strange way of taking a musical entity, in its natural form, running it through its ever-changing version of Mt. Olympus, with lots of hoopla, exaltation, and most importantly, money, and spitting it out at the other end greatly altered, usually for the worse. Very few have passed through ritualistic fame - game unscathed. One band that has belatedly received the sooper-status that had eluded it while others, less worthy, enjoyed their day in the sun is the Grateful Dead.

Backed by as strong a list of credentials as any band on either side of the Great Pond and content with a hard earned, rabidly loyal following, the Dead put out a pleasantly catchy album in 1970 that brought their heretofore hidden talent to the masses. Then as soon as they had new legions buying tickets to hear them play, well, there goes the dam, Hans, the secret was out. An authentic working band throughout their history, the Dead were an amazingly intricate ensemble of exceptional musicians whose gifts where more evident live than on their earlier albums, which were an acquired taste.

Perhaps I should run down my own pretensions and prejudices concerning this band. I mildly enjoyed their first three albums, but was by no means a card-carrying Dead freak until 1969 when Live-Dead came along, a masterpiece which did then and still does set me on my ear. I hitch-hiked to New York in February snow to see them at Bill Graham's Pleasure Palace and was fittingly rewarded with the finest concert I've ever been party to. I've seen them six times since, and watched them change with the tide. The departure of the classical/jazz axis of Mickey Hart and Tom Constanten has returned the band to a song-oriented outfit under the helm of those loveable hayseeds, Jerry Garcia and Bob Weir. The circa-1968 Dead was one of the strongest groups ever gathered under one moniker and the new Dead remind me of the yankees of the mid-60's; strong up the middle but a bit frayed at the edges. The Garcia-Weir-Lesh guitar lineup is one of the classics and maintains that distinction. Portly Bill Kreutzman is a fine drummer, but his efforts pale when memories of his percussion duets with the more creative Hart are conjured up. The addition of Keith Godchaux on piano and his sometime singing wife, Donna do little but distract from the main event, even though both perform more than adequately. And the loss of the irreplaceable Mr. Pen is tragic, pure and simple.

So Captain Trips brought his new-look roadshow into the Springfield Civic Center for a one nite stand, Monday. And this brings me to a few points about big time rock and roll in this fair city. Western Mass. has long been denied top-line music but it now seems to be making its bid in the person of this spanking new hockey rink. Don Law, the top dog of Boston promoters, is apparently interested in this area, but it was a group calling itself Concept Entertainment Industries (got that?) that brought the Dead to Springfield and I have mixed reactions about them. The lighting was excellent, that's good. The reserved seats were removed to allow standing and dancing (the band's idea) and that's good. However, the tickets continues to be sold for top reserved seat prices ($5.50) and that's bad. That means if you spent the larger sum for the privilege of eating an unhurried supper, and came at 6:45, you found yourself sitting in a lousy seat and paying $1.00 more for the honor. These things shouldn't be done at the last minute. 'nuff said.

The Grateful Dead sauntered onstage at 7PM as scheduled, tuned up and started playing. This is a band that tolerates no nonsense, and delivers the goods. They work hard, it shows, and it's appreciated. Monday they worked four and a half hours.

The first set was spotty, as they often are with the Dead as they work out the kinks and try to prod the giant into action. A few hints of things to come were given in nice workings of contemporary Dead favorites like "Playing In The Band" and "Casey Jones" but as they broke for a half-hour, I wondered how far the new incarnation had wandered from the greatness of the old.

Not that far. The second set was a gem, worthy of all the legend built up around this group. Garcia led them back to the past, doing things from earlier albums and letting the melodies flow loose and free. A lesser known yet classic Dead-piece, "China Cat Sunflower/Know You Rider" was magnificent, ebbing and rising, with cutting rhythms and the famous apocalyptic finale. Garcia was nothing short of delightful all evening, but the high point was that old workhorse "Morning Dew." The man's singing and playing here was simply too much, and I can't do it justice with the words I have at hand. He's beautiful.

There was much more, "Sugar Magnolia" had the walls bobbin' and weavin' I think. "Uncle John's Band"; always beautiful. But the best Dead can never be broken down song by song. When they hit it, it just picks you up and takes you everywhere you hoped it would, and leaves you just happy they're around.

I'm happy they're around. And I'm sure they'll get a lot more famous, and someone will sell thousands more grateful Dead T-shirts and the fame- game will continue to swirl all around them, but they'll probably not change much.

It's too late to stop now.

The Film Column: Superstars '73

by Brian Dailey

Hollywood, the "Image-maker" of the 30's and 40's, with few exceptions, hasn't created a major star for the movie audience to adore in the past twenty years. The people who brought us Greta Garbo, Marlene Dietrich, Bette Davis and Katharine Hepburn or John Barrymore, Clark Gable, Spencer Tracy and Cary Grant have been too busy trying to survive the threat of television and keep their heads above water to develop any new talents.

Elizabeth Taylor and Marlon Brando, about the only real stars of the fifties, are both fine examples of Hollywood success stories. Both actors received five Academy Award nominations during the fifties and early sixties proving that an actor can continually be in decent films and give consistently excellent performances. Ms. Taylor has, until recently, continued to command a million dollar salary for her films and give interesting if not always award-winning performances. Brando, who's career fell into the doldrums during the sixties, is only now getting back in the eye of the public because of his fantastic performance in The Godfather. If Hollywood has made you a star, as in the case of Brando and Taylor, you remain a star; even if you have a slump your career, all you need is one good role to put you back on the top.

Paul Newman is probably the biggest male star of the sixties to be created by the Hollywood machine. The man who began by playing in religious epics has proven to his fans that he is a capable comedian as well as dramatic actor. The only new actress to become a superstar in the sixties is unquestionably Barbra Streisand who made her way to Hollywood by way of Broadway. She received a Tony award for her portrayal of Fanny on Broadway and when she made her film debut repeating the role of the "Funny Girl" she was given an Oscar. Ms. Streisand, as does Newman, seems to draw the crowds to any movie in which she appears even if it isn't worthy of her performance (Hello, Dolly! and On a Clear Day). Newman and Streisand along with Sidney Poitier, the movies only Black superstar, (as was mentioned in last weeks column) have started their own production company with Steve McQueen and Dustin Hoffman as later additions to the partnership.

As of yet, the seventies hasn't produced any new superstars but it has reaffirmed the stature of one of our finest actors of the sixties, George C. Scott, and given us hope for the future of two new foreign actresses, Liv Ullman and Dominique Sanda.

George C. Scott, the man who hates film acting and constantly fights the star system is probably our biggest male star today. He is in so much demand for screen roles these days that he goes from one picture to the next without time out for a vacation. Scott has been in only twelve movies to date but each performance was a masterpiece in itself. He was nominated for Best Supporting Actor for Anatomy of a Murder in 1959, and again in 1961 for The Hustler. Feeling as though his performance in The Hustler deserved recognition in the Best Actors category, Scott refused the nomination. The Academy went ahead anyway and showed their admiration of his acting ability by awarding him the Oscar. After refusing two nominations he was again afforded the opportunity and priviledge of refusing number three last year, as he was again nominated as Best Actor for his portrayal of the impotent doctor in The Hospital. The award ultimately was given to Gene Hackman for his performance in The French Connection.

Scott is now appearing with Stacy Keach in The New Centurions, a film in praise of our law enforcers. He has also just finished a film called Rage in which he plays a man trying to revenge the death of his son in the war. With the release of Rage Scott will make his directorial debut in films. Currently the busy star is before the cameras in Oklahoma Crude.

In the meantime Scott and Trish Van devere, his latest wife and former co-star in The Last Run, have landed the much-sought leads in Joseph E. Levine's production of Day of the Dolphins. The new science-fiction drama begins shooting December first under the direction of Mike Nichols (Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?, The Graduate, Catch 22, Carnal Knowledge).

Scott has also announced that Mr. Nichols, initially a famous and innovative stage director, will direct him in the lead of Chekov's play Uncle Vanya on off-broadway after completion of their above mentioned film.

Sweden, the country that gave us Greta Garbo and Ingrid Bergman, has now given us another fine actress, Liv Ullman, the interesting but relatively unknown star of many Bergman films (Hour of the Wolf, Shame). Ms. Ullman, currently receiving rave reviews for her role in Jan Troell's The Emmigrants, is being hailed and given the build-up of the next superstar of 1973. Another film currently in release, Pope Joan, also stars the Swedish actress. It is the true story of a woman who posed as a man and became Pope at a time when the divided Catholic Church had four Pontiffs in various parts of their empire. Ms. Ullman has also recently completed filming a major role in the musical remake of Lost Horizon. The new film has been outfitted with twenty original songs by Burt Bachrach and stars Charles Boyer, Sally Kellerman, George Kennedy and Olivia Hussey. The Ross Hunter produced film will be ready for release early next year.

When the Broadway play 40 Carats starring Julie Harris was bought for filming, there was much discussion over who would have the lead role. Apparently Ms. Harris wasn't a big enough star for the movie version so the producer tryed to get Audrey Hepburn to come out of retirement for the role of the middle aged woman who falls in love with a younger man but Ms. Hepburn was too happily married (and retired!) to be coaxed into accepting the role. There was also a rumor that Liz Taylor was trying to get the part for herself but nothing ever came of that rumor nor the one that Vanessa Redgrave had signed for the part. It was finally announced that definite arrangements have been made for Ms. Ullman to star with Edward Albert (Butterflies Are Free) and Leonard Gersche in the M. J. Frankovich production being directed by the stage and film director (Butterflies Are Free) Milton Katselas.

There are also preparations being formed for the remake and continuation of Greta Garbo's 1933 classic Queen Christina tentatively titled The Abdication. This film property had been intended for Vanessa Redgrave but again because of schedule conflicts the part has been given to Ms. Ullman instead. It certainly appears Hollywood plans to keep Ms. Ullman busy; let's just hope she has what it takes!

"The Candidate" Loses, "Superfly" Wins

by Bob Nesti

The Candidate written for the screen by Jeremy Larner, directed by Michael Ritchie; with Robert Redford, Peter Boyle, and Melvyn Douglas.

The Candidate skims the surface of American politics like a stone across a stagnant pool. It moves at an efficient pace, firmly gripped in contrived reality and convinced that its explicit cliches about our republic pass as home truths. As Penelope Gilliat said in "The New Yorker", we need political movies but, dear god, not like this one. We have learned to live with the fact that the machine-style politics has been replaced by sleek, Madison Avenue-computerized candidates, but do they have to take the life out of them? The Candidate is so dispassionate to its subject matter, so consciously subtle in developing characters and their relationships, that one has the feeling they have seen television commercials with more soul. If this is a film about people, it's hard to find them in all the media conscious images director Michael Ritchie has immersed the plot in. And if it's about our contemporary malaise, screenwriter Jeremy Larner researched his film from Time Magazines of three years ago. For a film with an eye for today, it's hard to believe it has an ear so tuened toward our recent past.

The film begins with a proposition; a Democratic campaign organizer asks a young, goodlooking, socially conscious, lawyer named Bill McKay to run for the Senate in California. His father was once governor and the name will look good. The catch is he'll lose to the powerful incumbent conservative. McKay isn't too interested in running, but the idea of slaying the wicked dragon of illiberalism interests him enough to commit his name, and some money to a campaign. McKay isn't your run-of-the-mill candidate, his likes could be found in Hyannis Port or in the New York Mayor's office and he talks like one of the last stalwarts of rugged individualism. He isn't going to be a tool of the Democratic Party and argues every suggestion with selfless determination. He wins in the primary, but finds himself far behind in the polls. His campaign staff focuses his campaign on his cool, socially conscious sincerity and McKay becomes a viable political force. The problem is McKay begins to feel stifled. He approaches election day with victory in sight but the goal has been lost in the miles of computer outputs and video tape the Madison Avenue flunkies used to package their candidates.

What is maddening is The Candidate easily could have been the bitter and stinging satire this packaging-of-the-candidate-politics demands. Bill McKay may go all the way through the efficiency of his campaign, but he'd never make it across the street with his concerned little rich boy personality. He seems to be an Ivy Leaguer who is on hiatus from his social miracle working to scare away the big bad wolf. We are simply told what a wonderful person Bill McKay is, and, conversely, what an empty-headed bastard his opponent, but what sort of evidence does the film give us that he is anything more than an overaged adolescent on a joy ride? He complains about how his leftist sentiments are being compromised, he is tired of saying other people's words, he's is bored with his inability to communicate; but he never has a decent thought on his own. Even his one liners aren't very bright. Why should we have sympathy for this dolt? Perhaps, according to the film's scatterbrain logic, because he's Robert Redford. The role of Bill McKay cries out for someone whose screen image can be tarnished, not boot-licked by a screenwriter who happens to think he's the catch-all for all our problems.

The Candidate is Redford's home movie, and like most home movies has its share of unnecessary and unfulfilled moments. Too much of the relationships are loudly pronounced, such as McKay's affair with a campaign staffer, then blithely ignored. Too often the plot builds to climaxes which culminate in hollow campaign rhetoric. It is surprising certain bits, like the Watts scene which was so obviously staged, were left in this consciously documentary-styled film. They make you realize it's only a movie and Bill McKay is only Robert Redford badly miscast. Michael Ritchie has a good feel for television technique, but is more often derived from public service commercials. Much of the location shootings used extras, too bad they look like extras in a Cecil B. DeMille film. It's bad enough that the actors have a nonchalant phoniness to them, but when the non-actors do, it's time to re-edit the film.

Films with political themes are often a good deal of nasty fun. The Candidate drowns in its own pretentious seriousness. Politicians and political advisors are known for their rancor, you'd never guess it from this film. The advisors even demand apologies from their superiors. No hard feelings and that sort-of-rot, which may make it in some circles, but never has it been reported in the political arena. This may be a new politician, but has he lost his heart in the transformation? This ain't simply glib, but Redford's candidate is impetus for you not to register to vote. He is so explicity good that he's inhuman. The film is so level-headed, so sure of its own rhetoric that is sickenly contrived. Not only does his opponent talk like he's from the Forties, but his final speech looks like out takes from Kane's campaign for governor in Citizen Kane. Not only can Redford shoot baskets like a former all-American, but he can talk with black, white, Indian, and Chicano with equal ease. He may not say anything, but it sounds right in a leftist-liberal way and there's no denying that McKay's beach boy image won him more votes than his spoken-from-the-heart speaking style. It would have been great if Mr. Good Looks Goes To Washington made you feel a bit quesy that this is what it's come to, instead it only leaves you languid.

One begins to wonder if Charles Percy and John Lindsay and Edward Kennedy could possibly sit through this film without laughing aloud. Would they be insulted to watch their prototype played as such a sympathetic dolt? Are they this humorless and clunk-headed? We haven't had a decent political film since The Best Man more than a decade ago, which was distinguished by the incisive Gore Vidal dialogue and a number of well-played performances. The dialogue of The Candidate has a low-keyed naturalness that makes you wonder if anyone talks in such consistant neutral terms and platitudes. The performances are, aside from one, ill-defined and mediocre. Redford just isn't right for McKay. He tries too hard at being natural and is too much the Hollywood personality to come across as anything more than an actor in a knight's armor. The only decent performance is that of Peter Boyle as the low-keyed, but hard-edged campaign manager.

Ritchie tries very hard at putting his film in the real world. We are consistantly assaulted with mass media images and brand names, yet we never seem part of the story or the lives of those surrounding The Candidate. There is little drama, little humor, and little life to this campaign, which McKay may win on its imaginary election day, but loses as any cogent statement about our current state of affairs.

by Richard Bean

Superfly - Directed by Gordon Parks Jr. with Ron O'Neal.
Screenplay by Phillip Fenty.

This is a very good film which comes at an opportune time. There seems to be a good deal of cynicism about black films these days, with much talk of Van Peebie's lack of cinematic expertise and the tired gimmickry of the Shaft series. "Superfly" avoids blending into this sort of unfortunate generalization by simply resisting the temptations that plague so many similar vehicles. What we have here is not another James Bond in blackface, as the rather misleading title and slick adverts would suggest, but a real story, with real characters. The tone of the film is serious and there is no tendancy to let tongue slip lightly into cheek just to be on the safe side. These guys mean it and it shows.

"These guys" would be director Gordon Parks Jr. and screenwriter Phillip Fenty, whose scenario has Priest, a successful middle-echelon cocaine dealer in Manhattan, trying for the big score so he can cash in his chips and set up an early retirement pad on Easy Street. After smooth-talking his way through some early disenchantment from his dealing partner, Eddie, and his main man, Stagger, who is himself trying to quit the dope racket to run his downtown soul bistro, the path to Priest's dream seems clear. Unfortunately, Stagger's connection turns out to be a top exec in another big firm, the N.Y.P.D. This evil weasel is parlaying a wholesale dope/protection outfit into a very profitable little gig. And by the way, anyone who thinks this type of thing comes under the heading of fiction is really pulling the fleece over his peepers. The neat way in which Priest places his would-be boss squarely under his thumb is the high point of the movie and I won't spoil it.

There has been a certain amount of controversy over alleged glorification of the dope-pusher and his aristocratic lifestyle. Although my opinion must inevitably be limited by the fact that I have not been personally victimized by the viscious dope circle that plagues everyone lives in the inner-city, I would submit that Mr. Parks and Mr. Fenty give us an honest story. Priest's world is not one to be envied, but a dismal cycle of violence and paranoia with little else than thick carpets and leather maxi-coats for rewards, a world that Priest desperately wants out of. His need to cop a fast million before retiring is indeed questionable, but he believes this is his only way to financial success.

Parks' direction is exceptional, especially for a debut film. The film progresses very smoothly with very few low spots, the glaring exception being an ill-conceived dealing sequence which disrupts the flow for a few uneasy minutes midway through the film. He lets the story unfold logically and completely, all the while building a tension that is satisfyingly resolved in the film's climax. The cinematography is crisp and tasteful, save the above-mentioned dealing sequence, which trots out that weary old nag, the split screen, for one more stumble around the track. The semi-esoteric linguistics demanded by this type of film are handled subtlely and convincingly, unlike the heavy-handed abuse in other, similar, situations such as "Easy Rider".

The success of the film rides to a large degree with the role of Priest. He is a delicate balance of the cool and the vulnerable, the hunter and the hunted. Ron O'Neal fills the bill admirably, bringing sensitivity to a part that would have suffered by being pushed to either extreme.

57 Not For Tube Boobs

by Bill Densmore

This is the second in a series of articles on the programs and services of broadcast media serving Amherst. Two weeks ago PR's looked at the UMass student station, WMUA

Channel 57, public television in western Massachusetts, is on channel 57. But if your set has been intertwined with that Orwellian innovation known as CATV, the locating of WGBY-TV isn't so logical -- Pioneer Valley Cablevision has put it on the channel 11 position.

The best way to find the non-profit television station is to set your dial at any position for fifteen minutes. If you see no advertisements, you've found Channel 57. If you're from around Boston, and WGBY-sounds like an anagram of something else, it's because WGBY-TV Channel 2 hails from the Hub city.

In fact, the creation of Channel 57 in Springfield was largely an extension of WGBY. It is now possible for the pair of stations to reach the entire Commonwealth in a single broadcast with a live microwave interconnection between the two. At least one program is seen on both stations — The Reporters (Mon.-Fri. 7:30-8:00 p.m) is a joint effort of both.

Offices, studios, and electronic equipment for Channel 57 are all contained in the old Springfield Armory, once a sprawling Army facility, now relegated to educational use by the city council The station's equipment is impressive — hundreds and hundreds of orange vacuum tubes on floor to ceiling panels in an age of transistors and paper thin "chip" components. Most of it is video tape recorders and switching facilities that were replaced at the more wealthy Channel 2 and have been coaxed back to life by WGBY's engineering staff. The broadcasting antenna is on top of Mt. Tom.

Channel 57 broadcasts from 4 p.m. to 11 p.m. daily except for weekends and programs for educational in-school use during the morning hours. Although the station makes a conscious effort to originate local programs, much of the day's broadcasting still comes from the Public Broadcasting Service (PBS). PBS is the television arm of the Corporation for Public Broadcasting, a quasi-private organization which is funded by an annual appropriation from Congress (60 million last year, 40-50 million next year). Local FM station WFCR is a member of the radio arm, known as National Public Radio (NPR). (WFCR will be featured in an article next week on this page.)

Full-scale production, and the simultaneous day to day operation of a television station with no more than twelve full-time employees is not easy. But 57's staff still finds time to produce the Springfield segment of The Reporters three times weekly, and a program of news and information in Spanish hosted by WFCR's Julio Torres Wednesday's from 10:30-11:00 p.m. Because of limited funds, Channel 57's Armory studio has no color cameras, and both programs must be taped in black and white.

The Statehouse Candidates, a production of Channel 57, began this week, and is aired Monday, Wednesday and Friday at 7 p.m. Programs are a half-hour long and will interview candidates for the state legislature from Hampden, Berkshire, Franklin, Worcester, and Hampshire counties--which includes Amherst and Northampton. The Statehouse Candidates will continue through November 6.

The Vida Blues is a PBS special to be aired Monday on WGBY. VD Blues includes an original dramatic sketch by Jules Feiffer (whose art work is contained elsewhere in PR's) and a previously unpublished ballad called "A Child of VD" which was written by the thirties folk artist Woody Guthrie, and will be performed by his son Arlo (remember Alice's Restaurant?). To complete an already spectacular lineup, ABC late-nighter Dick Cavett will host the special.

The VD Blues will be seen on Monday at 8 p.m., Tuesday at 10 p.m., Wednesday at 8:30 p.m. and Saturday at 2 p.m., October 9, 10, 11 and 14.

Launching a nationwide effort to combat a critical health problem, the PBS production will be followed by local programming from Channel 57 including information about treatment facilities in western Mass.

For the next few weeks Firing Line, a national interview program hosted by William F. Buckley Jr. will be of particular interest Sunday nights at 10 p.m. Last weekend the guest was teamster Jimmy Hoffa. Buckley has been dubbed a conservative ever since writing God and Man at Yale 21 years ago. His column "On the Right" appears in newspapers nationally, including The Boston Globe.

Channel 57 began last January to raise the funds and find the three journalists necessary to begin an "Environmental Reporting Team". The team has since been set up, using $51,000 from the federal government, $5,000 from an organization of students at the Five Colleges, $2,000 from Western Mass. Electric, and $20,000 from a private grant.

The environmental team will inform the Connecticut Valley's 1.3 million people on a continuing basis about the Watershed's environmental issues and problems in general. Its goal "is to raise significantly the level of environmental literacy in western Massachusetts," according to a published statement from the station.

The three members of the team are John Kennedy, a faculty member of Yale's School of Art and a former television producer; Dan Kain, formerly producer of instructional materials at the University of Wisconsin; and Elliot Porter, who holds three degress from Yale including a Master of Forestry Science from the School of Forestry.

Channel 57 hasn't yet arranged a broadcast schedule for the Environmental Reporting Team; PR's Hot Spots will print initial telecast dates and times.

Aside from Corporation for Public Broadcasting assistance, and isolated Corporate grants, WGBY is dependent on individual viewers for operating funds. The station offers a year's subscription to a monthly program guide and magazine, Prime Time, for $15, as is typical of most public TV stations. If you live around Boston, Prime Time is of special value because it lists the programs of channels 2, 44, and WGBH-FM as well.

Sometime when you feel like enlightened entertainment, stop at channel 57 instead of flicking by it. If you watch carefully the tube might wink!

57 Not For Tube Boobs

by Bill Densmore

This is the second in a series of articles on the programs and services of broadcast media serving Amherst. Two weeks ago PR's looked at the UMass student station, WMUA

Channel 57, public television in western Massachusetts, is on channel 57. But if your set has been intertwined with that Orwellian innovation known as CATV, the locating of WGBY-TV isn't so logical – Pioneer Valley Cablevision has put it on the channel 11 position.

The best way to find the non-profit television station is to set your dial at any position for fifteen minutes. If you see no advertisements, you've found Channel 57. If you're from around Boston, and WGBY-sounds like an anagram of something else, it's because WGBY-TV Channel 2 hails from the Hub city.

In fact, the creation of Channel 57 in Springfield was largely an extension of WGBY. It is now possible for the pair of stations to reach the entire Commonwealth in a single broadcast with a live microwave interconnection between the two. At least one program is seen on both stations — The Reporters (Mon.-Fri. 7:30-8:00 p.m) is a joint effort of both.

Offices, studios, and electronic equipment for Channel 57 are all contained in the old Springfield Armory, once a sprawling Army facility, now relegated to educational use by the city council The station's equipment is impressive — hundreds and hundreds of orange vacuum tubes on floor to ceiling panels in an age of transistors and paper thin "chip" components. Most of it is video tape recorders and switching facilities that were replaced at the more wealthy Channel 2 and have been coaxed back to life by WGBY's engineering staff. The broadcasting antenna is on top of Mt. Tom.

Channel 57 broadcasts from 4 p.m. to 11 p.m. daily except for weekends and programs for educational in-school use during the morning hours. Although the station makes a conscious effort to originate local programs, much of the day's broadcasting still comes from the Public Broadcasting Service (PBS). PBS is the television arm of the Corporation for Public Broadcasting, a quasi-private organization which is funded by an annual appropriation from Congress (60 million last year, 40-50 million next year). Local FM station WFCR is a member of the radio arm, known as National Public Radio (NPR). (WFCR will be featured in an article next week on this page.)

Full-scale production, and the simultaneous day to day operation of a television station with no more than twelve full-time employees is not easy. But 57's staff still finds time to produce the Springfield segment of The Reporters three times weekly, and a program of news and information in Spanish hosted by WFCR's Julio Torres Wednesday's from 10:30-11:00 p.m. Because of limited funds, Channel 57's Armory studio has no color cameras, and both programs must be taped in black and white.

The Statehouse Candidates, a production of Channel 57, began this week, and is aired Monday, Wednesday and Friday at 7 p.m. Programs are a half-hour long and will interview candidates for the state legislature from Hampden, Berkshire, Franklin, Worcester, and Hampshire counties–which includes Amherst and Northampton. The Statehouse Candidates will continue through November 6.

The Vida Blues is a PBS special to be aired Monday on WGBY. VD Blues includes an original dramatic sketch by Jules Feiffer (whose art work is contained elsewhere in PR's) and a previously unpublished ballad called "A Child of VD" which was written by the thirties folk artist Woody Guthrie, and will be performed by his son Arlo (remember Alice's Restaurant?). To complete an already spectacular lineup, ABC late-nighter Dick Cavett will host the special.

The VD Blues will be seen on Monday at 8 p.m., Tuesday at 10 p.m., Wednesday at 8:30 p.m. and Saturday at 2 p.m., October 9, 10, 11 and 14.

Launching a nationwide effort to combat a critical health problem, the PBS production will be followed by local programming from Channel 57 including information about treatment facilities in western Mass.

Films

The Candidate
Robert Redford as a Californian senatorial candidate drawn from the cast of the Seventies politician, molded by a computer and an efficient staff into an effective, cool TV image. The film is best in its colorful portrayal of a campaign, between Redford and an old-fashioned, popular Conservative. Some of it seems like newsreel footage. The story itself has the freshness of three week old headlines and the Kennedy-exploitation is appalling. Peter Boyle is good as a Pierre Salingerish aide. Michael Ritchie directed. Reviewed in issue. Campus Cinemas, Hadley.

Carnal Knowledge (1971)
A hard-edged satire with the effect of being flogged by liberated men from a Consciousness Three encounter group. Your sin is your sexism and your misery is your reward. This puritan exercise explores the sexual lives of two men, from college days at Amherst in the Forties to the present, and is grimly and heavily pounded home by cartoonist-screenwriter Jules Feiffer. Director Mike Nichols is quite adept at making that cartoonist's one-dimensional characters entertaining victims of their own social devices. They are engagingly portrayed by Jack Nicholson and Arthur Garfunkel as the college buddies and Ann-Margret and Candice Bergen as their respective sex objects. Campus Center Auditorium, Tuesday, 10/9, 7 and 9:30.

The Doberman Gang
A crime story, with a plot revolving around the training of a group of doberman pinchers who hold robbery victims at bay, while their masters commit the robbery, and appropriately entitled. Amherst Cinema, Amherst.

Dr. Strangelove, Or How I Learned To Stop Worrying And Love The Bomb (1963)
Few films satires are as blissfully irreverant as Stanley Kubrick's black fantasy about the idiocy of cold war diplomacy. Its premise is what could happen if a paranoic, super-patriot Army general ordered a flight of atomic-bomb carrying B-52's to go beyond their fail-safe points into Russian territory. Suspense and humor are well played with the military and political establishment targets for screenwriters Kubrick, Terry Southern, and Peter George's brash humor. You think its the Keystone Kops in military grey. Kubrick wisely keeps the momentum of the story centered on retrieving the bombs, the laughs are swept up in the breakneck pace. Given the casual disrespect for the military and government today, the film is less audacious and a good deal more likeable than some eight years ago when it was initially released. Peter Sellers is perfect in three roles: Capt. Lionel Mandrake, a shoelicking British military official, President Merlin Muffley, his American equivalent, and Dr. Strangelove, a crippled ex-Nazi. The supporting performances are flawless: George C. Scott, Sterling Hayden, and Keenen Wynn chief amongst them. The film has been hailed as a landmark in film comedy and it may very well prove to be Kubrick's finest film. Student Union Ballroom, Friday 10/6, 7, 9, 11.

Easy Rider (1969)
Dennis Hopper's freeflowing motorcycle opera about two freaks who attempt to tour the Southwest and South. The Rednecks get the most intelligent lines. The two freaks, one a mystical (Peter Fonda), the other a cocky and whiny (Dennis Hopper), begin their motorcycle odyssey after smuggling heroin over the border and end it splattered by a highway somewhere in the deep South. Between these points they visit a commune, befriend a down-and-out lawyer (Jack Nicholson, the film's saving grace), visit a New Orleans's brother, and take an extended LSD trip. The provisational dialogue shamelessly strings counter-culture cliches, with Hopper's direction is simple, lyrical, and at times quite nice. Laslo Kovaks' camera captures the wonder about the American Southwest. The soundtrack blasts forth with Steppenwolf and an odd assortment of other popular songs, including a number by Dylan. An exercise in intellectual elitism which leads it audience to believe the death of two "flower children" at the hands of triggerhappy rednecks in believable modern tragedy. Both Hopper and Fonda are graduates of American-International low budget bikie pictures, one wishes they paid more attention to the filmmakers about them. A paranoic vision for paranoids, with some good music and exteriols. Showcase Cinemas. West Springfield.

8-1/2 (1963)
A beautiful enigma by Fredrico Fellini drawn from his own experience. A film director is recovering from nervous exhaustion at a health spa while he plots how he is to finish his latest film. The images of his film and his life and his dream mesh in a all but incomprehensible, but richly dinematic fabric. Superbly photographed and acted, Fellini's ability to merge the real and imagined realms within a complete artistic design has never been more valid than in this film. With Marcello Mastroianni, Anouk Aime, and Claudia Cardinale. Campus Center Auditorium, Tuesday 10/10, 8.

Everything You Ever Wanted To Know About Sex (But Were Afraid To Ask)
Six questions from David Rueben's maddening best seller are given an intensive comic treatment by Woody Allen. Each of the skits opens with a title card ("What Happens During Ejaculation?") and Allen proceeds with a sharpness that many have felt tasteless. He probably would have been an errand boy during the Inquisition. Each skit seems a satire on a particular film genre: the futuristic fantasy the Fifties, sci-fi film, the Antonioni films, etc. Allen is a maddening funny man and his film is best when he is disarmingly cool about incredibly ridiculous situations. Gene Wilder, amoured by a sheep, lovingly carrying her through a hotel lobby; Lou Jacobi in drag conquettishly dancing in front of a mirror or Allen himself as one tiny sperm having an identity crisis during the final moments of elaculation. Campus Cinemas, Hadley.

Fiddler on the Roof (1971)
A mundane version of the longest running musical in Broadway history. The disappointing epic comes away by director Norman Jewison who has employed needless flashy techniques in the transition. The musical becomes bottom-heavy and static when blown up on a Super Panavision screen and blasted out of twelve stereo speakers. The show itself has grace, charm, and a natural warmth that are all but eliminated here. Instead every moment reeks with phony folklines and corn-ball routines. The excellent Bock-Harnick score has been homogenized in musical interludes embarrassing at best, even Topol, generally considered the best of the stage Tevye's, becomes a glaring caricature of a poor, Russian peasant. An overrated, illconceived, charmless musical. Jerry Lewis Cinemas, Northampton.

Frenzy
Alfred Hitchcock reaffirms his status as "The Master of Suspense" with his latest film Frenzy. Returning to his native England for the first time in more than twenty years in order to film this story of the search for a sexual psychopath, Hitchcock uses all his unbeatable technical knowledge of filming to give us his best suspense story since his 1960 masterpiece, Psycho. The film stars Jon Finch, Barbara Leigh-Hunt, and Barry Foster as the killer and contains one of the best examples of Hitchcock's comic touch played superbly by Alec McCowen and Vivien Merchant. Campus Cinema Hadley.

Gate of Hell (1954)
Gate of Hell (Jigokomon) the 1954 Japanese masterpiece of twelfth century Japan was directed by Teinosuke Kinugasa. The tragic story of a good soldier who falls in love with a married woman is superbly acted by Machiko Kyo (of Rashomon and Ugetsu) and Hazu Hasegawa. The film, considered to have the most beautiful color photography in any Japanese film, won a special Academy Award and the Grand Prix at Cannes. Merrill Science Center, Amherst College, Friday, (10/6); 7:30.

Gone With The Wind
This romantic historical pageant of the Civil War is remembered by many as the best film of all time. It crystallized an entire generation's idea of what a romance should be, full of color, character, and action. David O. Selznick mounted this gigantic production in association with MGM and utilized three directors (Victor Fleming takes the credit and the Oscar for Best Director in 1939), many of Hollywood's finest technicians, perhaps the most spendid color photography up until the time, and a cast that was chosen with impeccable care. Clark Gable plays Rhett Butler, Vivien Leigh played the memorable Scarlett O'Hara (and copped an Oscar), and featured in the huge cast are Olivia DeHavilland, Leslie Howard, and Butterfly McQueen, whose part as the miad only showed that Hollywood wasn't quite as intelligent as we may wish to remember. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

Charles Chaplin as The Great Dictator, now in Northampton and a dream image from Fellini's 8-1/2, to be shown on campus next Tuesday

The Great Dictator (1940)
Chaplin's satire in which a small-time Jewish barber doubles as a mock-Hitler named Hynkel, dictator of Tomania. He allys with Napaloni, dictator of Bacteria. Chaplin premise works out a good deal more easily than it sounds, many moments of bitter humor, until the final moments when Chaplin mars his film with an impassioned, sentimental speech about peace and unity. Its most memorable sequence lackadaisically is Hynkel's pas-de-deux with an inflated globe in which he lies on his back and tosses the globe above him. Its moments in the ghetto and at the end prove that Macukish Chaplin always overrules Chaplin the mime. The first film in which Chaplin spoke and the last in which he used his tramp character. With Jack Oakie and Paulette Goddard. Academy of Music, Northampton.

The Group (1966)
Sidney Lumet's stylish and faithful adaptation of Mary McCarthy's explosive best seller about six girls from Vassar who keep in touch in the years following their graduation. The script by Sidney Buchman keeps the detailed stories nicely in contrast and Lumet's direction of a cast of then-near unknowns made for a number of impressive screen debuts. The thirties production is handsome, and the film entertaining with Joan Hackett, Jessica Walter, Elizabeth Hartman, Kathleen Widdoes, and Candice Bergen. Gamble Auditorium, Mt. Holyoke College, Saturday, 10/7, 8.

Joe Kidd
John Sturges has been a good director of strong melodramas, his "Bad Day At Black Rock" was one of the best films of social commentary of the Fifties. His latest film is somewhat disappointing; it's a somewhat languid Western, with Clint Eastwood. Wednesday, Academy of Music, Northampton.

The Last House On The Left
Just remember, "It's only a movie, only a movie, only a movie..." and your only wasting your money, wasting your money, wasting your money. Trash. The fact that this film was booked at all is evidence of the lack of care and respect theater owners have for their audience. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

Last Of The Red Hot Lovers
The seven year itch multiplied by three; a Jewish husband, bordering on middle age, decides to seduce three comic prototypes in his mother's apartment while his wife is on vacation. The script is by Neil Simon, and falls into his mold of conventional wisecracks; they're funny in the usual Broadway way. Alan Arkin plays the husband, his attempted amoured are Paula Prentiss, Renee Taylor, and Sally Kellerman. Gene Saks directed. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

The Loves Of Isadora (1968)
Vanessa Redgrave gives a performance of such breadth and strength that one is completely dazzled by a film that is less good than the sum of its parts. She transcends this misleading biography of the greatest American dancer of this century. The scriptwriter has turned her into a tortured eccentric, an extension of Garbo's ballerina from Grand Hotel, and her life a series of ill-fated love affairs. Karel Reisz directs this romantic flashback narrative with firm technical sense about this enthralling character. Redgrave's Isadora is one of the chief glories of recent cinema, a performance with intelligence, style, and depth of character that covers decades of Isadora's life without embarrassing flinches. Universal badly maligned the film when they edited out more than forty minutes from the original cut. At times the romances seems confusing and open-ended. The conception has been compromised and what beauty remains is in Redgrave's performance. Campus Cinema, Hadley.

Ministry of Fear (1944)
From the novel by Graham Greene. Ray Milland as a man just released from a mental institution, who happens upon one of the strangest little carnivals you'll ever see, and innocently wins one hell of a "loaded" cake. Hampden Dining commons, Sunday, 10/8, 7:15.

Moonrise.
Directed by Frank Borzage. Photographed by John L. Russel. Stars Dane Clark, Gail Russell, Allyn Joslyn. Borzage is known as the ultimate romanticists, convinced that the world can be saved by the self sacrificing love of men and women. This is one of the best Borzage films that iterate this theme. It tells the story of a young man pursued by the fact that his father was hanged for murder and by the fear that he too may have "bad blood". In many ways this film sets the tone for the 50's rebel youth films. Don't miss the first three minutes, a beautiful montage of childhood terror that sets the tone and pace until the final manhunt and reconciliation. Amherst Folklore Center, Tuesday, 10/10, 7:30.

The New Centurions
The policeman as superstar. Rome had its centurions to guard the frontiers from invading huns, we have the police ours to protect us from...Better acted than it probably deserved but only marginally entertaining. The plot moves in small bursts and doesn't seem to go anywhere, except into the bedroom of the worried wife of a cop where she faithfully awaits her husband's return each night. The film could have best been a public service spot. With George C. Scott, our best film actor, and Stacey Keach, who may well become our best new actor. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

Slaughterhouse-Five
Kurt Vonnegut Jr.'s college classic was obediently transformed by George Roy Hill into a sleek, lifeless, and shallow film which time trips decades with ease, but never approaches the interesting implications about time and space. The story concerns an Army medic who jumps from the bombing of Dresden to Babbitt-like life in a Midwestern city to congugal sex in a interstellar penthouse. Vonnegut's point, it seems, is life but a random sampling of events and one should emphasize the good and ignore the bad. The film emphasizes the silly sort of satire about Middle America that young people would feel manic toward if it were aimed at them. Here they laugh. Worse is the power of positive-believing which is at the center of Vonnegut's argument. The film is admirably edited yet cold in its machine-like precision. The acting pivots on the actors ability to deal with the one-dimensionality of their individual roles. Ron Leibman is the only one to escape uns-athed, the rest jump at being mediocre. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

La Strada (1954)
Frederico Fellini used neo-realistic technique in telling this spiritual fable about the individual's purpose in the universe. It is one of the most moving films ever made, one which uses this Italian school's realism as an added dimension to the romantic mysticism of its theme. The story concerns three carnival players: Sampano, the brutish strongman, Gelsomina, his innocent slavey, and Matto, the wise circus fool. The three performances are masterful; Anthony Quinn is Zampano, but the film's chief glories are Richard Basehart's Fool and Giuletta Massina's little wail. She has been compared to the great comedians of the screen, her performance is extraordinary. The scenes between Basehart and her are unlike any others on film. Campus Center Auditorium, Monday 10/9, 8.

'WHEN I WANT YOUR OPINION . . .'

Letters To The Editor

He Still Has Answers

To The Editor:
It's about time a little truth was printed in the MDC. I am referring to David Barszewski's letter of October 2. He wrote expressing his views of Christianity as opposed to those of Vine Deloria.

It's one thing to expound upon a certain philosophy that happens to suit a particular lifestyle, but it's quite a different story when your life is revolutionized by coming in contact with some person or thing.

A little over a year ago, I came in contact with the person--yes, He's alive!--of Jesus Christ. My life has not been the same since. Jesus said: "I came that they might have life, and have it abundantly." (John 10:10). This abundant life is readily available to any who will accept Jesus as Savior and Lord. John wrote: "To all who received him, who believed in his name, he gave power to become children of God; who were born, not of blood not of the will of the flesh nor of the will of man, but of God." (John 1:12, 13). Jesus Himself said that a person must be born again spiritually before he can see the kingdom of God. (John 3:3).

The Bible says that all men are sinners. "For there is no distinction: since all have sinned and fall short of the glory of God." (Romans 3:22, 23. note also Romans 3:10-12.) Once a person admits this to himself, he must realize his need to be born again of God.

The most beautiful part of God's plan of salvation is that God offers eternal life as a gift--there's not one thing anyone can do to earn or deserve it. "For the wages of sin is death, but the free gift of God is eternal life in Christ Jesus our Lord." (Romans 6:23). God does this for us because of his love--" But God shows his love for us in that while we were yet sinners Christ died for us." (Romans 5:8). God sent His Son to take the rap for us, because He loves us. We should be the ones who died on that cross. "For God so loved the world that he gave his only Son, that whoever believes in him should have eternal life." (John 3:16).

This is what Christianity is all about--the reconciliation between God and man, a plan of salvation, a free gift of love--eternal life. Jesus said: "If you continue in my word, you are truly my disciples, and you will know the truth, and the truth will make you free...If the Son makes you free, you will be free indeed." (John 8:31, 32, 36.) In a world so confused about what truth is, about what peace, love and freedon are, isn't it good to know that God still cares, and that He still has the answers?

Parking Problem

To The Editor:
I like to consider myself a reasonable man. I hope someone in the Administration of this University considers himself with the same regard and deals with what is an admittedly local but frustrating problem.

I have been assigned to "F" lot. So have a lot of other people with longer stories than mine. This afternoon I got a ticket for parking in F lot. I had to park along the side of the road because all the slots were full. There was no other place to park in F lot.

I took my ticket to the UMass Police and spoke with Lt. Andersen. After explaining my story to him I asked what alternative courses of action were open to me other than parking along the side of the road when the lot is full. Lt. Andersen told me that he's new of no alternative courses of action, that he was sorry that the lot was full, but there was no prescribed procedure for such circumstances. He was kind enough to explain the appeal procedures.

I have made a reasonable effort to abide by rules and the system has obliged me with the green weenie. The situation is sublime. F-lot'ers beware-a phantom ticketwriting machine is stalking your soul.

Whitlock's The One

To The Editor:
The 2nd Hampshire District is a two-member representative district and each party is running two candidates for the seats. Knowledgeable voters of the University community will give careful consideration to each candidate rather than voting straight ticket or automatically voting for any one of the candidates. As a supporter of Gerry Whitlock, I wish to comment briefly on his qualifications for a State Representative seat.

Whitlock is presently Chairman of the Board of Selectmen in Belchertown, and is a graduate of the University of Maine, a newly appointed Trustee of the Belchertown State School, a part-time farmer, and a local businessman. Active in local government for thirteen years, Whitlock was recently elected President of the Massachusetts League of Cities and Towns. In this capacity he served the municipalities, for example, by testifying in Boston and before Congressional committees in Washington concerning the recently passed Federal Revenue Sharing bill and other bills and matters affecting cities and towns. Overall, his position is for local home rule. This in contrast to the kind of governance which the unresponsive and fiscally irresponsible Legislature has been imposing upon us in recent years. While working for various reforms, including the graduated income tax, open space legislation, and realistic welfare reform, Whitlock has come to know and to be known in the Legislature. He would bring to this body his very considerable knowledge and experience. He would be a full-time representative, unlike many incumbents, and he would meet regularly with the town officials and students and other citizens of all seven towns in the district, unlike Second Hampshire's present representatives.

At least one of the other candidates has adopted many of Gerry Whitlock's previously announced positions, but the significant question here asks which of these men would better present and promote those positions in Boston. Whitlock's experience in local government and in Boston, as attested to by his fellow Selectman and Mayoral colleagues across the Commonwealth, makes him a man unusually well fitted to serve as our State Representative.

Gerry Whitlock will be glad to meet with interested persons on campus. He may be reached through the Whitlock for Representative office at 40 Main Street (near the Choj...ng Block), or by phone at 256-8497. All questions left there will be answered through the Collegian pages.

Editorial Points

Did anyone notice that UMass is producing its own volcano? There's something happening under the ground near the Southwest tunnel. What we need now is a name for the new volcano, and of course, to evacuate Southwest before the lava covers it up.

Sticker Question

To The Editor:

Dear Mr. Ferriter,
Upon visiting the parking office today I was given an application along with the now-commonplace statement, 'Only V-lot is available.' and 'Appeals will be heard beginning October 16th.' Unperturbed I left the office without submitting the application or the $5 fee which was to accompany it.

My curiosity is now aroused, and I invite you to explain your position to the Campus at large; perhaps thru the Collegian. Specifically, would you please answer the following questions:

Why does it cost $5 for a sticker? Certainly this is twice the cost of obtaining the stickers themselves.

Exactly what preferences are given, to whom, in establishing the parking lot assignments?

If there are "points" considered in a parking application (upper right-hand corner) what are these "points?" Do they really have any influence on lot assignments?

Will appeals be effective? in what way?

I look forward to your reply.

Like, It's Nowhere

To The Editor:
Yeah, like your Wednesday editorial like really said it all, you know. I mean, like who needs all this Rhetoric crap anyway, right. You know, like if you can't like teach, I mean, like get it all across in a year, like who needs it. Right. Like the course is a drag. I mean, its real Mickey Mouse. Like who can teach, you know, like writing anyway? And a whole year. Like that's like a long scene, right. So like let's get it out of there. I mean, like who needs it?

Estelle Answers

To The Editor:
I read Keith Loescher's letter of Oct. 4 and found that he stated very little, if anything at all. It is obvious that Mr. Loescher has been taken for the ride that I mentioned before. Mr. Loescher, the people that I mentioned in my previous letter would have you believe what you do in order to use you to reach their ultimate goal: WORLD CONTROL!

Let me straighten you out on a few things by elaborating on your letter. First, you seem to state that it is big business that is controlling the economy. Man, you are so wrong. It is the Federal Reserve that controls the economy and plans, at whim, periods of inflation or recession. It is the Federal Reserve and the international bankers who control it that planned the depression of 1929. If anyone wants to verify this information, he should read the book "None Dare Call It Conspiracy" by Gary Allen. This book exposes who is really responsible for the economic problems the world faces today.

Second, your statement on the U.S. withdrawing from the U.N. says nothing so I'll have to take it with a grain of salt. The same goes for your statement on the Red China business.

For your fourth comment, remember what I told you before, you have been duped into thinking that socialism is good by this clique I have been mentioning. The free enterprise system made this country as great as it is today. Don't forget that if it wasn't for the free enterprise system, our standard of living wouldn't be as good as it is today.

Your final paragraph convinces me that you really don't know what you are talking about. So, Mr. Loescher, read the full platform of the American Party, "None Dare Call It Conspiracy" and other related material before you go shooting off your big mouth again. I'm sorry that my first letter couldn't explain the party platform more but two pages isn't possibly enough to do so. When you read the designated material, Keith, you will understand why I have said what I did say. Then, I don't think you'll be thinking of such ridiculous rhings as "SIG HEIL".

Room Too Full?...

MEDFORD, Mass. (AP) - Spencer Lovette makes his bed, pulls a couple of ropes and ZAP!!-it turns into a fluorescent ceiling lamp shining down on his desk.

His "Magic" is the result of $20 worth of ropes, pulleys and wood assembled to give him elbow space in a 9-foot by 11-foot dormitory room at Tufts University.

"Because of my elevator bed," he says, "I even have room enough to pace flour strides."

Lovette, a native of Westbury, N.Y., is a fourth-year student in a five-year program in design and electrical engineering. He will awarded baccalaureate and master's degrees at the end of the program.

The whole idea started last spring when he discovered he had been assigned a "single" in the dorm. With the close walls in mind, he says, he began to dream up space-saving techniques.

States Face Welfare Crisis

EDITORS NOTE: The following report on welfare in New England, was researched by Associated Press newsmen in the six New England states and reported by Boston AP newsman Howard White.

Top Massachusetts officials, looking at a welfare budget that represents nearly half the state's spending, see only one way out-let the federal government pay for the whole thing.

And a Rhode Island legislator, looking at similar facts in his state, has another idea-get out from under the federal umbrella entirely, cut back programs sharply, and save money in the long run.

Along with more than $600 million in direct welfare pay-out-and a lot more federal money that pays for administration for a variety of other social services-state welfare administrators get a lot of federal guidelines and standards that dictate how the money is to be spent.

Rhode Island Sen. Thomas Wilson, D--Warwick, who heads a committee dealing with welfare administration, say there's some sentiment in his committee for simply pulling out of the federal program and going it alone.

He says he "definitely" supports such a move, though it would be initially be costly-the federal government pays at least half the cost of most state programs. But freeing the state of federal guidelines and cutting back programs could in five years save the state money, says Wilson.

Meanwhile, he'll press for "flat grant."

Rhode Island, like several other New England states, has been battling over institution of a "flat grant" for recipients of Aid to Families with Dependent Children, by far the most controversial though not always the most costly of welfare programs.

In Massachusetts, welfare recipients two years ago conducted a months-long series of demonstrations against introduction of the new system. Last year, recipients camped out on the lawn of the Connecticut Capitol for six days in a protest against a flat grant proposal that had built-in cuts of $5 per cent for AFDC recipients.

And Welfare Rights organizations in Vermont and Rhode Island vow fights against similar plans there.

Flat grant is simply a redistribution of welfare money. Without it, social workers are generally authorized to provide "special needs" payments for everything from clothing to furniture and back rent money. Flat grant eliminates all but emergency special needs, and pools the money that would be spent on it for distribution-usually quarterly-to all eligible recipients.

The result: those who have been successful in getting lots of extra money will get less, but those who haven't will get a bit more.

Welfare rights groups say their opposition to flat grant is that basic allowances are inadequate and the extras are necessary. But there is another reason for their opposition. Organized groups have built-in strength by helping their members get more money from the system.

"When Massachusetts got flat grant, the basic organizing tool was lost," says the Rev. Henry Sheltonn a Roman Catholic priest active in Rhode Island welfare advocacy.

The move to flat grant is a state-by-state move, and some see it as a step toward eventual federal institution of a guaranteed minimum income plan. But before that happens, states will be moving in at least two other areas dictated by federal regulations: more stringent work-training rules and a separation of the money side of welfare from the social service side.

A recent amendment to federal law, the so-called Talmadge amendment, requires that recipients of Aid to Families with Dependent Children register for "manpower services, training and employment."

Yet the Massachusetts Public Welfare Department says it will be "difficult to assess" the benefits of the program, noting that there will be no increase in the 5,800 training slots even though the number of recipients required to register for them will increase fivefold.

The new program builds on the Work Incentive WIN program which states have been required to institute for several years. It has not made a marked dent in welfare rolls, say officials.

"WIN means working mothers," says Gerard Zeiller, commissioner of New Hampshire's Department of Health and Welfare. "Out of our 5,000 AFDC mothers, about 1,200 are already working full or part time.

Every Woman's Center Opens At Munson

Everywoman's Center has opened at UMass to serve all women in the University and the community surrounding it.

Located on the main floor of Munson Hall, it is a joint project of the UMass Division of Continuing Education, the Office of Community Development and Human Relations and the Counseling Center, with support coming from a variety of other UMass sources.

"Everywoman's Center exists to enable every woman to have ready access to all forms of learning, to enter a community of support and encouragement, to find meaningful work, to challenge social structures, cultural attitudes and laws which perpetuate sexism and all such forms of human inequality, to break out of limiting self-concepts and to be a whole person," according to a staff statement of purpose.

In less formal terms, a staff member defined it as "a place where women can get information on going back to school, womens' issues or anything else they need, where they can work on projects, where they can meet other women, and where they can relax, have coffee and generally do what they wish to in place of their own."

Heading the center's educational programs is Pat Sackrey, director of continuing education for women in the UMass Division of Continuing Education. A founder and former staff member of the Valley Women's Center, she will develop programs to open the University more fully to part-time women students and to enable women generally to continue their education at all levels.

Ms. Sackrey will direct a new set of the Project SELF workshops begun for women by the Division of Continuing Education and the Valley Women's Center last year. Seventeen workshops will be presented this year beginning the week of Oct. 23. A complete schedule will be available at a coffee hour Oct. 17 at 7:30 p.m. in Memorial Hall at the UMass campus.

Two women from the UMass Counseling Center, Joan Hemmer and Sara Wolff, direct the Everywoman's Center counseling component. Its emphasis is on short-term individual counseling, group counseling, workshops and referrals. Norma Gluckstern of the Office of Community Development and Human Relations directs a series of workshops and other projects designed to make women aware of themselves as women and as women in the world of work.

Everywoman's Center also has a small library of books and leaflets relating to women and publishes a newsletter on numerous aspects of women's lives. Its facilities are open to all women and its telephone is 545-0883.

Sylvan Opens Women Center

By MARIA McNAMARA

"An American woman no longer has a private image to tell her who she is, or can be or wants to be...American women no longer know who they are." So says Betty Freidan author of "The Feminine Mystique". The people at Sylvan's new Women's Center agree.

What is the purpose of a Women's Center? Contrary to popular belief, it is not an organization of male haters, nor a plot to do away with all that is traditionally feminine. Rather, it is an attempt to educate and council women of the University in the problems they will face as women.

The Center, supported by the Cultural Enrichment Fund, will offer a library of helpful "women's" literature, guest speakers, councilling, or just the chance to talk with others and exchange ideas and information.

Sylvan Area Women's Center invites all University women to find out who they are, or can be or want to be. To volunteer contact Sue Tracy in 02 Cashin.

Welfare rights groups say their opposition to flat grant is that basic allowances are inadequate and the extras are necessary. But there is another reason for their opposition. Organized groups have built-in strength by helping their members get more money from the system.

"When Massachusetts got flat grant, the basic organizing tool was lost," says the Rev. Henry Sheltonn a Roman Catholic priest active in Rhode Island welfare advocacy.

The move to flat grant is a state-by-state move, and some see it as a step toward eventual federal institution of a guaranteed minimum income plan. But before that happens, states will be moving in at least two other areas dictated by federal regulations: more stringent work-training rules and a separation of the money side of welfare from the social service side.

A recent amendment to federal law, the so-called Talmadge amendment, requires that recipients of Aid to Families with Dependent Children register for "manpower services, training and employment."

Yet the Massachusetts Public Welfare Department says it will be "difficult to assess" the benefits of the program, noting that there will be no increase in the 5,800 training slots even though the number of recipients required to register for them will increase fivefold.

The new program builds on the Work Incentive WIN program which states have been required to institute for several years. It has not made a marked dent in welfare rolls, say officials.

"WIN means working mothers," says Gerard Zeiller, commissioner of New Hampshire's Department of Health and Welfare. "Out of our 5,000 AFDC mothers, about 1,200 are already working full or part time.

Every Woman's Center Opens At Munson

Everywoman's Center has opened at UMass to serve all women in the University and the community surrounding it.

Located on the main floor of Munson Hall, it is a joint project of the UMass Division of Continuing Education, the Office of Community Development and Human Relations and the Counseling Center, with support coming from a variety of other UMass sources.

"Everywoman's Center exists to enable every woman to have ready access to all forms of learning, to enter a community of support and encouragement, to find meaningful work, to challenge social structures, cultural attitudes and laws which perpetuate sexism and all such forms of human inequality, to break out of limiting self-concepts and to be a whole person," according to a staff statement of purpose.

In less formal terms, a staff member defined it as "a place where women can get information on going back to school, womens' issues or anything else they need, where they can work on projects, where they can meet other women, and where they can relax, have coffee and generally do what they wish to in place of their own."

Heading the center's educational programs is Pat Sackrey, director of continuing education for women in the UMass Division of Continuing Education. A founder and former staff member of the Valley Women's Center, she will develop programs to open the University more fully to part-time women students and to enable women generally to continue their education at all levels.

Ms. Sackrey will direct a new set of the Project SELF workshops begun for women by the Division of Continuing Education and the Valley Women's Center last year. Seventeen workshops will be presented this year beginning the week of Oct. 23. A complete schedule will be available at a coffee hour Oct. 17 at 7:30 p.m. in Memorial Hall at the UMass campus.

Two women from the UMass Counseling Center, Joan Hemmer and Sara Wolff, direct the Everywoman's Center counseling component. Its emphasis is on short-term individual counseling, group counseling, workshops and referrals. Norma Gluckstern of the Office of Community Development and Human Relations directs a series of workshops and other projects designed to make women aware of themselves as women and as women in the world of work.

Everywoman's Center also has a small library of books and leaflets relating to women and publishes a newsletter on numerous aspects of women's lives. Its facilities are open to all women and its telephone is 545-0883.

Sylvan Opens Women Center

By MARIA McNAMARA

"An American woman no longer has a private image to tell her who she is, or can be or wants to be. ..American women no longer know who they are." So says Betty Freidan author of "The Feminine Mystique". The people at Sylvan's new Women's Center agree.

What is the purpose of a Women's Center? Contrary to popular belief, it is not an organization of male haters, nor a plot to do away with all that is traditionally feminine. Rather, it is an attempt to educate and council women of the University in the problems they will face as women.

The Center, supported by the Cultural Enrichment Fund, will offer a library of helpful "women's" literature, guest speakers, councilling, or just the chance to talk with others and exchange ideas and information.

Sylvan Area Women's Center invites all University women to find out who they are, or can be or want to be. To volunteer contact Sue Tracy in 02 Cashin.

CIA Paying Thais To Fight In Laos

LNS Note: The Indochina war is increasingly becoming a process of troop shifting -- for example, while U.S. troops are being withdrawn from Vietnam, the U.S. is building up its forces in Thailand. U.S. troop levels in Thailand now surpass those in Vietnam having reached a high of 49,000.

Recent Senate hearings reveal that Thailand, with support and funding from the CIA, has in turn been training troops to fight assmercenaries in neithboring Laos, where Pathet Lao guerrillas now control most of the country.

The U.S. has paid approximately $100 million a year for the last several years to support Thai troops in Laos. The Thia government, however, has consistently refused to acknowledge that the troops are there. There are now about 8000 Thai troops in Laos.

The Thai soldiers are encouraged by poor conditions at home, and the promise of more money than they could possibly get doing other kinds of work, to join the Laos training programs.)

NAM PHONG, Thailand (LNS) - "There is very little rain this year and few of our family's fields will be able to yield rice," said one. "I won't be needed to plant or harvest, and somehow we must get some money. I could have gone to Bangkok to work in construction, but opportunities there are not as great as a few years ago. So when I saw the announcement requesting people to fight in Laos at 1500 Baht ($75) a month, I came."

These are the words of Somsak, an 18 year old farm boy from Roi-Et province in northeast Thailand. He and about 10 friends came to the U.S. military base at Nam Phong in the northeast province of Khon Kaen on August 14th this summer. They made up small part of the 5,000 to 6,000 Thai men, from 18 to 30, who came from almost every Thai province to answer a call for "volunteers" to get combat training leading to a year's fighting in Laos. The training, clothing, arming, and pay of Somsak and his friends is financed by the CIA.

Typically, the number of volunteers for the August 14th group exceed original manpower goals: 4,000 were taken, 1,500 more than specified. The group preceding Somsak's had 3,000, twice its target size of 4,500 men.

Somsak will be trained by U.S. Special Forces and regular Thia officers for two and a half months after which he will be permitted to return home for a visit before going to Laos. He will serve a full year in combat, but visit home again for a short time after six months have elapsed. During training and combat, Somsak will be placed in a basic unit of 25 men, of whom 2 have had previous military experience. These men, categorized as 'gong nun,' or reserve unit, are also volunteers but usually help in the training of those with no combat experience called 'gong gun.'

Some of the Thai troops have already had experience fighting guerrillas in the Thailand's northeast. Tribesmen of the Meo ethnic minority in that area have been waging a well-armed struggle directed largely against large-scale land grabs by Thai and foreign corporate interests.

According to Boonchu, a 'gong nun' from Petchabun province with experience fightint the Meo insurgents, training for combat in Laos differs from regular army trining only in that Laos training places a bit more emphasis on guerrilla tactics. Boonchu finds it natural that neither regular army nor Laos training includes any concrete political discussion concerning the location in which the soldier will fight. In regular training there is some mention of the Thai monarchy, Buddhism, the general evils, of communism, and Thai law, but local conditions are ignored. At Nam Phong, during Laos training even such general considerations are lacking, except for the usual talk of communist threat. A U.S. Special Forces instructor here at Nam Phong explained that discussion of who was fighting for what would impede the formation of an efficient fighting force. Such efficiency, instead, is assumedly assured by the important role played by U.S. advisors in training volunteers. In both regular Thai army and Laos training, field manuals are Thai translations and adaptations of U.S. materials.

When Somsak, Boochu and others were asked if they knew what they were fighting for, they had no qualms about talking in terms of money. Boonchu thinks of himself as simply being hired to do a job. Nor do any of those interviewed have any illusions about the source of their pay: they know it is the U.S. but wonder, in a mixture of resentment and envy, how much high Thai military officials receive for their role.

It is not hard to see why volunteering for combat in Laos is an attractive proposition for a Thai villager, especially the northeasterners who seem to make up a large proportion of the volunteers. Annual per capita income in the northeast is about 1,000 Baht ($50), half the national average and the gap is not closing. If, by chance, a peasant gets enough education to pass government civil service exams, it would take him 20 years to reach 2nd class status and the 15000 Baht a month he gets by killing in Laos. (This doesn't include the large sums provided death.)

Young men are willing to leave their villages for financial reasons since farming is increasingly seen as a dead end. In spite of because of numerous and broad regional development plans supported and often formulated by the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID), the share of the northeast Gross Regional Product attributable to agriculture declined from 57.8% in 1960 to 45.9% in 1969. This might be acceptable if industry developed, but during the same period manufacturing's share of the northeast's Gross Regional Product went from 7.1% to 6.4%. in the northeast as a whole, part of the slack has been taken up by service industries centered around U.S. air bases.

The fact that the volunteers, or "tiger hunters" as they are called, are in the thing for the money is well known in areas surrounding the base where the soldiers go to relax. One Chinese woman whose store is frequented by the volunteers described them as "selling their lives." She acknowledged that her own business was doing well because of them since, in her own words, "one sale brings another."

This type of acceptance is common among those who profit from the volunteers' presence, just as it is among those making money from U.S. airmen. Yet among the general populace there is a definite dislike of the volunteers, partly based on the knowledge that they are mercenaries, and partly due to the continual drunkenness and fighting whenever a group comes into town.

Know Their Names?

By TONY GRANITE

WHAT'S IN A NAME? Well, now, when it's your own favorite prof's, it could be mind-blowing, as revealed in a letter to the editor of the Louisiana State Daily Reveille.

A coed classmate in his astronomy class "asked a question that nearly blew my mind," he wrote.

"The young lady started her question: 'Mr. Uh, I don't even know your name' and then continued to ask her question on the material being discussed. The class laughed and the professor appeared slightly stunned but he proceeded to answer the question.

"After six weeks of school and listening to the same man lecture, an incident like this makes you wonder where some people's heads are.

"Is the problem an impersonal school system or is it the neglect of students to care about who is feeding the facts to their supposedly well-trained college minds?

"Is the instructor really a doctor of astronomy or Flash Gordon in disguise? Who really gives a damn?"

GOOD THINGS COME IN SMALL PACKAGES. So now colleges all over the land are taking this adage to heart and are limiting majors, of all things. Like the State University of New York at Buffalo, for example. Their Spectrum notes in a front page blurb that new majors in the School of Social Policy and Community Services will be limited to 30 new majors this Fall.

Reason given is "the primary responsibility to provide a quality program" With 210 already enrolled and facilities available for 250 undergraduates, the limitation was exercised, the Dean said, "to slow down the machinery a bit in order to do a total review."

About 170 were graduated from the School in 1972.

Meanwhile, Brigham Young U. has been cutting back on its education majors by 25 per cent. According to a banner headline in The Universe, the cut was made because Utah's public teacher training institutions are producing five times more teachers than the state's 40 school districts can absorb. BYU is the largest produce of teachers in the state.

The BYU cut complies with a request of the state Board of Education which said that "Except for teacher turnover, there are no new jobs being generated in the state's public schools."

Rugby Tournament Here

By PERRY WHITE, Jr.

If your spending the long weekend in the valley, you might want to take in a Rugby game for a change of pace. Bring your friend, a blanket, some beer down to the Rugby field either Saturday or Sunday, and take a look see.

The UMass Rugby Club is playing host to seven other Rugby clubs, Amherst, U.N.H., Williams, U.R.I., M.I.T., Holy Cross, and UConn. There will be ten games played on Saturday Oct. 7th, beginning around 11:00 a.m. Later that night in Worcester Dining Commons there will be free suds and a live band to which all girls are invited. Come drink and dance the night away.

The UMass Rugby Club started its season two weeks ago, and has lost both contests, one to Fairfield U. and the other to the Boston Pilgrims. The club is comprised of various sorts of players including grad students, faculty, and freshmen. The club is open to anyone wishing to play rugby, so if your interested in playing Rugby or just watching a game, come down to the Rugby field this Saturday or Sunday. We need a little support.

Rowing

By FRANK ANTOSIEWICZ

The Merrimack River awaits the Crew team this Sunday, as they compete in the Lowell Tech Fall Festival Regatta.

An experienced crew returns this year, since only three have graduated from last year's squad. The major problem facing them will be the lack of practice time. So far, there have been only twelve practices this semester.

Coach Mike Vespoli is using this race as a warm-up for the Head of the Charles Regatta in two weeks. He is more concerned with how each individual rows in the competitive situation than the shell finishing first. The technique will be the major matter of importance in this tune up for the Charles. To emphasize this, Coach Vespoli has refrained from setting the line-ups for the two eight-man-with-coaxswain shells. This will be done randomly Sunday morning. Therefore, the concentration will be on individual performance.

The two eights will row in the same race at 5:15 in the evening. Also, sophomore Paul Gowan is slated to race in the middleweight singles (limited to oarsmen under 180 lbs.) at 1:30, and Al Flanders and Billy Moran were scheduled to compete in the pair without a coaxswain at 12:30.

Jayvee Booters Play Worcester Poly

By GEOFFREY KURINSKY

The JV soccer squad plays its second game of the season Saturday morning when they meet Worcester Polytech at 11 AM on soccer field #2.

The booters are coming off a strong performance and a victory over Holyoke Community College last Friday 1-0. In that game the Minutemen put it all together as they dominated the action throughout the contest.

The offense should be strengthened Saturday with the return of a healthy Dave Penza. Penza was impressive in scrimmages against Amherst and the Grad-Fac teams but was injured in practice prior to HCC game. He's a big plus for the number 1 line.

With Penza's return, Coach Berryman will probably go with a first line of Fitzgerald or Belcher on left wing, Penza and Lieberman in the middle, and Polano or Boyle on right wing. On paper, this line has to be considered an enormous offensive threat to any opponent.

The calling up of starting goalie Barry Luchen to the varsity, puts the net-minding chores on the shoulders of Sophomore Paul Peloquin. Luchen was called up as a result of an illness to varsity goalie John Kiah, who will be out from three to four weeks with mononucleosis. Backing up Peloquin will be freshman Tom Fenton. Besides Penza and Lucien, the starting lineup will be about the same for Saturday's game.

Worcester Polytech should give the Minutemen a run for their money, as they usually manage to pick up considerable talent from high schools in the Worcester area, but if this JV squad of ours can play as well as they did last week, they will be hard, if not impossible to beat.
